BATTLEFIELD OF PLATAFA	„

INTRODUCTION

THE following is a brief analysis of the contents of Books VIII and IX, based on the summary in Stein's edition :—

BOOK VIII

Ch. 1-5. The Greek fleet at Artemisium ; question of supreme command ; bribery of Themistocles by the Euboeans.

Ch. 6-14. Despatch of a Persian squadron to sail round Euboea, and its destruction by a storm. Effect of the storm on the rest of the Persian fleet ; first encounter between the two fleets.

Ch. 15-17. Second battle off Artemisium.

Ch. 18-23. Retreat of the Greeks ; Themistocles' attempt to tamper with the Ionians ; Persian occupation of Euboea.

Ch. 24-33. Visit of Persian sailors to the field of Thermopylae. Olympic festival (26). Feuds of Thessalians and Phocians ; Persian advance through Phocis (27-33).

Ch. 34-39. Persian march through Boeotia, and unsuccessful attempt upon Delphi.

Ch. 40-48. Abandonment of Attica by the Athenians ; the Greek fleet at Salamis.

Ch. 49-55. Greek council of war ; Persian invasion of Attica and occupation of Athens.

Ch. 56-61. Greek design to withdraw the fleet to the Isthmus of Corinth. Decision to remain at Salamis, by Themistocles' advice.

Ch. 65. Dicæus' vision near Eleusis.

Ch. 66-69. Persian fleet at Phalerum; advice given by Artemisia in a council of war.

Ch. 70-73. Greek fortification of the Isthmus.

pel them; his message to Xerxes, and Persian movement to encircle the Greeks. Announcement of this by Aristides.

Ch. 83-96. Battle of Salamis.

Ch. 97-99. Xerxes' intention to retreat; news at Susa of the capture of Athens and the battle of Salamis.

Ch. 100-102. Advice given to Xerxes by Mardonius and Artemisia.

Ch. 103-106. Story of the revenge of Hermotimus.

Ch. 107-110. Flight of Persian fleet, and Greek pursuit as far as Andros; Themistocles' message to Xerxes.

Ch. 111, 112. Siege of Andros, and demands made by Themistocles on various islands.

Ch. 113. Mardonius' selection of his army.

Ch. 114-120. Incidents in Xerxes' retreat.

Ch. 121-125. Greek division of spoil and assignment of honours; Themistocles' reception at Sparta.

Ch. 126-129. Artabazus' capture of Olynthus and siege of Potidaea, during the winter.

Ch. 130-132. Greek and Persian fleets at Aegina and Samos respectively (spring of 479). Leutychides' command. Message to the Greeks from the Ionians.

INTRODUCTION

Ch. 133-135. Mardonius' consultation of Greek oracles.

Ch. 136-139. Mission to Athens of Alexander of Macedonia; origin of his dynasty.

Ch. 140-141. Speeches at Athens of Alexander and the Spartan envoys; Athenian answer to both.

BOOK IX

Ch. 1-5. Mardonius in Attica; his fresh proposals to the Athenians.

Ch. 6-11. Hesitation of the Spartans to send troops; appeals made by the Athenians; eventual despatch of a force.

Ch. 12-15. Argive warning to Mardonius; his march to Megara and withdrawal thence to Bocotia.

Ch. 16-18. Story of a banquet at Thebes, and Mardonius' test of a Phocian contingent.

Ch. 19-25. The Greeks at Erythrae; repulse of Persian cavalry attack, and death of its leader; Greek change of position.

Ch. 26-27. Rival claim of Tegeans and Athenians for the post of honour.

Ch. 28-32. Battle array of Greek and Persian armies.

Ch. 33-37. Stories of the diviners in the two armies.

Ch. 38-43. Persian attack on a Greek convoy; Mardonius' council of war and determination to fight.

Ch. 44-51. Alexander's warning to the Athenians; attempted change of Greek and Persian formation; Mardonius' challenge to the Spartans, and retreat of Greeks to a new position.

Ch. 52-57. Flight of the Greek centre; Amompharetus' refusal to change his ground.

Ch. 58-65. Battle of Plataea; initial success of Spartans and Tegeans.

Ch. 66-69. Flight of Artabazus; Athenian success against the Boeotians; disaster to part of the Greek army.

Ch. 70-75. Assault and capture of the Persian fortified camp. Distinctions of various Greek fighters.

Ch. 76-79. Pausanias' reception of the Coan female suppliant; the Mantineans and Eleans after the battle; Lampon's proposal to Pausanias and his reply.

Ch. 80-85. Greek division of the spoil and burial of the dead.

Ch. 86-89. Siege of Thebes and punishment of Theban leaders; retreat of Artabazus.

Ch. 90-95. Envoys from Samos with the Greek fleet. Story of the diviner Euenius.

Ch. 96-105. Movements preliminary to the battle of Mycale, and Greek victory there.

Ch. 106, 107. Greek deliberation at Samos; quarrel between Persian leaders.

Ch. 108-113. Story of Xerxes' adultery and cruelty, and the fate of his brother Masistes.

Ch. 114-121. Capture of Sestus by the Greeks; sacrilege of Artayctes, and his execution.

Ch. 122. Cyrus' advice to the Persians to prefer hardship to comfort.

In the eighth and ninth books the central subjects are the battles of Salamis and Plataea respectively. Herodotus describes the preliminaries of Salamis, and both the operations prior to Plataea and the actual battle, with much detail; and his narrative has given rise to a good deal of controversy. Sometimes it is difficult to reconcile his story with the facts of geography. Sometimes, it is alleged, he is contradicted by the only other real authority for the sea fight at Salamis, Aeschylus. More often, he is said to sin against the laws of probability. He makes generals and armies do things which are surprising; and this is alleged to detract from his credit; for a historian, who allows generals and armies to disregard known rules of war, is plainly suspect, and at best the dupe of camp gossip, if not animated by partiality or even malice.

INTRODUCTION

As to the battle of Salamis, a mere translator has no desire to add greatly to the literature of controversy. But it is worth while to review Herodotus' account. On the day before the battle, the Persian fleet, apparently, lay along the coast of Attica, its eastern wing being near Munychia; the Greeks being at Salamis, opposite to and rather less than a mile distant from Xerxes' ships. During the night, Persian ships were detached to close the two entrances of the straits between the mainland and Salamis. At dawn of the following day, the Greeks rowed out and made a frontal attack on the Persians facing them.

This account is questioned by the learned, mainly on two grounds; firstly, because (it is alleged) the Persians, if they originally lay along the Attic coast, could not have closed the two entrances of the straits without the knowledge of the Greeks; secondly, because Herodotus' narrative differs from that given by Aeschylus, in the Persae, a play produced only eight years after the battle. As to the first objection, the Persian manoeuvre was executed in darkness, and by small vessels, not modern battleships: it is surely not incredible that the Greeks should have been unaware of its full execution. As to the second ground of criticism,—that Herodotus and Aeschylus do not agree, and that Aeschylus must be held the better authority,—it still remains to be shown in what the alleged discrepancy consists. It is a fact which appears to escape the observation of the learned that Aeschylus is writing a poetic drama, and not a despatch. His manner of telling the story certainly differs from that of Herodotus; but the facts which he relates appear to be the same: and in all humility I cannot but suggest that if commentators would re-read their Herodotus and their Aeschylus in parallel columns, without (if this be not too much to ask) an a priori desire to catch Herodotus tripping, some of them, at least, would eventually be able to reconcile the historian with the tragedian. For Aeschylus nowhere contradicts what is apparently the view of Herodotus,—that the Persians, or their main body, lay along the Attic coast opposite Salamis when the Greeks sailed out to attack them. Messrs. How and Wells (quos honoris causa nomino) say that this was probably not so, because, according to Aeschylus, “some time” elapsed before the Persians could see the Greek advance, and the strait is only one thousand five hundred yards wide. But as a matter of fact, Aeschylus does not say that some time elapsed. His expression is θοῶς δὲ πάντες ἤσαν ἐκφανεῖς ἰδεῖν—“quickly they were all plain to view.”

INTRODUCTION

Herodotus' narrative of the manœuvres of Mardonius' and Pausanias' armies near Plataea is, like most descriptions of battles, not always very clear. It is full of detail; but as some of the localities mentioned cannot be quite certainly identified, the details are not always easy to understand; and it must be confessed that there are gaps in the story. For instance, we must presume (though meritorious efforts are made to explain the statement away) that Herodotus means what he says when he asserts in Ch. 15 that Mardonius' army occupied the ground "from Erythrae past Hysiae"; the Persians, therefore, were then on the right bank of the Asopus; yet soon afterwards they are, according to the historian's equally plain statement, on the left bank. Hence there are real obscurities; and the narrative is not without picturesque and perhaps rather surprising incidents; which some commentators (being rather like M. About's gendarme, persons whose business it is to see that nothing unusual happens in the locality) promptly dismiss as "camp gossip." Altogether, what with obscurity and camp gossip, scholars have given themselves a fairly free hand to reconstruct the operations before Plataea as they must have happened—unless indeed "someone had blundered," an hypothesis which, apparently, ought only to be accepted in the very last resort, and hardly then if its acceptance implies Herodotus' veracity. Reconstruction of history is an amusing game, and has its uses, especially in places of education, where it is played with distinguished success; yet one may still doubt whether rejection of what after all is our only real authority brings the public any nearer to knowing what did actually happen. Strategists and tacticians do make mistakes; thus, generally, are battles lost and won; and unreasonable incidents do occur. However, it is fair to say that most of the reconstruction of Salamis and Plataea was done before August, 1914.

But here, as elsewhere in his history, Herodotus' authority is much impaired by the presumption, popular since Plutarch, of a pro-Athenian bias which leads him to falsify history by exaggerating the merit of Athens at the expense of other states, especially Sparta. Now we may readily believe that if Herodotus lived for some time at Athens, he was willing enough to do ample justice to her achievements; but if he is to be charged with undue and unjust partiality, and consequent falsification, then it must be shown that the conduct which he attributes to Athens and to Sparta is somehow not consistent with what one would naturally expect, from the circumstances of the case, and from what we know, alimnde, about those two states. Scholars who criticise Herodotus on grounds of probability ought to be guided by their own canon. If a historian is to be discredited where his narrative does not accord with what is antecedently probable, then he must be allowed to gain credit where antecedent probability is on his side; and there is nothing in Herodotus' account of Athenian and Spartan actions during the campaigns of 480 and 479 which disagrees with the known character of either people. Pace the socialistic conception of an unrelieved similarity among all states and individuals, the Athenians of the fifth century, B.C., were an exceptional people; their record is not precisely the record of Boeotia or Arcadia; it seems fair to say, without appealing to Herodotus' testimony, that they were more gifted, and more enterprising, than most. The spirit of the Hellenic world is general,—intense local patriotism, intense fear and hatred of Oriental absolutism and strange worships,—was more alive among the Athenians, probably, than in any other Greek state. Sparta also had her share of these qualities; she too would make no terms with the Persian; only her methods of resistance were different. Primarily, each state was interested in its own safety. To Spartans—disinclined to methods other than traditional, and as yet unaccustomed to naval warfare—it seemed that Sparta could be best defended by blocking the land access to the Peloponnese; they would defend the Isthmus successfully, as they had tried and failed to defend Thermopylae. This meant, of course, the sacrifice of Attica; and naturally that was a sacrifice not to be made willingly by Athenians. Their only chance of saving or recovering Attica lay in fighting a naval action close to its coasts; nay, the abandonment of Salamis meant the exposure of their dependents to fresh dangers; therefore, they pressed for the policy of meeting and defeating the Persian where he lay by the Attic coast. This policy was to prove successful; and thereby, the Athenians incidentally accomplished what was undoubtedly also their object, the salvation of Hellas; but the primary purpose of both Sparta and Athens, both before Salamis and before Plataea (when the Athenians were naturally displeased by a plan which left Attica a prey to the enemy) was undoubtedly to do the best they could for themselves.

INTRODUCTION

"Athenian bias" is one which is bound to appeal to readers who are laudably afraid of being led away by hero-worship; but it has one fault—it lacks evidence.

With the crowning victory of Mycale, where for the first time a Persian army was defeated by a Greek within the boundaries of the Persian empire, the history of the war comes to an end. But the chapters which conclude Book IX are no anticlimax; they are congruous with the whole, part and parcel of the narrative, and as striking an example of Herodotus' supreme art as any passage in his history. What was it after all (a reader might be supposed to ask) that nerved most of the Greeks to resist Darius' and Xerxes' powerful armaments? The answer is plain; it was fear of the caprice and cruelty of Oriental despots, and desire to protect Greek temples from sacrilege. These concluding chapters illustrate and justify the Greek temper. The methods of Persian absolutism are vividly portrayed in the gruesome story of Xerxes' love and Masistes' death; and the crucified body of Artayctes, the defiler of temples, hangs by the Hellespontian shore, overlooking the scene of Xerxes' proudest achievement and display, as a warning to all sacrilegious invaders; so perish all who lay impious hands on the religion of Hellas! . . . The story is now complete. The play is played; and in the last chapter of the book, Cyrus the great protagonist of the drama is called before the curtain to speak its epilogue.

BOOK VIII

1. THE Greeks appointed to serve in the fleet were these: the Athenians furnished a hundred and twenty-seven ships; the Plataeans manned these ships with the Athenians, not that they had any knowledge of seamanship, but of mere valour and zeal. The Corinthians furnished forty ships, and the Megarians twenty; and the Chalcidians manned twenty, the Athenians furnishing the ships; the Aeginetans eighteen, the Sicyonians twelve, the Lacedaemonians ten, the Epidaurians eight, the Eretrians seven, the Troezenians five, the Styrians two, and the Ceans two, and two fifty-oared barks; and the Opuntian Locrians brought seven fifty-oared barks to their aid.

2. These were they who came to Artemisium for battle; and I have now shown how they severally furnished the whole sum. The number of ships that mustered at Artemisium was two hundred and seventy one, besides the fifty-oared barks. But the admiral who had the chief command was of the Spartans' providing, Euryliades, son of Euryclides; for the allies said, that if the Laconian were not their leader they would rather make an end of the fleet that was preparing than be led by the Athenians.

3. For in the first days, before the sending to Sicily for alliance there, there had been talk of entrusting the command at sea to the Athenians. But when the allies withstood this, the Athenians waived their claim, deeming the safety of Hellas of prime moment, and seeing that if they quarrelled over the leadership Hellas must perish; wherein they judged rightly; for civil strife is as much worse than united war as war is worse than peace. Knowing that, they gave ground and waived their claim, but only so long as they had great need of the others, as was shown; for when they had driven the Persian back and the battle was no longer for their territory but for his, they made a pretext of Pausanias' highhandedness and took the command away from the Lacedaemonians. But all that befel later.¹

4. But now, the Greeks who had at last come to Artemisium saw a multitude of ships launched at Aphetae, and armaments everywhere, and contrary to all expectation the foreigner was shown to be in far other case than they had supposed; wherefore they lost heart and began to take counsel for flight from Artemisium homewards into Hellas. Then the Euboeans, seeing them to be thus planning, entreated Eurybiades to wait a little while, till they themselves should have brought away their children and households. But when they could not prevail with him, they essayed another way, and gave Themistocles, the Athenian admiral, a bribe of thirty talents on the condition that the Greek fleet should remain there and fight, when they fought, to defend Euboea.

5. This was the way whereby Themistocles made the Greeks to stay where they were: he gave Eurybiades for his share five talents of that money, as though it were of his own that he gave it. Eurybiades being thus won over, none of the rest was of a resisting temper save only Adimantus, son of Ocytus, the Corinthian admiral, who said that he would not remain but sail away from Artemisium; to him said Themistocles, adding an oath thereto: "Nay, you of all men will not desert us; for I will give you a greater gift than the king of the Medes would send you for deserting your allies"; and with that saying he sent withal three talents of silver to Adimantus' ship. So these two were won over by gifts, the Euboeans got their desire, and Themistocles himself was the gainer; he kept the rest of the money, none knowing, but they that had received a part of it supposing that it had been sent for that intent by the Athenians.

6. So the Greeks abode off Euboea and there fought; and it came about as I shall show. Having arrived at Aphetae in the early part of the afternoon, the foreigners saw for themselves the few Greek ships that they had already heard were stationed off Artemisium, and they were eager to attack, that so they might take them. Now they were not yet minded to make an onfall front to front, for fear lest the Greeks should see them coming and take to flight, and night close upon them as they fled; it was their belief that the Greeks would save themselves by flight, and by the Persian purpose not so much as a firebearer¹ of them must be saved alive.

7. Wherefore this was the plan that they devised. Separating two hundred ships from the whole number, they sent them to cruise outside Sciathus (that so the enemies might not see them sailing round Euboea) and by way of Caphereus round Geraestus to the Euripus, so that they might catch the Greeks between them, the one part holding that course and barring the retreat, and they themselves attacking in front. Thus planning, they sent the appointed ships on their way, purposing for themselves to make no attack upon the Greeks that day, nor before the signal should be seen whereby the ships that sailed round were to declare their coming. So they sent those ships to sail round, and set about numbering the rest at Aphetae.

8. Now at the time of their numbering the ships, there was in the fleet one Scyllias, a man of Scione; he was the best diver of the time, and in the shipwreck at Pelion he had saved for the Persians much of their possessions and won much withal for himself; this Scyllias had ere now, it would seem, purposed to desert to the Greeks, but he never had had so fair an occasion as now. By what means he did thereafter at last make his way to the Greeks, I cannot with exactness say; but if the story be true it is marvellous indeed; for it is said that he dived into the sea at Aphetae and never rose above it till he came to Artemisium, thus passing underneath the sea for about eighty furlongs.

There are many tales of this man, some like lies and some true; but as concerning the present business it is my opinion, which I hereby declare, that he came to Artemisium in a boat. Having then come, he straightway told the admirals the story of the shipwreck, and of the ships that had been sent round Eubœa.

9. Hearing that, the Greeks took counsel together; there was much speaking, but the opinion prevailed that they should abide and encamp where they were for that day, and thereafter when it should be past midnight put to sea and meet the ships that were sailing round. But presently, none attacking them, they waited for the late afternoon of the day and themselves advanced their ships against the foreigner, desiring to put to the proof his fashion of fighting and the art of breaking the line.¹

10. When Xerxes' men and their generals saw the Greeks bearing down on them with but a few ships, they deemed them assuredly mad, and themselves put out to sea, thinking to win an easy victory; which expectation was very reasonable, as they saw the Greek ships so few, and their own many times more numerous and more seaworthy. With this assurance, they hemmed in the Greeks in their midst. Now as many Ionians as were friendly to the Greeks came unwillingly to the war, and were sore distressed to see the Greeks surrounded, supposing that not one of them would return home; so powerless did the Greeks seem to them to be. But those who were glad of the business vied each with each that he might be the first to take an Attic ship and receive gifts from the king; for it was the Athenians of whom there was most talk in the fleet.

11. But the Greeks, when the signal was given them, first drew the sterns of their ships together, their prows turned towards the foreigners; then at the second signal they put their hands to the work, albeit they were hemmed in within a narrow space and fought front to front. There they took thirty of the foreigners' ships and the brother of Gorgus king of Salamis withal, even Philaon son of Chersis, a man of note in the fleet. The first Greek to take an enemy ship was an Athenian, Lycomedes, son of Aeschraeus, and he it was who received the prize for valour. They fought that seafight with doubtful issue, and nightfall ended the battle; the Greeks sailed back to Artemisium, and the foreigners to Aphetae, after faring far below their hopes in the fight. In that battle Antidorus of Lemnos deserted to the Greeks, alone of all the Greeks that were with the king; and for that the Athenians gave him lands in Salamis.

12. When darkness came on, the season being then midsummer, there was abundance of rain all through the night and violent thunderings from Pelion; and the dead and the wrecks were driven towards Aphetae, where they were entangled with the ships' prows and fouled the blades of the oars. The ships' companies that were there were dismayed by the noise of this, and looked in their present evil case for utter destruction; for before they were recovered after the shipwreck and the storm off Pelion, they next must abide a stubborn sea-fight, and after the sea-fight rushing rain and mighty torrents pouring seaward and violent thunderings.

13. Thus did the night deal with them; but to those that were appointed to sail round Euboea that same night was much crueller yet, inasmuch as it caught them on the open sea; and an evil end they had. For the storm and the rain coming on them in their course off the Hollows of Euboea, they were driven by the wind they knew not whither, and were cast upon the rocks. All this was the work of heaven's providence, that so the Persian power might be more equally matched with the Greek, and not much greater than it.

14. So these perished at the Hollows of Euboea. But the foreigners at Aphetæ, when to their great comfort the day dawned, kept their ships unmoved, being in their evil plight well content to do nothing for the nonce; and fifty-three Attic ships came to aid the Greeks, who were heartened by the ships' coming and the news brought withal that the foreigners sailing round Euboea had all perished in the late storm. They waited then for the same hour as before, and putting to sea fell upon certain Cilician ships; which having destroyed, when darkness came on, they returned back to Artemisium.

15. But on the third day, the foreign admirals, ill brooking that so few ships should do them hurt, and fearing Xerxes' anger, waited no longer for the Greeks to begin the fight, but gave the word and put out to sea about midday. And it so fell out that these sea-battles were fought through the same days as the land-battles at Thermopylae; the seamen's whole endeavour was to hold the Euripus, as Leonidas' men strove to guard the passage; the Greek battle word was to give the foreigner no entry into Hellas, and the Persian to destroy the Greek host and win the strait. So when Xerxes' men ordered their battle and came on, the Greeks abode in their place off Artemisium; and the foreigners made a half circle of their ships, and strove to encircle and enclose them round.

16. At that the Greeks charged and joined battle. In that sea-fight both had equal success. For Xerxes' fleet wrought itself harm by its numbers and multitude: the ships were thrown into confusion and ran foul of each other; nevertheless they held fast, nor yielded, for they could not bear to be put to flight by a few ships. Many were the Greek ships and men that there perished, and far more yet of the foreigners' ships and men; thus they battled, till they drew off and parted each from other.

17. In that sea-fight of all Xerxes' fighters the Egyptians bore themselves best; besides other great feats of arms that they achieved, they took five Greek ships and their crews withal. Of the Greeks on that day the Athenians bore themselves best:

18. Ὡς δὲ διέστησαν, ἄσμενοι ἐκάτεροι ἐς ὄρμον ἠπείγοντο. οἱ δὲ Ἕλληνες ὡς διακριθέντες ἐκ τῆς ναυμαχίης ἀπηλλάχθησαν, τῶν μὲν νεκρῶν καὶ τῶν ναυηγίων ἐπεκράτεον, τρηχέως δὲ περιεφθέντες, καὶ οὐκ ἦκιστα Ἀθηναῖοι τῶν αἰ ἡμίσεαι τῶν νεῶν τετρωμέναι ἦσαν, δρησμὸν δὲ ἐβούλευον ἔσω ἐς τὴν Ἑλλάδα.

and of the Athenians Clinias son of Alcibiades; he brought to the war two hundred men and a ship of his own, all at his private charges.

18. So they parted and each right gladly made haste to his own anchorage. When the Greeks had drawn off and come out of the battle, they were left masters of the dead and the wrecks; but they had had rough handling, and chiefly the Athenians, half of whose ships had suffered hurt; and now their counsel was to flee to the inner waters of Hellas.¹

19. Themistocles bethought him that if the Ionian and Carian nations were rent away from the foreigners, the Greeks might be strong enough to get the upper hand of the rest. Now it was the wont of the Euboeans to drive their flocks down to the sea there. Wherefore gathering the admirals together he told them that he thought he had a device whereby he hoped to draw away the best of the king's allies. So much he revealed for the nonce; but in the present turn of affairs this (he said) they must do: let everyone slay as many as he would from the Euboean flocks; it was better that the fleet should have them, than the enemy. Moreover he counselled them each to bid his men to light a fire; as for the time of their going thence, he would take such thought for that as should bring them scathless to Hellas. All this they agreed to do; and forthwith they lit fires and then laid hands on the flocks.

20. For the Euboeans had neglected the oracle of Bacis, deeming it void of meaning, and neither by carrying away nor by bringing in anything had they shown that they feared an enemy's coming; whereby they were the cause of their own destruction; for Bix's oracle concerning this matter runs thus:

"Whenso a strange-tongued man on the waves casts yoke of papyrus,
Then let bleating goats from coasts Euboean be banished."

To these verses the Euboeans gave no heed; but in the evils then present and soon to come they could not but heed their dire calamity.

21. While the Greeks were doing as I have said, there came to them the watcher from Trachis. For there was a watcher at Artemisium, one Polyas, a native of Anticyra, who was charged (and had a rowing boat standing ready therefor), if the fleet should be at grips, to declare it to the men at Thermopylae; and in like manner, if any ill should befall the land army, Abronichus son of Lysicles, an Athenian, was with Leonidas, ready for his part to bring the news in a thirty-oared bark to the Greeks at Artemisium. So this Abronichus came and declared to them the fate of Leonidas and his army; which when the Greeks learnt, they no longer delayed their departure, but went their ways in their appointed order, the Corinthians first, and last of all the Athenians.

22. But Themistocles picked out the seaworthiest Athenian ships and went about to the places of drinking water, where he engraved on the rocks writing which the Ionians read on the next day when they came to Artemisium. This was what the writing said: "Men of Ionia, you do wrongly

23. to fight against the land of your fathers and bring slavery upon Hellas. It were best of all that you should join yourselves to us; but if that be impossible for you, then do you even now withdraw yourselves from the war, and entreat the Carians to do the same as you. If neither of these things may be, and you are fast bound by such constraint that you cannot rebel, yet we pray you not to use your full strength in the day of battle; be mindful that you are our sons and that our quarrel with the foreigner was of your making in the beginning." To my thinking Themistocles thus wrote with a double intent, that if the king knew nought of the writing it might make the Ionians to change sides and join with the Greeks, and that if the writing were maliciously reported to Xerxes he might thereby be led to mistrust the Ionians, and keep them out of the sea-fights.

23. Such was Themistocles' writing. Immediately after this there came to the foreigners a man of Histiaea in a boat, telling them of the flight of the Greeks from Artemisium. Not believing this, they kept the bringer of the news in ward, and sent swift ships to spy out the matter; and when the crews of these brought word of the truth, on learning that, the whole armada at the first spreading of sunlight sailed all together to Artemisium, where having waited till midday, they next sailed to Histiaea, and on their coming took possession of the Histiaeans' city, and overran all the villages on the seaboard of the Ellopiæ¹ region, which is the land of Histiaea.

24. While they were there, Xerxes sent a herald

25. Ταῦτα ἐπαγγελιαμένον, μετὰ ταῦτα οὐδὲν ἐγένετο πλοίων σπανιότερον· οὕτω πολλοὶ ἤθελον θεήσασθαι, διαπεραιωθέντες δὲ εἰβένυντο διεξιόιτες τοὺς νεκροὺς· πάντες δὲ ἠπιστάτο τοὺς κειμένους εἶναι πάντας Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ Θεσπίας, ὁρῶντες καὶ τοὺς εἰλωτας. οὐ μὲν οὐδ' ἐλάνθανε τοὺς διαβεβηκότας Ξέρξης ταῦτα πρήξας περὶ τοὺς νεκροὺς τοὺς ἰωντοῦ· καὶ γὰρ δὴ καὶ γελοῖον ἦν τῶν μὲν χίλιοι ἐφαίνοντο νεκροὶ κείμενοι, οἱ δὲ πάντες ἐκέατο ἄλλες συγκεκομισμένοι ἐς τὸ αὐτὸ χωρίον, τέσσερες χιλιάδες. ταύτην μὲν τὴν ἡμέρην πρὸς θένν ἐτράποντο, τῇ δ' ὑστεραίῃ οἱ μὲν ἀπέπλεον ἐς Ἰστιαίην ἐπὶ τὰς νέας, οἱ δὲ ἀμφὶ Ξέρξην ἐς ὁδὸν ὁρμέατο.

to the fleet, having first bestowed the fallen men as I shall show. Of all his own soldiers who had fallen at Thermopylae (that is, as many as twenty thousand) he left about a thousand, and the rest he buried in digged trenches, which he covered with leaves and heaped earth, that the men of the fleet might not see them. So when the herald had crossed over to Histiaea, he assembled all the men of the fleet and thus spoke: "Men of our allies, King Xerxes suffers any one of you that will to leave his place and come to see how he fights against those foolish men who thought to overcome the king's power."

25. After this proclamation, there was nought so hard to get as a boat, so many were they who would see the sight. They crossed over and went about viewing the dead; and all of them supposed that the fallen Greeks were all Lacedaemonians and Thespians, though there were the helots also for them to see. Yet for all that they that crossed over were not deceived by what Xerxes had done with his own dead; for indeed the thing was laughable; of the Persians a thousand lay dead before their eyes, but the Greeks lay all together assembled in one place, to the number of four thousand. All that day they spent in seeing the sight; on the next the shipmen returned to their fleet at Histiaea, and Xerxes' army set forth on its march.

26. There had come to them some few deserters, men of Arcadia, lacking a livelihood and desirous to find some service. Bringing these men into the king's presence, the Persians inquired of them what the Greeks were doing, there being one who put this question in the name of all. The Arcadians telling them that the Greeks were keeping the Olympic¹ festival and viewing sports and horse-races, the Persian asked what was the prize offered, wherefor they contended; and they told him of the crown of olive that was given to the victor. Then Tigranes son of Artabanus uttered a most noble saying (but the king deemed him a coward for it); when he heard that the prize was not money but a crown, he could not hold his peace, but cried, "Zounds, Mardonius, what manner of men are these that you have brought us to fight withal? 'tis not for money they contend but for glory of achievement!" Such was Tigranes' saying.

27. In the meantime, immediately after the misfortune at Thermopylae, the Thessalians sent a herald to the Phocians, inasmuch as they bore an old grudge against them, and more than ever by reason of their latest disaster. For a few years before the king's expedition the Thessalians and their allies had invaded Phocis with their whole army, but had been worsted and roughly handled by the Phocians. For the Phocians being beleaguered on Parnassus and having with them the diviner Tellias of Elis, Tellias devised a stratagem for them: he covered six hundred of the bravest Phocians with gypsum, themselves and their armour, and led them to attack the Thessalians by night, bidding them solstice, we should have to adopt some theory such as Stein's, that the conversation here recorded took place in late June, while Xerxes was at Therma; for Thermopylae was fought in late August. But Macan says that the above hypothesis about the date of the games is exploded.

slay whomsoever they should see not whitened. The Thessalian sentinels were the first to see these men and to flee for fear, supposing falsely that it was something beyond nature, and next after the sentinels the whole army fled likewise; insomuch that the Phocians made themselves masters of four thousand dead, and their shields, whereof they dedicated half at Abae and the rest at Delphi; a tithe of what they won in that fight went to the making of the great statues that stand round the tripod before the shrine at Delphi, and there are others like them dedicated at Abae.

28. Thus had the beleaguered Phocians dealt with the Thessalian foot; and when the Thessalian horsemen rode into their country the Phocians did them mortal harm; they dug a great pit in the pass near Hyampolis and put empty jars therein, covering which with earth, till all was like the rest of the ground, they awaited the onset of the Thessalians. These rode on thinking to sweep the Phocians before them, and fell in among the jars; whereby their horses' legs were broken.

29. These two deeds had never been forgiven by the Thessalians; and now they sent a herald with this message: "Men of Phocis, it is time now that you confess yourselves to be no match for us. We were ever formerly preferred before you by the Greeks, as long as we were on their side; and now we are of such weight with the foreigner that it lies in our power to have you deprived of your lands, ay, and yourselves enslaved withal. Nevertheless, though all rests with us, we bear you no ill will for the past; pay us fifty talents of silver for what you did, and we promise to turn aside what threatens your land."

30. This was the Thessalians' offer. The Phocians, and they alone of all that region, would not take the Persians' part, and that for no other reason (if I argue aright) than their hatred of the Thessalians; had the Thessalians aided the Greek side, then methinks the Phocians would have stood for the Persians. They replied to the offer of the Thessalians that they would give no money; that they could do like the Thessalians and take the Persian part, if for any cause they so wished, but they would not willingly betray the cause of Hellas.

31. This answer being returned to them, thereat the Thessalians in their wrath against the Phocians began to guide the foreigner on his way. From the lands of Trachis they broke into Doris; for there is a narrow tongue of Dorian land stretching that way, about thirty furlongs wide, between the Malian territory and the Phocian, which in old time was Dryopian; this region is the motherland of the Dorians of the Peloponnese. To this Dorian territory the foreigners did no harm at their invasion; for the people took the Persian part, and the Thessalians would not have them harmed.

32. When they entered Phocis from Doris, the Phocians themselves they could not catch; for some of the Phocians ascended to the heights of Parnassus; and the peak of Parnassus called Tithorea, which rises by itself near the town Neon, has room enough for a multitude of people; thither they carried up their goods and themselves ascended to it, but the most of them made their way out of the country to the Ozolian Locrians, where is the town of Amphissa above the Crisean plain. The foreigners overran the whole of Phocis, the Thessalians so guiding their army; and all that came within their power they burnt and wasted, setting fire to towns and temples.

33. Marching this way down the river Cephissus they ravaged all before them, burning the towns of Drymus, Charadra, Erochus, Tethronium, Amphicaea, Neon, Pediea, Tritea, Elatea, Hyampolis, Parapotamii, and Abae, where was a richly endowed temple of Apollo, provided with wealth of treasure and offerings; and there was then as now a place of divination there. This temple, too, they plundered and burnt; and they pursued and caught some of the Phocians near the mountains, and did certain women to death by the multitude of their violators.

34. Passing Parapotamii the foreigners came to Panopea; and there their army parted asunder into two companies. The greater and stronger part of the host marched with Xerxes himself towards Athens and broke into the territory of Orchomenus in Boeotia. Now the whole people of Boeotia took the Persian part, and men of Macedonia sent by Alexander safeguarded their towns, each in his appointed place; the reason of the safeguarding being, that Xerxes might understand the Boeotians to be on the Persian side.

35. So this part of the foreign army marched as aforesaid, and others set forth with guides for the

The purpose of their parting from the rest of the army and marching this way was, that they might plunder the temple at Delphi and lay its wealth before Xerxes; who (as I have been told) knew of all the most notable possessions in the temple better than of what he had left in his own palace, and chiefly the offerings of Croesus son of Alyattes; so many had ever spoken of them.

37. Now when the foreigners drew nigh in their coming and could see the temple, the prophet, whose name was Aceratus, saw certain sacred arms, that no man might touch without sacrilege, brought out of the chamber within and laid before the shrine. So he went to tell the Delphians of this miracle; but when the foreigners came with all speed near to the temple of Athene Pronaea, they were visited by miracles yet greater than the aforesaid. Marvellous indeed it is, that weapons of war should of their own motion appear lying outside before the shrine; but the visitation which followed upon that was more wondrous than aught else ever seen. For when the foreigners were near in their coming to the temple of Athene Pronaea, there were they smitten by thunderbolts from heaven, and two peaks brake off from Parnassus and came rushing among them with a mighty noise and overwhelmed many of them; and from the temple of Athene there was heard a shout and a cry of triumph.

38. All thus joining together struck panic into the foreigners; and the Delphians, perceiving that they fled, descended upon them and slew a great number. The survivors fled straight to Boeotia. Those of the foreigners who returned said (as I have been told) that they had seen other signs of heaven's working besides the aforesaid: two men-at-arms of stature greater than human (they said) had followed hard after them, slaying and pursuing.

39. These two, say the Delphians, were the native heroes Phylacus and Autonomous, whose precincts are near the temple, Phylacus' by the road itself above the shrine of Athene Pronaea, and Autonomous' near the Castalian spring, under the Hyampean peak. The rocks that fell¹ from Parnassus were yet to be seen in my day, lying in the precinct of Athene Pronaea, whither their descent through the foreigners' ranks had hurled them. Such, then, was the manner of those men's departure from the temple.

40. The Greek fleet, after it had left Artemisium came by the Athenians' entreaty to land at Salamis; the reason why the Athenians entreated them to put in there being, that they themselves might convey their children and women safe out of Attica, and moreover take counsel as to what they should do. For inasmuch as the present turn of affairs had disappointed their judgment they were now to hold a council; they had thought to find the whole Peloponnesian force awaiting the foreigners' attack in Boeotia, but now of that they found no whit, but learnt contrariwise that the Peloponnesians were fortifying the Isthmus, and letting all else go, as deeming the defence of the Peloponnese to be of greatest moment. Learning this, they therefore entreated the fleet to put in at Salamis.

41. So the rest made sail thither, and the Athenians to their own country. Being there arrived they made a proclamation that every Athenian should save his children and servants as he best could. Thereat most of them sent their households to Troezen, and some to Aegina and Salamis. They made haste to convey all out of harm because they desired to be guided by the oracle, and for another reason, too, which was this: it is said by the Athenians that a great snake lives in their temple, to guard the acropolis; in proof whereof they do ever duly set out a honey-cake as a monthly offering for it; this cake had ever before been consumed, but was now left untouched. When the priestess made that known, the Athenians were the readier to leave their city, deeming their goddess, too, to have deserted the acropolis. When they had conveyed all away, they returned to the fleet.

42. When the Greeks from Artemisium had put in at Salamis, the rest of their fleet also heard of it and gathered in from Troezen, the port of which, Pogon, had been named for their place of mustering, and the ships that mustered there were more by far than had fought at Artemisium, and came from more cities. Their admiral-in-chief was the same as at Artemisium, Eurybiades son of Euryclides, a Spartan, yet not of the royal blood; but it was the Athenians who furnished by far the most and the sea-worthiest ships.

43. The Peloponnesians that were with the fleet were, firstly, the Lacedaemonians, with sixteen ships, and the Corinthians with the same number of ships as at Artemisium; the Sicyonians furnished fifteen, the Epidaurians ten, the Troezenians five, the people of Hermione three; all these, except the people of Hermione, were of Dorian and Macedonian stock, and had last come from Erineus and Pindus and the Dryopian region. The people of Hermione are Dryopians, driven by Heracles and the Malians from the country now called Doris.

44. These were the Peloponnesians in the fleet. Of those that came from the mainland outside the Peloponnese, the Athenians furnished more ships than any of the rest, namely, a hundred and eighty, of their own sending; for the Plataeans did not fight beside the Athenians at Salamis, whereof the reason was that when the Greeks sailed from Artemisium, and had arrived off Chalcis, the Plataeans landed on the opposite Boeotian shore and set about conveying their households away. So they were left behind bringing these to safety. The Athenians, while the Pelasgians ruled what is now called Hellas, were Pelasgians, bearing the name of Cranai¹; in the time of their king Cecrops they came to be called Cecropidae, and when the kingship fell to Erechtheus they changed their name and became Athenians, but when Ion son of Xuthus was made leader of their armies they were called after him Ionians.

45. The Megarians furnished the same complement as at Artemisium; the Ampraciots brought seven ships to the fleet, and the Leucadians (who are of Dorian stock from Corinth) brought three.

46. Of the islanders, the Aeginetans furnished thirty. They had other ships, too, manned; but they used them to guard their own coasts, and fought at Salamis with the thirty that were most seaworthy. The Aeginetans are Dorians from Epidaurus; their island was formerly called Oenone. After the Aeginetans came the Chalcidians with the twenty, and the Eretrians with the seven which had fought at Artemisium; they are Ionians; and next the Ceans, furnishing the same ships as before; they are of Ionian stock, from Athens. The Naxians furnished four ships; they had been sent by their townsmen to the Persians, like the rest of the islanders; but they paid no heed to the command and joined themselves to the Greeks, being invited thereto by Democritus, a man of note in their town, who was then captain of a trireme. The Naxians are Ionians, of Athenian lineage. The Styrians furnished the same number as at Artemisium, and the Cythnians one trireme and a fifty-oared bark; both these peoples are Dryopians. There were also in the fleet men of Seriphos and Siphnos and Melos, these being the only islanders who had not given the foreigner earth and water.

47. All these aforesaid came to the war from countries nearer than Thesprotia and the river Acheron; for Thesprotia marches with the Ampraciots and Leucadians, who came from the lands farthest distant. Of those that dwell farther off than these, the men of Croton alone came to aid Hellas in its peril, and they with one ship, whereof the captain was Phaylus, a victor in the Pythian games. These Crotoniats are of Achæan blood.

48. All these furnished triremes for the fleet save the Melians and Siphnians and Seriphians, who brought fifty-oared barks, the Melians (who are of Lacedæmonian stock) two, and the Siphnians and Seriphians (who are Ionians of Athenian lineage) one each. The whole number of the ships, besides the fifty-oared barks, was three hundred and seventy eight.

49. When the leaders from the cities aforementioned met at Salamis, they held a council; Eurybiades laid the matter before them, bidding whosoever would to declare what waters in his judgment were fittest for a sea-fight, among all places whereof the Greeks were masters; of Attica they had no more hope; it was among other places that he bade them judge. Then the opinion of most of the speakers tended to the same conclusion, that they should sail to the Isthmus and do battle by sea for the safety of the Peloponnese, the reason which they alleged being this, that if they were defeated in the fight at Salamis they would be beleaguered in an island, where no help could come to them; but off the Isthmus they could win to their own coasts.

50. While the Peloponnesian captains held this argument, there came a man of Athens, bringing news that the foreigner was arrived in Attica, and was wasting it all with fire. For the army which followed Xerxes through Bocotia had burnt the town of the Thespians (who had themselves left it and gone to the Peloponnese) and Plataea likewise, and was arrived at Athens, laying waste all the country round. They burnt Thespia and Plataea because they learnt from the Thebans that those towns had not taken the Persian part.

51. Now after the crossing of the Hellespont whence they began their march, the foreigners had spent one month in their passage into Europe, and in three more months they arrived in Attica, Calliades being then archon at Athens. There they took the city, then left desolate; but they found in the temple some few Athenians, temple-stewards and needy men, who defended themselves against the assault by fencing the acropolis with doors and logs; these had not withdrawn to Salamis, partly by reason of poverty, and also because they supposed themselves to have found out the meaning of the Delphic oracle that the wooden wall should be impregnable, and believed that this, and not the ships, was the refuge signified by the prophecy.¹

52. The Persians sat down on the hill over against the acropolis, which is called by the Athenians the Hill of Ares, and besieged them by shooting arrows wrapped in lighted tow at the barricade. There the Athenians defended themselves against their besiegers, albeit they were in extremity and their barricade had failed them; nor would they listen to the terms of surrender proposed to them by the Pisistratids, but defended themselves by counter-devices, chiefly by rolling great stones down on the foreigners when they assaulted the gates; insomuch that for a long while Xerxes could not take the place, and knew not what to do.

53. But at the last in their quandary the foreigners found an entrance; for the oracle must needs be fulfilled, and all the mainland of Attica be made subject to the Persians. In front of the acropolis, and behind the gates and the ascent thereto, there was a place where none was on guard and none would have thought that any man would ascend that way, here certain men mounted near the shrine of Cecrops' daughter Aglaurus, though the way led up a sheer cliff.² When the Athenians saw that they had ascended to the acropolis, some of them cast themselves down from the wall and so perished, and others fled into the inner chamber. Those Persians who had come up first betook themselves to the gates, which they opened, and slew the suppliants; and when they had laid all the Athenians low, they plundered the temple and burnt the whole of the acropolis.

54. Being now wholly master of Athens, Xerxes sent a horseman to Susa to announce his present success to Artabanus. On the next day after the messenger was sent he called together the Athenian exiles who followed in his train, and bade them go up to the acropolis and offer sacrifice after their manner, whether it was some vision seen of him in sleep that led him to give this charge, or that he repented of his burning of the temple. The Athenian exiles did as they were bidden.

55. I will now show wherefore I make mention of this: on that acropolis there is a shrine of Erechtheus the Earthborn (as he is called), wherein is an olive tree, and a salt-pool, which (as the Athenians say) were set there by Poseidon and Athene as tokens of their contention for the land.¹ Now it was so, that the olive tree was burnt with the temple by the foreigners; but on the day after its burning, when the Athenians bidden by the king to sacrifice went up to the temple, they saw a shoot of about a cubit's length sprung from the trunk; which thing they reported.

56. When it was told to the Greeks at Salamis what had befallen the Athenian acropolis, they were so panic-struck that some of their captains would not wait till the matter whereon they debated should be resolved, but threw themselves aboard their ships and hoisted their sails for flight. Those that were left behind resolved that the fleet should fight to guard the Isthmus; and at nightfall they broke up from the assembly and embarked.

57. Themistocles then being returned to his ship, Mnesiphilus, an Athenian, asked him what was the issue of their counsels. Learning from him that their plan was to sail to the Isthmus and fight in defence of the Peloponnese, "Then," said Mnesiphilus, "if they put out to sea from Salamis, your ships will have no country left wherefor to fight; for everyone will betake himself to his own city, and neither Eurybiades, nor any other man, will be able to hold them, but the armament will be scattered abroad; and Hellas will perish by unwisdom. Nay, if there be any means thereto, go now and strive to undo this plan, if haply you may be able to persuade Eurybiades to change his purpose and so abide here."

58. This advice pleased Themistocles well; making no answer to Mnesiphilus, he went to Eurybiades' ship, and said that he would confer with him on a matter of their common interest. Eurybiades bidding him come aboard and say what he would, Themistocles sat by him and told him all that he had heard from Mnesiphilus, as it were of his own devising, and added much thereto, till he prevailed with the Spartan by entreaty to come out of his ship and assemble the admirals in their place of meeting.

59. They being assembled (so it is said), before Eurybiades had laid before them the matter wherefor the generals were brought together, Themistocles spoke long and vehemently in the earnestness of his entreaty; and while he yet spoke, Adimantus son

60. Τότε μὲν ἡπίως πρὸς τὸν Κορίνθιον ἀμείψατο, πρὸς δὲ τὸν Εὐρυβιάδην ἔλεγε ἐκείνων μὲν ἐτι οὐδὲν τῶν πρότερον λεχθέντων, ὥς ἐπεὶ ἀπαείρῃσι ἀπὸ Σαλαμῖνος διαδρήσονται· παρεόντων γὰρ τῶν συμμάχων οὐκ ἔφερε οἱ κόσμον οὐδένα κατηγορεῖν· ὁ δὲ ἄλλου λόγου εἶχετο, λέγων τάδε. of Ocytus, the Corinthian admiral, said, "At the games, Themistocles, they that come forward before their time are beaten with rods." "Ay," said Themistocles, justifying himself, "but they that wait too long win no crown."

60. Thus for the nonce he made the Corinthian a soft answer; then turning to Eurybiades, he said now nought of what he had said before, how that if they set sail from Salamis they would scatter and flee; for it would have ill become him to bring railing accusations against the allies in their presence; he trusted to another plea instead. "It lies in your hand," said he, "to save Hellas, if you will be guided by me and fight here at sea, and not be won by the words of these others to remove your ships over to the Isthmus. Hear me now, and judge between two plans. If you engage off the Isthmus you will fight in open waters, where it is least for our advantage, our ships being the heavier and the fewer in number; and moreover you will lose Salamis and Megara and Aegina, even if victory attend us otherwise; and their land army will follow with their fleet, and so you will lead them to the Peloponnese, and imperil all Hellas. But if you do as I counsel you, you will thereby profit as I shall show: firstly, by engaging their many ships with our few in narrow seas, we shall win a great victory, if the war have its rightful issue; for it is for our advantage to fight in a strait as it is theirs to have wide sea-room. Secondly, we save Salamis, whither we have conveyed away our children and our women. Moreover, there is this, too, in my plan, and it is your chiefest desire: you will be defending the Peloponnese as well by abiding here as you would by fighting off the Isthmus, and you will not lead our enemies (if you be wise) to the Isthmus. And if that happen which I expect, you will never have the foreigners upon you at the Isthmus; they will advance no further than Attica, but depart in disorderly fashion; and we shall gain by the saving of Megara and Aegina and Salamis, where it is told us by an oracle that we shall have the upper hand of our enemies. Success comes oftener to men when they make reasonable designs; but if they do not so, neither will heaven for its part side with human devices."

61. Ταῦτα λέγοντος Θεμιστοκλέος αὐτῖς ὁ Κορίνθιος Ἀδείμαντος ἐπεφέρετο, σιγᾶν τε κελεύων τῷ μὴ ἐστὶ πατρίς καὶ Εὐρυβιάδην οὐκ ἔων ἐπιψηφίζειν ἀπόλι ἀνδρὶ· πόλιν γὰρ τὸν Θεμιστοκλέα παρεχόμενον οὕτω ἐκέλευε γνώμας συμβάλλεσθαι. ταῦτα δὲ οἱ προέφερε ὅτι ἡλώκεσάν τε καὶ κατεῖχοντο αἱ Ἀθηναί. τότε δὴ ὁ Θεμιστοκλῆς κεῖνόν τε καὶ τοὺς Κορινθίους πολλὰ τε καὶ κακὰ ἔλεγε, ἐωντοῖσι τε ἐδήλου λόγῳ ὥς εἶη καὶ πόλιν καὶ γῇ μέζων ἢ περ ἐκείνοισι, ἔστ' ἂν διηκόσιαι νέες σφί ἔωσι πεπληρωμέναι· οὐδαμοὺς γὰρ Ἑλλήνων αὐτοὺς ἐπιόντας ἀποκρούσεσθαι.

61. Thus said Themistocles; but Adimantus the Corinthian attacked him again, saying that a landless man should hold his peace, and that Eurybiades must not suffer one that had no city to vote; let Themistocles (said he) have a city at his back ere he took part in council,—taunting him thus because Athens was taken and held by the enemy. Thereupon Themistocles spoke long and bitterly against Adimantus and the Corinthians, giving them plainly to understand that the Athenians had a city and country greater than theirs, as long as they had two hundred ships fully manned; for there were no Greeks that could beat them off.

62. Thus declaring, he passed over to Eurybiades, and spoke more vehemently than before. "If you abide here, by so abiding you will be a right good man; but if you will not, you will overthrow Hellas; for all our strength for war is in our ships. Nay, be guided by me. But if you do not so, we then from Eleusis as it were raised by the feet of about thirty thousand men ; and as they marvelled greatly what men they should be whence the dust came, immediately they heard a cry, which cry seemed to him to be the Iacchus-song of the mysteries. Demaratus, not being conversant with the rites of Eleusis, asked him what this voice might be ; and Dicaeus said, "Without doubt, Demaratus, some great harm will befall the king's host, for Attica being unpeopled, it is plain hereby that the voice we hear is of heaven's sending, and comes from Eleusis to the aid of the Athenians and their allies. And if the vision descend upon the Peloponnese, the king himself and his army on land will be endangered ; but if it turn towards the ships at Salamis, the king will be in peril of losing his fleet. As for this feast, it is kept by the Athenians every year for the honour of the Mother and the Maid,¹ and whatever Greek will, be he Athenian or other, is then initiated ; and the cry which you hear is the 'Iacchus' which is uttered at this feast." Demaratus replied thereto, "Keep silence, and speak to none other thus ; for if these words of yours be reported to the king, you will lose your head, and neither I nor any other man will avail to save you. Hold your peace ; and for this host, the gods shall look to it." Such was Demaratus' counsel ; and after the dust and the cry came a cloud, which rose aloft and floated away towards Salamis, to the Greek fleet. By this they understood, that Xerxes' ships must perish.—This was the tale told by Dicaeus, son of Theocydes; and Demaratus and others (he said) could prove it true.

66. They that were appointed to serve in Xerxes' fleet, when they had viewed the hurt done to the Laconians and crossed over from Trachis to Histiaea, after three days' waiting sailed through the Euripus, and in three more days they arrived at Phalerum. To my thinking, the forces both of land and sea were no fewer in number when they brake into Athens than when they came to Sepias and Thermopylae; for against those that were lost in the storm, and at Thermopylae, and in the sea-fights off Artemisium, I set these, who at that time were not yet in the king's following—namely, the Melians, the Dorians, the Locrians, and the whole force of Boeotia (save only the Thespians and Plataeans), yea, and the men of Carystus and Andros and Tenos and the rest of the islands, save the five states of which I have before made mention.¹ For the farther the Persian pressed on into Hellas the more were the peoples that followed in his train.

67. So when all these were come to Athens, except the Parians (who had been left behind in Cythnus watching to see which way the war should incline)—the rest, I say, being come to Phalerum, Xerxes then came himself down to the fleet, that he might consort with the shipmen and hear their opinions. When he was come, and sat enthroned, there appeared before him at his summons the despots of their cities and the leaders of companies from the ships, and they sat according to the honourable rank which the king had granted them severally, first in place the king of Sidon, and next he of Tyre, and then the rest. When they had sat down in order one after another, Xerxes sent Mardonius and put each to the test by questioning him if the Persian ships should offer battle.

68. Mardonius went about questioning them, from the Sidonian onwards; and all the rest gave their united voice for offering battle at sea; but Artemisia said: "Tell the king, I pray you, Mardonius, that I who say this have not been the hindmost in courage or in feats of arms in the fights near Euboea. Nay, master, but it is right that I should declare my opinion, even that which I deem best for your cause. And this I say to you—Spare your ships, and offer no battle at sea; for their men are as much stronger by sea than yours, as men are stronger than women. And why must you at all costs imperil yourself by fighting battles on the sea? have you not possession of Athens, for the sake of which you set out on this march, and of the rest of Hellas? no man stands in your path; they that resisted you have come off in such plight as beseemed them. I will show you now what I think will be the course of your enemies' doings. If you make no haste to fight at sea, but keep your ships here and abide near the land, or even go forward into the Peloponnese, then, my master, you will easily gain that end wherefor you have come. For the Greeks are not able to hold out against you for a long time, but you will scatter them, and they will flee each to his city; they have no food in this island, as I am informed, nor, if you lead your army into the Peloponnese, is it likely that those of them who have come from thence will abide unmoved; they will have no mind to fight sea-battles for Athens. But if you make haste to fight at once on sea, I fear lest your fleet take some hurt and thereby harm your army likewise. Moreover, O king, call this to mind—good men's slaves are wont to be evil and bad men's slaves good; and you, who are the best of all men, have evil slaves, that pass for your allies, men of Egypt and Cyprus and Cilicia and Pamphylia, in whom is no usefulness."

69. When Artemisia spoke thus to Mardonius, all that were her friends were sorry for her words, thinking that the king would do her some hurt for counselling him against a sea-fight; but they that had ill-will and jealousy against her for the honour in which she was held above all the allies were glad at her answer, thinking it would be her undoing. But when the opinions were reported to Xerxes he was greatly pleased by the opinion of Artemisia; he had ever deemed her a woman of worth and now held her in much higher esteem. Nevertheless he bade the counsel of the more part to be followed; for he thought that off Euboea his men had been slack fighters by reason of his absence, and now he purposed to watch the battle himself.

70. When the command to set sail was given, they put out to Salamis and arrayed their line in order at their ease. That day there was not time enough left to offer battle, for the night came; and they made preparation for the next day instead. But the Greeks were in fear and dread, and especially they that were from the Peloponnese; and the cause of their fear was, that they themselves were about to fight for the Athenians' country where they lay at Salamis, and if they were overcome they must be shut up and beleaguered in an island, leaving their own land unguarded. At the next nightfall, the land army of the foreigners began its march to the Peloponnese.

71. Nathless the Greeks had used every device possible to prevent the foreigners from breaking in upon them by land. For as soon as the Peloponnesians heard that Leonidas' men at Thermopylae were dead, they hasted together from their cities and encamped on the Isthmus, their general being the brother of Leonidas, Cleombrotus son of Anaxandrides. Being there encamped they broke up the Scironian road,¹ and thereafter built a wall across the Isthmus, having resolved in council so to do. As there were many tens of thousands there and all men wrought, the work was brought to accomplishment; for they carried stones to it and bricks and logs and crates full of sand, and they that mustered there never rested from their work by night or by day.

72. Those Greeks that mustered all their people at the Isthmus were the Lacedaemonians and all the Arcadians, the Eleans, Corinthians, Sicyonians, Epidaurians, Phliasians, Troezenians, and men of Hermione. These were they who mustered there, and were moved by great fear for Hellas in her peril; but the rest of the Peloponnesians cared dangerous for some six miles, and very easily made impassable.

75. Ἐνθαῦτα Θεμιστοκλῆς ὥς ἴσσοῦτο τῇ γνώμῃ ὑπὸ τῶν Πελοποννησίων, λαθὼν ἐξέρχεται ἐκ τοῦ συνεδρίου, ἐξελθὼν δὲ πέμπει ἐς τὸ στρατόπεδον τὸ Μιήδων ἄνδρα πλοῖῳ ἐντειλάμενος τὰ λέγειν χρεὼν, τῷ οὖνομα μὲν ἦν Σίκιννος, οἰκέτης δὲ καὶ παιδαγωγὸς ἦν τῶν Θεμιστοκλέος παίδων· τὸν δὴ ὕστερον τούτων τῶν πρηγμάτων Θεμιστοκλῆς Θεσπιέα τε ἐποίησε, ὥς ἐπεδέκοντο οἱ Θεσπιῆες πολιήτας, καὶ χρήμασι ὀλβιον. ὅς τότε πλοῖῳ ἀπικόμενος ἔλεγε πρὸς τοὺς στρατηγοὺς τῶν βαρβάρων τάδε. that they must sail away to the Peloponnese and face danger for that country, rather than abide and fight for a land won from them by the spear; but the Athenians and Aeginetans and Megarians pleading that they should remain and defend themselves where they were.

75. Then Themistocles, when the Peloponnesians were outvoting him, went privily out of the assembly, and sent to the Median fleet a man in a boat, charged with a message that he must deliver. This man's name was Sicinnus, and he was of Themistocles' household and attendant on his children; at a later day, when the Thespians were receiving men to be their citizens, Themistocles made him a Thespian, and a wealthy man withal. He now came in a boat and spoke thus to the foreigners' admirals: "I am sent by the admiral of the Athenians without the knowledge of the other Greeks (he being a friend to the king's cause and desiring that you rather than the Greeks should have the mastery) to tell you that the Greeks have lost heart and are planning flight, and that now is the hour for you to achieve an incomparable feat of arms, if you suffer them not to escape. For there is no union in their counsels, nor will they withstand you any more, and you will see them battling against each other, your friends against your foes."

76. With that declaration he departed away. The Persians put faith in the message; and first they landed many of their men on the islet Psyttalea, which lies between Salamis and the mainland; then, at midnight, they advanced their western wing towards Salamis for encirclement, and they too put out to sea that were stationed off Ceos and Cynosura ; and they held all the passage with their ships as far as Munychia.¹ The purpose of their putting out to sea was, that the Greeks might have no liberty even to flee, but should be hemmed in at Salamis and punished for their fighting off Artemisium. And the purpose of their landing Persians on the islet called Psyttalea was this, that as it was here in especial that in the sea fight men and wrecks would be washed ashore (for the island lay in the very path of the battle that was to be), they might thus save their friends and slay their foes. All this they did in silence, lest their enemies should know of it. So they made these preparations in the night, taking no rest.

77. But, for oracles, I have no way of gainsaying their truth ; for they speak clearly, and I would not essay to overthrow them, when I look into such matter as this :

“ When that with lines of ships thy sacred coasts
 they have fenced,
 Artemis² golden-sworded, and thine, sea-washed

 All in the madness of hope, having ravished the glory of Athens,
 Then shall desire full fed, by pride o’erweening

 Raging in dreadful wrath and athirst for the nations’ destruction, Utterly perish and fall ; for the justice of heaven
 shall quench it ;

Looking at such matter and seeing how clear is the utterance of Ibric, I neither venture myself to gainsay him as touching oracles nor suffer such gainsaying by others.

78. But among the admirals at Salamis there was a hot bout of argument; and they knew not as yet that the foreigners had drawn their ships round them, but supposed the enemy to be still where they had seen him stationed in the daylight.

79. But as they contended, there crossed over from Aegina Aristides son of Lysimachus, an Athenian, but one that had been ostracised by the commonalty; from that which I have learnt of his way of life I am myself well persuaded that he was the best and the justest man at Athens. He then came and stood in the place of council and called Themistocles out of it, albeit Themistocles was no friend of his but his chiefest enemy; but in the stress of the present danger he put that old feud from his mind, and so called Themistocles out, that he might converse with him. Now he had heard already, that the Peloponnesians desired to sail to the Isthmus. So when Themistocles came out, Aristides said, "Let the rivalry between us be now as it has been before, to see which of us two shall do his country more good. I tell you now, that it is all one for the Peloponnesians to talk much or little about sailing away from hence; for I say from that which my eyes have seen that now even if the Corinthians and Eurybiades himself desire to sail out, they cannot; we are hemmed in on all sides by our enemies. Do you go in now, and tell them this."

81. Ἐνθαῦτα ἔλεγε παρελθὼν ὁ Ἀριστείδης, φάμενος ἐξ Αἰγίνης τε ἦκειν καὶ μόγις ἐκπλῶσαι λαθὼν τοὺς ἐπορμέοντας· περιέχεσθαι γὰρ πᾶν τὸ στρατόπεδον τὸ Ἑλληνικὸν ὑπὸ τῶν νεῶν τῶν Ξέρξεω· παραρτίεσθαι τε συνεβούλευε ὡς ἀλεξήσομένους. καὶ ὁ μὲν ταῦτα εἶπας μετεστήκει, τῶν δὲ αὐτῶν ἐγένετο λόγων ἀμφισβασίη· οἱ γὰρ πλεῖνες τῶν στρατηγῶν οὐκ ἐπείθοντο τὰ ἐσαγγελθέντα.

80. "Your exhortation is right useful," Themistocles answered, "and your news is good; for you have come with your own eyes for witnesses of that which I desired might happen. Know that what the Medes do is of my contriving; for when the Greeks would not of their own accord prepare for battle, it was needful to force them to it willy-nilly. But now since you have come with this good news, give your message to them yourself. If I tell it, they will think it is of my own devising, and they will never take my word for it that the foreigners are doing as you say; nay, go before them yourself and tell them how it stands. When you have told them, if they believe you, that is best; but if they will not believe you, it will be the same thing to us; for if we are hemmed in on every side, as you say, they will no longer be able to take to flight."

81. Aristides then came forward and told them; he was come, he said, from Aegina, and had been hard put to it to slip unseen through the blockade; for all the Greek fleet was compassed round by Xerxes' ships, and they had best (he said) prepare to defend themselves. Thus he spoke, and took his departure. They fell a-wrangling again; for the more part of the admirals would not believe that the news was true.

82. But while they yet disbelieved, there came a trireme with Tenian deserters, whose captain was one Panaetius son of Sosimenes, and this brought cried commands loud enough for all the Greek fleet to hear, uttering first this reproach, "Sirs, what madness is this? how long will you still be backing water?"

85. The Phoenicians (for they had the western wing, towards Eleusis) were arrayed opposite to the Athenians, and to the Lacedaemonians the Ionians, on the eastern wing, nearest to Piraeus. Yet but few of them fought slackly, as Themistocles had bidden them, and the more part did not so. Many names I could record of ships' captains that took Greek ships; but I will speak of none save Theomestor son of Androdamas and Phylacus son of Histiaeus, Samians both; and I make mention of these alone, because Theomestor was for this feat of arms made by the Persians despot of Samos, and Phylacus was recorded among the king's benefactors and given much land. These benefactors of the king are called in the Persian language, orosangae.¹

86. Thus it was with these two; but the great multitude of the ships were shattered at Salamis, some destroyed by the Athenians and some by the Aeginetans. For since the Greeks fought orderly and in array, but the foreigners were by now disordered and did nought of set purpose, it was but reason that they should come to such an end as befel them. Yet on that day they were and approved themselves by far better men than off Euboea; all were zealous, and feared Xerxes, each man thinking that the king's eye was on him.

87. Now as touching some of the others I cannot with exactness say how they fought severally, foreigners or Greeks; but what befel Artemisia made her to be esteemed by the king even more than before. The king's side being now in dire confusion, Artemisia's ship was at this time being pursued by a ship of Attica; and she could not escape, for other friendly ships were in her way, and it chanced that she was the nearest to the enemy; wherefore she resolved that she would do that which afterwards tended to her advantage, and as she fled pursued by the Athenian she charged a friendly ship that bore men of Calyndus and the king himself of that place, Damasithymus. It may be that she had had some quarrel with him while they were still at the Hellespont, but if her deed was done of set purpose, or if the Calyndian met her by crossing her path at haphazard, I cannot say. But having charged and sunk the ship, she had the good luck to work for herself a double advantage. For when the Attic captain saw her charge a ship of foreigners, he supposed that Artemisia's ship was Greek or a deserter from the foreigners fighting for the Greeks, and he turned aside to deal with others.

88. By this happy chance it came about that she escaped and avoided destruction; and moreover the upshot was that the very harm which she had done won her great favour in Xerxes' eyes. For the king (it is said) saw her charge the ship as he viewed the battle, and one of the bystanders said, "Sire, see you Artemisia, how well she fights, and how she has sunk an enemy ship?" Xerxes then asking if it were truly Artemisia that had done the deed, they affirmed it, knowing well the ensign of her ship; and they supposed that the ship she had sunk was an enemy; for the luckiest chance of all which had (as I have said) befallen her was, that not one from the Calyndian ship was saved alive to be her accuser. Hearing what they told him, Xerxes is reported to have said, "My men have become women, and my women men"; such, they say, were his words.

89. In that hard fighting Xerxes' brother the admiral Ariabignes, son of Darius, was slain, and withal many other Persians and Medes and allies of renown, and some Greeks, but few; for since they could swim, they who lost their ships, yet were not slain in hand-to-hand fight, swam across to Salamis; but the greater part of the foreigners were drowned in the sea, not being able to swim. When the foremost ships were turned to flight, it was then that the most of them were destroyed; for the men of the rearmost ranks, pressing forward in their ships that they too might display their valour to the king, ran foul of their friends' ships that were in flight.

90. It happened also amid this disorder that certain Phoenicians whose ships had been destroyed came to the king and accused the Ionians of treason, saying that it was by their doing that the ships had been lost; the end of which matter was, that the Ionian captains were not put to death, and those Phoenicians who accused them were rewarded as I will show. While they yet spoke as aforesaid, a Samothracian ship charged an Attic; and while the Attic ship was sinking, a ship of Aegina bore down and sank the Samothracian; but the Samothracians, being javelin throwers, swept the fighting men with a shower of javelins off from the ship that had sunk theirs, and boarded and seized her themselves. Thereby the Ionians were saved; for when Xerxes saw this great feat of their arms, he turned on the Phoenicians (being moved to blame all in the bitterness of his heart) and commanded that their heads be cut off, that so they might not accuse better men, being themselves cowards. For whenever Xerxes, from his seat under the hill over against Salamis called Aegaleos, saw any feat achieved by his own men in the battle, he inquired who was the doer of it, and his scribes wrote down the names of the ship's captain and his father and his city. Moreover it tended somewhat to the doom of the Phoenicians that Ariaramnes, a Persian, was there, who was a friend of the Ionians. So Xerxes' men dealt with the Phoenicians.

91. The foreigners being routed and striving to win out to Phalerum, the Aeginetans lay in wait for them in the passage and then achieved notable deeds; for the Athenians amid the disorder made havoc of all ships that would resist or fly, and so did the Aeginetans with those that were sailing out of the strait; and all that escaped from the Athenians fell in their course among the Aeginetans.

92. Two ships met there, Themistocles' ship pursuing another, and one that bore Polycritus son of Crius of Aegina; this latter had charged a Sidonian, the same which had taken the Aeginetan ship that watched off Sciathus, wherein was Pytheas son of Ischenous, that Pytheas whom when gashed with wounds the Persians kept aboard their ship and made much of for his valour; this Sidonian ship was carrying Pytheas among the Persians when she was now taken, so that thereby he came safe back to Aegina. When Polycritus saw the Attic ship, he knew it by seeing the admiral's ship's ensign, and cried out to Themistocles with bitter taunt and reproach as to the friendship of Aegina with the Persians.¹ Such taunts did Polycritus hurl at Themistocles, after that he had charged an enemy ship. As for the foreigners whose ships were yet undestroyed, they fled to Phalerum and took refuge with the land army.

93. In that sea-fight the nations that won most renown were the Aeginetans, and next to them the Athenians; among men the most renowned were Polycritus of Aegina and two Athenians, Eumenes of Anagyrus and Aminias of Pallene, he who pursued after Artemisia. Had he known that she was in that ship, he had never been stayed ere he took hers or lost his own; such was the bidding given to the Athenian captain, and there was a prize withal of ten thousand drachmae for whoever should take her alive; for there was great wrath that a woman should come to attack Athens. She, then, escaped as I have already said; and the rest also whose ships were undestroyed were at Phalerum.

94. As for the Corinthian admiral Adimantus, the Athenians say that at the very moment when the ships joined battle he was struck with terror and taken as hostages by the Athenians when Aegina was charged with favouring the Persians (vi. 49, 73).

panic, and hoisting his sails fled away; and when the Corinthians saw their admiral's ship fleeing they were off and away likewise. But when (so the story goes) they came in their flight near that part of Salamis where is the temple of Athene Sciras,¹ there by heaven's providence a boat met them which none was known to have sent, nor had the Corinthians, ere it drew nigh to them, known aught of the doings of the fleet; and this is how they infer heaven's hand in the matter: when the boat came nigh the ships, those that were in it cried, "Adimantus, you have turned back with your ships in flight, and betrayed the Greeks; but even now they are winning the day as fully as they ever prayed that they might vanquish their enemies." Thus they spoke, and when Adimantus would not believe they said further that they were ready to be taken for hostages and slain if the Greeks were not victorious for all to see. Thereupon Adimantus and the rest did turn their ships about and came to the fleet when all was now over and done. Thus the Athenians report of the Corinthians; but the Corinthians deny it, and hold that they were among the foremost in the battle; and all Hellas bears them witness likewise.

95. But Aristides son of Lysimachus, that Athenian of whose great merit I have lately made mention, did in this rout at Salamis as I will show: taking many of the Athenian men-at-arms who stood arrayed on the shores of Salamis, he carried them across to the island Psyttalea, and they slaughtered all the Persians who were on that islet.

96. The sea-fight being broken off, the Greeks towed to Salamis all the wrecks that were still afloat in those waters, and held themselves ready for another battle, thinking that the king would yet again use his ships that were left. But many of the wrecks were caught by a west wind and carried to the strand in Attica called Colias;¹ so that not only was the rest of the prophecy fulfilled which had been uttered by Bacis and Musæus concerning that sea-fight, but also that which had been prophesied many years ago by an Athenian oracle-monger named Lysistratus, about the wrecks that were here cast ashore (the import of which prophecy no Greek had noted):

But this was to happen after the king's departure.

97. When Xerxes was aware of the calamity that had befallen him, he feared lest the Greeks (by Ionian counsel or their own devising) might sail to the Hellespont to break his bridges, and he might be cut off in Europe and in peril of his life; and so he planned flight. But that neither the Greeks nor his own men might discover his intent, he essayed to build a mole across to Salamis,² and made fast a line of Phœnician barges to be a floating bridge and a wall; and he made preparation for war, as though he would fight at sea again. The rest who saw him so doing were fully persuaded that he was in all earnestness prepared to remain there and carry on the war; but none of this deceived Mardonius, who had best experience of Xerxes' purposes.

98. While Xerxes did thus, he sent a messenger to Persia with news of his present misfortune. Now there is nothing mortal that accomplishes a course more swiftly than do these messengers, by the Persians' skilful contrivance. It is said that as many days as there are in the whole journey, so many are the men and horses that stand along the road, each horse and man at the interval of a day's journey; and these are stayed neither by snow nor rain nor heat nor darkness from accomplishing their appointed course with all speed. The first rider delivers his charge to the second, the second to the third, and thence it passes on from hand to hand, even as in the Greek torch-bearers' race¹ in honour of Hephaestus. This riding-post is called in Persia, angareion.²

99. When the first message came to Susa, telling that Xerxes had taken Athens, it gave such delight to the Persians who were left at home that they strewed all the roads with myrtle boughs and burnt incense and gave themselves up to sacrificial feasts and jollity; but the second, coming on the heels of the first, so confounded them that they all rent line had his torch lighted at the altar and ran with it at full speed to the second, to whom he passed it on, the second to the third, and so on till the last man carried it to the goal. The line of runners which first passed its torch alight to the goal was the winning team" (How and Wells).

their tunics, and cried and lamented without ceasing, holding Mardonius to blame; and it was not so much in grief for their ships that they did this as because they feared for Xerxes himself.

100. Such was the plight of the Persians for all the time until the coming of Xerxes himself ended it. But Mardonius, seeing that Xerxes was greatly distressed by reason of the sea-fight, and suspecting that he planned flight from Athens, considered with himself that he would be punished for over-persuading the king to march against Hellas, and that it was better for him to risk the chance of either subduing Hellas or dying honourably by flying at a noble quarry; yet his hope rather inclined to the subduing of Hellas; wherefore taking all this into account he made this proposal: "Sire, be not grieved nor greatly distressed by reason of this that has befallen us. It is not on things of wood that all the issue hangs for us, but on men and horses; and there is not one of these men, who think that they have now won a crowning victory, that will disembark from his ship and essay to withstand you, no, nor anyone from this mainland; they that have withstood us have paid the penalty. If then it so please you, let us straightway attack the Peloponnese; or if it please you to wait, that also we can do. Be not cast down; for the Greeks have no way of escape from being accountable for their former and their latter deeds, and becoming your slaves. It is best then that you should do as I have said; but if you are resolved that you will lead your army away, even then I have another plan. Do not, O king, make the Persians a laughing-stock to the Greeks; for if you have suffered harm, it is by no fault of the Persians, nor can you say that we have anywhere done less than brave men should; and if Phoenicians and Egyptians and Cyprians and Cilicians have so done, it is not the Persians who have any part in this disaster. Wherefore since the Persians are nowise to blame, be guided by me; if you are resolved that you will not remain, do you march away homewards with the greater part of your army; but it is for me to enslave and deliver Hellas to you, with three hundred thousand of your host whom I will choose."

101. When Xerxes heard that, he was as glad and joyful as a man in his evil case might be, and said to Mardonius that he would answer him when he had first taken counsel which of the two plans he would follow; and as he consulted with those Persians whom he summoned, he was fain to bid Artemisia too to the council, because he saw that she alone at the former sitting had discerned what was best to do. When Artemisia came, Xerxes bade all others withdraw, both Persian councillors and guards, and said to her: "It is Mardonius' counsel that I should abide here and attack the Peloponnese; for the Persians, he says, and the land army are nowise to blame for our disaster, and of that they would willingly give proof. Wherefore it is his counsel that I should do this; else he offers to choose out three hundred thousand men of the army and deliver Hellas to me enslaved, while I myself by his counsel march away homeward with the rest of the host. Now therefore I ask of you:

as you did rightly in counselling me against the late sea-fight, so now counsel me as to which of these two things I shall be best advised to do."

102. Being thus asked for advice she replied: "It is difficult, O king, to answer your asking for advice by saying that which is best; but in the present turn of affairs I think it best that you march away back, and that Mardonius, if he wills and promises to do as he says, be left here with those whom he desires. For if he subdue all that he offers to subdue, and prosper in the purpose wherewith he speaks, the achievement, Sire, is yours; for it will be your servants that have wrought it. But if again the issue be contrary to Mardonius' opinion, it is no great misfortune so long as you and all that household of yours be safe; for while you and they of your house are safe, many a time and oft will the Greeks have to fight for their lives. As for Mardonius, if aught ill befall him, it is no matter for that; nor will any victory of the Greeks be a victory in truth, when they have but slain your servant; but as for you, you will be marching home after the burning of Athens, which thing was the whole purpose of your expedition."

103. Artemisia's counsel pleased Xerxes; for it happened that she spoke his own purpose; in truth I think that he would not have remained, though all men and women had counselled him so to do; so panic-stricken was he. Having then thanked Artemisia, he sent her away to carry his sons to Ephesus; for he had some bastard sons with him.

104. With these sons he sent Hermotimus as guardian; this man was by birth of Pedasa, and the most honoured by Xerxes of all his eunuchs. The people of Pedasa dwell above Halicarnassus. This happens among these people: when aught untoward is about to befall within a certain time all those that dwell about their city, the priestess of Athene then grows a great beard. This had already happened to them twice.

105. Hermotimus, who came from this place Pedasa, had achieved a fuller vengeance for wrong done to him than had any man within my knowledge. Being taken captive by enemies and exposed for sale, he was bought by one Panionius of Chios, a man that had set himself to earn a livelihood out of most wicked practices; he would procure beautiful boys and castrate and take them to Sardis and Ephesus, where he sold them for a great price; for the foreigners value eunuchs more than perfect men, by reason of the full trust that they have in them. Now among the many whom Panionius had castrated in the way of trade was Hermotimus, who was not in all things unfortunate; for he was brought from Sardis among other gifts to the king, and as time went on he stood higher in Xerxes' favour than any other eunuch.

106. Now while the king was at Sardis and there preparing to lead his Persian armament against Athens, Hermotimus came for some business that he had in hand down to the part of Mysia which is inhabited by Chians and called Atarneus, and there he found Panionius. Perceiving who he was, he held long and friendly converse with him; "it is to you," he said, "that I owe all this prosperity of

But Hermotimus, having got the man and all his household in his power, said to him: "Tell me, you that have made a livelihood out of the wickedest trade on earth! what harm had I or any of my forefathers done to you, to you or yours, that you made me to be no man, but a thing of nought? ay, you thought that the gods would have no knowledge of your devices of old; but their just law has brought you for your wicked deeds into my hands, and now you shall be well content with the fulness of that justice which I will execute upon you." With these words of reproach, he brought Panionius' sons before him and compelled him to castrate all four of them, his own children; this Panionius was compelled to do; which done, the sons were compelled to castrate their father in turn. Thus was Panionius overtaken by vengeance and by Hermotimus.

107. Having given his sons to Artemisia's charge to be carried to Ephesus, Xerxes called Mardonius to him and bade him choose out whom he would from the army, and make his words good so far as endeavour availed. For that day matters went thus far; in the night, the admirals by the king's command put out to sea from Phalerum and made for the Hellespont again with all speed, to guard the bridges for the king's passage. When the foreigners came near to the "Girdle"¹ in their course, they thought that certain little headlands, which here jut out from the mainland, were ships, and they fled for a long way; but learning at last that they were no ships but headlands they drew together and went on their way.

108. When it was day, the Greeks saw the land army abiding where it had been and supposed the ships also to be at Phalerum; and thinking that there would be a sea-fight they prepared to defend themselves. But when they learnt that the ships were gone, they straightway resolved on pursuit; so they pursued Xerxes' fleet as far as Andros, but had no sight of it; and when they came to Andros they held a council there. Themistocles declared his opinion that they should hold their course through the islands, and having pursued after the ships should sail forthwith to the Hellespont to break the bridges; but Eurybiades offered a contrary opinion, saying that to break the bridges would be the greatest harm that they could do to Hellas. "For," said he, "if the Persian be cut off and compelled to remain in Europe, he will essay not to be inactive, seeing that if he be inactive neither can his cause prosper nor can he find any way of return home, but his army will perish of hunger; but if he be adventurous and busy, it may well be that every town and nation in Europe may join itself to him severally, by conquest or ere that by compact; and he will live on whatsoever yearly fruits of the earth Hellas produces. But, as I think that the Persian will not remain in Europe after his defeat in the sea-fight, let us suffer him to flee, till he come in his flight to his own country; and thereafter let it be that country and not ours that is at stake in the war."

110. Θεμιστοκλῆς μὲν ταῦτα λέγων διέβαλλε,

With that opinion the rest of the Peloponnesian admirals also agreed.

109. When Themistocles perceived that he could not persuade the greater part of them to sail to the Hellespont, he turned to the Athenians (for they were the angriest at the Persians' escape, and they were minded to sail to the Hellespont even by themselves, if the rest would not) and thus addressed them: "This I have often seen with my eyes, and much oftener heard, that beaten men when they be driven to bay will rally and retrieve their former mishap. Wherefore I say to you,—as it is to a fortunate chance that we owe ourselves and Hellas, and have driven away so mighty a cloud of enemies, let us not pursue after men that flee. For it is not we that have won this victory, but the gods and the heroes, who deemed Asia and Europe too great a realm for one man to rule, and that a wicked man and an impious; one that dealt alike with temples and homes, and burnt and overthrew the images of the gods,—yea, that scourged the sea and threw fetters thereinto. But as it is well with us for the nonce, let us abide now in Hellas and take thought for ourselves and our households; let us build our houses again and be diligent in sowing, when we have driven the foreigner wholly away; and when the next spring comes let us set sail for the Hellespont and Ionia." This he said with intent to put somewhat to his credit with the Persian, so that he might have a place of refuge if ever (as might chance) he should suffer aught at the hands of the Athenians; and indeed it did so happen.

110. Thus spoke Themistocles with intent to deceive, and the Athenians obeyed him; for since he had ever been esteemed wise and now had shown himself to be both wise and prudent, they were ready to obey whatsoever he said. Having won them over, Themistocles straightway sent men in a boat whom he could trust not to reveal under any question whatsoever the message which he charged them to deliver to the king; of whom one was again his servant Sicinnus. When these men came to Attica, the rest abode with the boat, and Sicinnus went up to Xerxes; "Themistocles son of Neocles," he said, "who is the Athenian general, and of all the allies the worthiest and wisest, has sent me to tell you this: Themistocles the Athenian has out of his desire to do you a service stayed the Greeks when they would pursue your ships and break the bridges of the Hellespont; and now he bids you go your way, none hindering you." With that message, the men returned in their boat.

111. But the Greeks, now that they were no longer minded to pursue the foreigners' ships farther or sail to the Hellespont and break the way of passage, beleaguered Andros that they might take it. For the men of that place, the first islanders of whom Themistocles demanded money, would not give it; but when Themistocles gave them to understand that the Athenians had come with two great gods to aid them, even Persuasion and Necessity, and that therefore the Andrians must assuredly give money, they answered and said, "It is then but reasonable that Athens is great and prosperous, being blest with serviceable gods; as for us Andrians, we are but pointed to Mardonius, who chanced to be standing by him, and said, "Then here is Mardonius, who shall pay those you speak of such penalty as befits them."

115. So the herald took that utterance and departed; but Xerxes left Mardonius in Thessaly, and himself journeying with all speed to the Hellespont came in forty-five days to the passage for crossing, bringing back with him as good as none (if one may so say) of his host. Whithersoever and to whatsoever people they came, they seized and devoured its produce; and if they found none, they would take for their eating the grass of the field, and strip the bark and pluck the leaves of the trees, garden and wild alike, leaving nothing; so starved they were for hunger. Moreover a pestilence and a dysentery broke out among them on their way, whereby they died. Some that were sick Xerxes left behind, charging the cities whither he came in his march to care for them and nourish them, some in Thessaly and some in Siris of Paeonia and in Macedonia; in Siris he had left the sacred chariot of Zeus when he was marching to Hellas, but in his return he received it not again; for the Paeonians had given it to the Thracians, and when Xerxes demanded it back they said that the horses had been carried off from pasture by the Thracians of the hills who dwelt about the headwaters of the Strymon.

116. It was then that a monstrous deed was done by the Thracian king of the Bisaltae and the Crestonian country. He had refused to be of his own free will Xerxes' slave, and fled away to the mountains called Rhodope; and he forbade his sons to go with the army to Hellas; but they took no account of that, for they had ever a desire to see the war, and they followed the Persians' march; for which cause, when all the six of them returned back scatheless, their father tore out their eyes.

117. This was their reward. But the Persians, journeying through Thrace to the passage, made haste to cross to Abydos in their ships; for they found the bridges no longer made fast but broken by a storm. There their march was stayed, and more food was given them than on their way; and by reason of their immoderate gorging and the change of the water which they drank, many of the army that yet remained died. The rest came with Xerxes to Sardis.

118. But there is another tale, which is this:—When Xerxes came in his march from Athens to Eïon on the Strymon, he travelled no farther than that by land, but committed his army to Hydarnes to be led to the Hellespont, and himself embarked and set sail for Asia in a Phoenician ship. In which voyage he was caught by a strong wind called Strymonian, that lifted up the waves. This storm bearing the harder upon him by reason of the heavy lading of the ship (for the Persians of his company that were on the deck were so many), the king was affrighted and cried to the ship's pilot asking him if there were any way of deliverance; whereat the man said, "Sire, there is none, except there be a riddance of these many that are on board." Hearing that, it is said, Xerxes said to the Persians, "Now it is for you to prove yourselves careful for your king; for it seems that my deliverance rests with you"; whereat they did obeisance and leapt into the sea; and the ship, being thus lightened, came by these means safe to Asia. No sooner had Xerxes disembarked on land, than he made the pilot a gift of a golden crown for saving the king's life, but cut off his head for being the death of many Persians.

119. This is the other tale of Xerxes' return; but I for my part believe neither the story of the Persians' fate, nor any other part of it. For if indeed the pilot had spoken to Xerxes as aforesaid, I think that there is not one in ten thousand but would say that the king would have bidden the men on deck (who were Persians and of the best blood of Persia) descend into the ship's hold, and would have taken of the Phœnician rowers a number equal to the number of the Persians and cast them into the sea. Nay, the truth is that Xerxes did as I have already said, and returned to Asia with his army by road.

120. And herein too lies a clear proof of it: it is known that when Xerxes came to Abdera in his return he entered into bonds of friendship with its people, and gave them a golden sword and a gilt tiara; and as the people of Abdera say (but for my part I wholly disbelieve them), it was here that Xerxes in his flight back from Athens first loosed his girdle,¹ as being here in safety. Now Abdera lies nearer to the Hellespont than the Strymon and Eion, where they say that he took ship.

121. As for the Greeks, not being able to take Andros they betook themselves to Carystus, and having laid it waste they returned to Salamis. First of all they set apart for the gods, among other firstfruits, three Phoenician triremes, one to be dedicated at the Isthmus, where it was till my lifetime, the second at Sunium, and the third for Aias at Salamis where they were. After that, they divided the spoil and sent the firstfruits of it to Delphi; whereof was made a man's image twelve cubits high, holding in his hand the figure-head of a ship; this stood in the same place as the golden statue of Alexander the Macedonian.

122. Having sent the firstfruits to Delphi the Greeks inquired in common of the god, if the firstfruits that he had received were of full measure and if he was content therewith; whereat he said that this was so as touching what he received from all other Greeks, but not from the Aeginetans; of these he demanded the victor's prize for the sea-fight of Salamis. When the Aeginetans learnt that, they dedicated three golden stars that are set on a bronze mast, in the angle, nearest to Croesus' bowl.

123. After the division of the spoil, the Greeks sailed to the Isthmus, there to award the prize of excellence to him who had shown himself most worthy of it in that war. But when the admirals came and gave their divers votes at the altar of Poseidon, to judge who was first and who second among them, each of them there voted for himself, supposing himself to have done the best service, but the greater part of them united in giving the second place to Themistocles. So they each gained but one vote, but Themistocles far outstripped them in votes for the second place.

121. The Greeks were too jealous to adjudge the prize, and sailed away each to his own place, leaving the matter doubtful; nevertheless, Themistocles was cried up, and all Hellas glorified him for the wisest man by far of the Greeks. But because he had not received from them that fought at Salamis the honour due to his pre-eminence, immediately afterwards he betook himself to Lacedaemon, that he might receive honour there; and the Lacedaemonians made him welcome and paid him high honour. They bestowed on Eurybiades a crown of olive as the reward of excellence, and another such crown on Themistocles for his wisdom and cleverness; and they gave him the finest chariot in Sparta; and with many words of praise, they sent him on his homeward way with the three hundred picked men of Sparta who are called Knights to escort him as far as the borders of Tegea. Themistocles was the only man of whom I have heard to whom the Spartans gave this escort.

125. But when Themistocles returned to Athens from Lacedaemon, Timodemus of Aphidnae, who was one of Themistocles' enemies but a man in no-wise notable, was crazed with envy and spoke bitterly to Themistocles of his visit to Lacedaemon, saying that the honours he had from the Lacedaemonians were paid him for Athens' sake and not for his own. This he would continually be saying; till Themistocles replied, "This is the truth of the matter—had I been of Belbina¹ I had not been thus honoured by the Spartans; nor had you, sirrah, for all you are of Athens." Such was the end of that business.

126. Artabazus son of Pharnaces, who was already a notable man among the Persians and grew to be yet more so by the Plataean business, escorted the king as far as the passage with sixty thousand men of the army that Mardonius had chosen. Xerxes being now in Asia, when Artabazus came near Pallene in his return (for Mardonius was wintering in Thessaly and Macedonia and making no haste to come to the rest of his army), he thought it right that he should enslave the people of Potidaea, whom he found in revolt. For the king having marched away past the town and the Persian fleet taken flight from Salamis, Potidaea had openly revolted from the foreigners; and so too had the rest of the people of Pallene.

127. Thereupon Artabazus laid siege to Potidaea; and suspecting that Olynthus too was plotting revolt from the king, he laid siege to it also, the town being held by Bottiaeans who had been driven from the Thermaic gulf by the Macedonians. Having besieged and taken Olynthus, he brought these men to a lake and there cut their throats, and delivered their city over to the charge of Critobulus of Torone and the Chalcidian people; and thus the Chalcidians gained possession of Olynthus.

128. Having taken Olynthus, Artabazus was instant in dealing with Potidaea; and his zeal was aided by Timoxenus the general of the Scio-naeans, who agreed to betray the place to him; I know not how the agreement was first made, nothing being told thereof; but the end was as I will now show. Whenever Timoxenus wrote a letter for sending to Artabazus, or Artabazus to Timoxenus, they would wrap it round the shaft of an arrow at the notches¹ and put feathers to the letter, and shoot it to a place whereon they had agreed. But Timoxenus' plot to betray Potidaea was discovered; for Artabazus in shooting an arrow to the place agreed upon, missed it and hit the shoulder of a man of Potidaea; and a throng gathering quickly round the man when he was struck (which is a thing that ever happens in war), they straightway took the arrow and found the letter and carried it to their generals, the rest of their allies of Pallene being also there present. The generals read the letter and perceived who was the traitor, but they resolved for Scione's sake that they would not smite Timoxenus to the earth with a charge of treason, lest so the people of Scione should ever after be called traitors.

129. Thus was Timoxenus' treachery brought to light. But when Artabazus had besieged Potidaea for three months, there was a great ebb-tide in the sea, lasting for a long while, and when the foreigners saw that the sea was turned to a marsh they made to pass over it into Pallene. But when they had made their way over two fifths of it and three yet remained to cross ere they could be in Pallene, there came a great flood-tide, higher, as the people of the place say, than any one of the many that had been before; and some of them that knew not how to swim were drowned, and those that knew were slain by the Potidaeans, who came among them in boats. The Potidaeans say that the cause of the high sea and flood and the Persian disaster lay herein, that those same Persians who now perished in the sea had profaned the temple and the image of Poseidon that was in the suburb of the city; and I think that in saying that this was the cause they say rightly. They that escaped alive were led away by Artabazus to Mardonius in Thessaly. Thus fared these men, who had been the king's escort.

130. All that was left of Xerxes' fleet, having in its flight from Salamis touched the coast of Asia and ferried the king and his army over from the Chersonese to Abydos, wintered at Cyme. Then early in the first dawn of spring they mustered at Samos, where some of the ships had wintered; the most of their fighting men were Persians and Medes. Mardontes son of Bagaeus and Artayntes son of Artachiaees came to be their admirals, and Artayntes chose also his own nephew Ithamitres to have a share in the command. But by reason of the heavy blow dealt them they went no further out to sea westwards, nor was any man instant that they should so do, but they lay off Samos keeping watch against a revolt in Ionia, the whole number of their ships, Ionian and other, being three hundred; nor in truth did they expect that the Greeks would come to Ionia, but rather that they would be content to guard their own country; thus they inferred, because the Greeks had not pursued them when they fled from Salamis, but had been glad to be quit of them. In regard to the sea, the Persians were at heart beaten men, but they supposed that on land Mardonius would easily prevail. So they were at Samos, and there planned to do what harm they could to their enemies, and to listen the while for tidings of how it went with Mardonius.

131. But as for the Greeks, the coming of spring and Mardonius' being in Thessaly moved them to action. They had not yet begun the mustering of their army, but their fleet, an hundred and ten ships, came to Aegina; and their general and admiral was Leutychides son of Menares, tracing his lineage from son to father through Hegesilaus, Hippocratides, Leutychides, Anaxilaus, Archidemus, Anaxandrides, Theopompus, Nicandrus, Charilaus, Eunomus, Polydectes, Prytanis, Euryphon, Procles, Aristodemus, Aristomachus, Cleodaeus, to Hyllus who was the son of Heracles; he was of the second royal house.¹ All the aforesaid had been kings of Sparta, save the seven named first after Leutychides. The general of the Athenians was Xanthippus son of Ariphron.

132. When all the ships were arrived at Aegina, there came to the Greek quarters messengers from the Ionians, the same who a little while before that had gone to Sparta and entreated the Lacedaemonians to free Ionia; of whom one was Herodotus the son of Basileides.² These, who at first were seven, made a faction and conspired to slay Strattis, the despot of Chios; but when their conspiracy became known, one of the accomplices having revealed their enterprise, the six that remained got them privily out of Chios, whence they went to Sparta and now to Aegina, entreating the Greeks to sail to Ionia. The Greeks brought them as far as Delos, and that not readily; for they feared all that lay beyond, having no knowledge of those parts, and thinking that armed men were everywhere; and they supposed that Samos was no nearer to them than the Pillars of Heracles.¹ So it fell out that the foreigners were too disheartened to dare to sail farther west than Samos, while at the same time the Greeks dared go at the Chians' request no farther east than Delos; thus fear kept the middle space between them.

133. The Greeks, then, sailed to Delos, and Mardonius wintered in Thessaly. Having here his headquarters he sent thence a man of Europus called Mys to visit the places of divination, charging him to inquire of all the oracles whereof he could make trial. What it was that he desired to learn from the oracles when he gave this charge, I cannot say, for none tells of it; but I suppose that he sent to inquire concerning his present business, and that alone.

134. This man Mys is known to have gone to Lebadea and to have bribed a man of the country to go down into the cave of Trophonius,² and to have gone to the place of divination at Abae in Phocis; to Thebes too he first went, where he inquired of Ismenian Apollo (sacrifice is there the way of divination, even as at Olympia), and moreover bribed one that was no Theban but a stranger to lie down to sleep in the shrine of Amphiaraus. No Theban may seek a prophecy there; for Amphiaraus bade them by an oracle to choose which of the two they would and forgo the other, and take him either for their prophet or for their ally; and they chose that he should be their ally; wherefore no Theban may lay him down to sleep in that place.

135. But at this time there happened, as the Thebans say, a thing at which I marvel greatly. It would seem that this man Mys of Europus came in his wanderings among the places of divination to the precinct of Ptoan Apollo. This temple is called Ptoum,¹ and belongs to the Thebans; it lies by a hill, above the lake Copaïs, very near to the town Acraephia. When the man called Mys entered into this temple, three men of the town following him that were chosen on the state's behalf to write down the oracles that should be given, straightway the diviner prophesied in a foreign tongue. The Thebans that followed him stood astonished to hear a strange language instead of Greek, and knew not what this present matter might be; but Mys of Europus snatched from them the tablet that they carried and wrote on it that which was spoken by the prophet, saying that the words of the oracle were Carian; and having written all down he went away back to Thessaly.

136. Mardonius read whatever was said in the oracles; and presently he sent a messenger to Athens,

Stein prefers to read Alabastra, a town which Herodotus according to Stephanus of Byzantium, places in Phrygia.

Alexander, a Macedonian, son of Amyntas; him he sent, partly because the Persians were akin to him; for Bubares, a Persian, had taken to wife Gygaëa Alexander's sister and Amyntas' daughter, who had borne to him that Amyntas of Asia who was called by the name of his mother's father, and to whom the king gave Alabanda¹ a great city in Phrygia for his dwelling; and partly he sent him because he learnt that Alexander was a protector and benefactor to the Athenians. It was thus that he supposed he could best gain the Athenians for his allies, of whom he heard that they were a numerous and valiant people, and knew that they had been the chief authors of the calamities which had befallen the Persians at sea. If he gained their friendship he looked to be easily master of the seas, as truly he would have been; and on land he supposed himself to be by much the stronger; so he reckoned that thus he would have the upper hand of the Greeks. Peradventure this was the prediction of the oracles, counselling him to make the Athenian his ally, and it was in obedience to this that he sent his messenger.

137. This Alexander was seventh in descent from Perdiccas, who got for himself the despotism of Macedonia in the way that I will show. Three brothers of the lineage of Temenus came as banished men from Argos² to Illyria, Gauanes and Aeropus and Perdiccas; and from Illyria they crossed over into the highlands of Macedonia till they came to the town Lebaea. There they served for wages as thralls in the king's household, one tending horses and another oxen, and Perdiccas, who was the youngest, the lesser flocks. Now the king's wife cooked their food for them; for in old times the ruling houses among men, and not the commonalty alone, were lacking in wealth; and whenever she baked bread, the loaf of the thrall Perdiccas grew double in bigness. Seeing that this ever happened, she told her husband; and it seemed to him when he heard it that this was a portent, signifying some great matter. So he sent for his thralls and bade them depart out of his territory. They said it was but just that they should have their wages ere they departed; whereupon the king, when they spoke of wages, was moved to foolishness, and said, "That is the wage you merit, and it is that I give you," pointing to the sunlight that shone down the smoke-vent into the house. Gauanes and Aeropus, who were the elder, stood astonished when they heard that; but the boy said, "We accept what you give, O king," and with that he took a knife that he had upon him and drew a line with it on the floor of the house round the sunlight¹; which done, he thrice gathered up the sunlight into the fold of his garment, and went his way with his companions.

138. So they departed; but one of them that sat by declared to the king what this was that the boy had done, and how it was of set purpose that the youngest of them had accepted the gift offered; which when the king heard, he was angered, and sent riders after them to slay them. But there is in that land a river, whereto the descendants from

¹ This was the fertile and beautiful valley in which stood Aegae or Edessa (modern Vodena), the ancient home of the Macedonian kings.

Argos of these men offer sacrifice, as their deliverer; this river, when the sons of Temenus had crossed it, rose in such flood that the riders could not cross. So the brothers came to another part of Macedonia and settled near the place called the garden of Midas son of Gordias,¹ wherein roses grow of themselves, each bearing sixty blossoms and of surpassing fragrance; in which garden, by the Macedonian story, Silenus² was taken captive; above it rises the mountain called Bermius, which none can ascend for the wintry cold. Thence they issued forth when they had won that country, and presently subdued also the rest of Macedonia.

139. From that Perdiccas Alexander was descended, being the son of Amyntas, who was the son of Alcetes; Alcetes' father was Aeropus, and his was Philippos; Philippos' father was Argæus, and his again was Perdiccas, who won that lordship.

140. Such was the lineage of Alexander son of Amyntas; who, when he came to Athens from Mardonius who had sent him, spoke on this wise. "This, Athenians, is what Mardonius says to you:—There is a message come to me from the king, saying, 'I forgive the Athenians all the offences which they have committed against me; and now, Mardonius, I bid you do this:—Give them back their territory, and let them choose more for themselves besides, wheresoever they will, and dwell under their own laws; and rebuild all their temples λωνταί γε ἔμοι ὁμολογέειν, ἀνόρθωσον, ὅσα ἐγὼ ἐνέπρησα.' τούτων δὲ ἀπιγμένων ἀναγκαίως ἔχει μοι ποίειν ταῦτα, ἣν μὴ τὸ ὑμέτερον αἴτιον γένηται. λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν τάδε. νῦν τί μαίνεσθε πόλεμον βασιλείᾳ ἀειρόμενοι ; οὔτε γὰρ ἂν ὑπερβάλοισθε οὔτε οἰοί τε ἐστὲ ἀντέχειν τὸν πάντα χρόνον. εἴδετε μὲν γὰρ τῆς Ξέρξεω στρατηλασίας τὸ πλῆθος καὶ τὰ ἔργα, πυνθάνεσθε δὲ καὶ τὴν νῦν παρ' ἔμοι ἐοῦσαν δύναμιν ὥστε καὶ ἡν ἡμέας ὑπερβάλησθε καὶ νικήσητε, τοῦ περ ὑμῖν οὔδεμία ἐλπίς εἴ περ εὖ φρονέετε, ἄλλη παρέσται πολλαπλησίη. μὴ ὦν βούλεσθε παρισσούμενοι βασιλείᾳ στέρεσθαι μὲν τῆς χώρας, θέειν δὲ αἰεὶ περὶ ὑμέων αὐτῶν, ἀλλὰ καταλύσασθε παρέχει δὲ ὑμῖν κάλλιστα καταλύσασθαι, βασιλέος ταύτῃ ὀρμημένου. ἔστε ἐλεύθεροι, ἡμῖν ὁμαιχμίνην συνθέμενοι ἄνευ τε δόλου καὶ ἀπάτης. that I burnt, if they will make a covenant with me." This being the message, needs must that I obey it (says Mardonius), unless you take it upon you to hinder me. And this I say to you:—Why are you so mad as to wage war against the king? you cannot overcome him, nor can you resist him for ever. For the multitude of Xerxes' host, and what they did, you have seen, and you have heard of the power that I now have with me; so that even if you overcome and conquer us (whereof, if you be in your right minds, you can have no hope), yet there will come another host many times as great as this. Be not then minded to match yourselves against the king, and thereby lose your land and ever be yourselves in jeopardy, but make peace; which you can most honourably do, the king being that way inclined; keep your freedom, and agree to be our brothers in arms in all faith and honesty—This, Athenians, is the message which Mardonius charges me to give you. For my own part I will say nothing of the goodwill that I have towards you, for it would not be the first that you have learnt of that; but I entreat you to follow Mardonius' counsel. Well I see that you will not have power to wage war against Xerxes for ever; did I see such power in you, I had never come to you with such language as this; for the king's might is greater than human, and his arm is long. If therefore you will not straightway agree with them, when the conditions which they offer you, whereon they are ready to agree, are so great, I fear what may befall you; for of all the allies you dwell most in the very path of the war, and you alone will never escape destruction, your country being marked out for a battlefield. Nay, follow his counsel, for it is not to be lightly regarded by you that you are the only men in Hellas whose offences the great king is ready to forgive and whose friend he would be."

141. Thus spoke Alexander. But the Lacedaemonians had heard that Alexander was come to Athens to bring the Athenians to an agreement with the foreigner; and remembering the oracles, how that they themselves with the rest of the Dorians must be driven out of the Peloponnese by the Medes and the Athenians, they were greatly afraid lest the Athenians should agree with the Persian, and they straightway resolved that they would send envoys. Moreover it so fell out for both, that they made their entry at one and the same time; for the Athenians delayed, and tarried for them, being well assured that the Lacedaemonians were like to hear that the messenger was come from the Persians for an agreement; and they had heard that the Lacedaemonians would send their envoys with all speed; therefore it was of set purpose that they did it, that they might make their will known to the Lacedaemonians.

142. So when Alexander had made an end of speaking, the envoys from Sparta took up the tale, and said, "We on our part are sent by the Lacedaemonians to entreat you to do nought hurtful to Hellas and accept no offer from the foreigner. That were a thing unjust and dishonourable for any Greek, but for you most of all, on many counts; it was you who stirred up this war, by no desire of ours, and your territory was first the stake of that battle, wherein all Hellas is now engaged; and setting that apart, it is a thing not to be borne that not all this alone but slavery too should be brought upon the Greeks by you Athenians, who have ever of old been known for givers of freedom to many. Nevertheless we grieve with you in your afflictions, for that now you have lost two harvests and your substance has been for a long time wasted; in requital wherefor the Lacedaemonians and their allies declare that they will nourish your women and all of your households that are unserviceable for war, so long as this war shall last. But let not Alexander the Macedonian win you with his smooth-tongued praise of Mardonius' counsel. It is his business to follow that counsel, for as he is a despot so must he be the despot's fellow-worker; but it is not your business, if you be men rightly minded; for you know, that in foreigners there is no faith nor truth." Thus spoke the envoys.

143. But to Alexander the Athenians thus replied: "We know of ourselves that the power of the Mede is many times greater than ours; there is no need to taunt us with that. Nevertheless in our zeal for freedom we will defend ourselves to the best of our ability. But as touching agreements with the foreigner, do not you essay to persuade us thereto, nor will we consent; and now carry this answer back to Mardonius from the Athenians, that as long as the sun holds the course whereby he now goes, we will make no agreement with Xerxes; but we will fight against him without ceasing, trusting in the aid of the gods and the heroes whom he has set at nought and burnt their houses and their adornments. To you we say, come no more to Athenians with such a plea, nor under the semblance of rendering us a service counsel us to do wickedly; for we would not that you who are our friend and protector should suffer any harm at Athenian hands."

144. Such was their answer to Alexander; but to the Spartan envoys they said, "It was most human that the Lacedaemonians should fear our making an agreement with the foreigner; but we think you do basely to be afraid, knowing the Athenian temper to be such that there is nowhere on earth such store of gold or such territory of surpassing fairness and excellence that the gift of it should win us to take the Persian part and enslave Hellas. For there are many great reasons why we should not do this, even if we so desired; first and chiefest, the burning and destruction of the adornments and temples of our gods, whom we are constrained to avenge to the uttermost rather than make covenants with the doer of these things, and next the kinship of all Greeks in blood and speech, and the shrines of gods and the sacrifices that we have in common, and the likeness of our way of life, to all which it would ill beseem Athenians to be false. Know this now, if you knew it not before, that as long as one Athenian is left alive we will make no agreement with Xerxes. Nevertheless we thank you for your forethought concerning us, in that you have so provided for our wasted state that you offer to nourish our households. For your part, you have given us full measure of kindness; yet for ourselves, we will make shift to endure as best we may, and not be burdensome to you. But now, seeing that this is so, send your army with all speed; for as we guess, the foreigner will be upon us and invading our country in no long time, but as soon as ever the message comes to him that we will do nothing that he requires of us; wherefore, ere he comes into Attica, now is the time for us to march first into Boeotia." At this reply of the Athenians the envoys returned back to Sparta.

BOOK IX

1. Mardonius, when Alexander returned and told him what he had heard from the Athenians, set forth from Thessaly and led his army with all zeal against Athens¹; and to whatsoever country he came he took its people along with him. The rulers of Thessaly repented no whit of what they had already done, and were but readier than before to further his march; and Thorax of Larissa, who had aided to give Xerxes safe-conduct in his flight, did now without disguise open a passage for Mardonius into Hellas.

2. But when the army in its march was come into Bocotia, the Thebans sought to stay Mardonius, advising him that he could find no country better fitted than theirs for encampment; he should not (they pleaded) go further, but rather halt there and so act as to subdue all Hellas without fighting. For as long as the Greeks who before had been of the same way of thinking remained in accord, it would be a hard matter even for the whole world to overcome them by force of arms; "but if you do as we advise," said the Thebans as they spoke, "you will without trouble be master of all their counsels of battle. Send money to the men that have power in their cities, and thereby you will divide Hellas against τοὺς μὴ τὰ σὰ φρονέοντας ῥηιδίως μετὰ τῶν στασιωτῶν καταστρέψαι.”

3. Οἱ μὲν ταῦτα συνεβούλευον, ὁ δὲ οὐκ ἐπέθετο, ἀλλὰ οἱ δεινὸς ἐνέστακτο ἱμερος τὰς Ἀθήνας δεύτερα εἰλεῖν, ἅμα μὲν ὑπ’ ἀγνωμοσύνης, ἅμα δὲ πυρσοῖσι διὰ νήσων ἐδόκει βασιλεῖ δηλώσειν εἶναι ἐν Σάρδισι ὅτι ἔχοι Ἀθήνας· ὅς οὐδὲ τότε ἀπικόμενος ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν εὗρε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ἀλλ’ ἐν τε Σαλαμῖνι τοὺς πλείστους ἐπυρθάνετο εἶναι ἐν τε τῇσι νηυσί, αἰρέει τε ἔρημον τὸ ἄστυ. ἡ δὲ βασιλέος αἵρεσις ἐς τὴν ὑστέρην τὴν Μαρδονίου ἐπιστρατηίην δεκάμηνος ἐγένετο.

4. Ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐν Ἀθήνησι ἐγένετο ὁ Μαρδόνιος, πέμπει ἐς Σαλαμῖνα Μουρυχίδην ἄνδρα Ἑλλησπόντιον φέροντα τοὺς αὐτοὺς λόγους τοὺς καὶ Ἀλέξανδρος ὁ Μακεδὼν τοῖσι Ἀθηναίοισι διεπόρθμευσε. ταῦτα δὲ τὸ δεύτερον ἀπέστελλε προέχων μὲν τῶν Ἀθηναίων οὐ φιλίας γνώμας, ἐλπίζων δὲ σφέας ὑπήσειν τῆς ἀγνωμοσύνης, ὥς δοριαλώτου εἰούσης τῆς Ἀττικῆς χώρης καὶ εἰούσης ὑπ’ ἐωυτῷ.

5. Τούτων μὲν εἵνεκα ἀπέπεμψε Μουρυχίδην ἐς Σαλαμῖνα, ὁ δὲ ἀπικόμενος ἐπὶ τὴν βουλὴν ἔλεγε τὰ παρὰ Μαρδονίου. τῶν δὲ βουλευτέων Λυκίδης εἶπε γνώμην ὥς ἐδόκει ἀμεινὸν εἶναι δεξαμένους τὸν λόγον, τὸν σφί Μουρυχίδης προφέρει, ἐξενεῖκαι ἐς τὸν δῆμον. ὁ μὲν δὴ ταύτην τὴν γνώμην ἀπεφαίνετο, εἴτε δὴ δεδεγμένος χρήματα παρὰ Μαρδονίου, εἴτε καὶ ταῦτά οἱ ἐάνδανε· Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ αὐτίκα δεινὸν ποιησάμενοι οἳ τε ἐκ τῆς βουλῆς καὶ οἱ ἔξωθεν ὥς ἐπύθοντο, περι-itself; and after that, with your partisans to aid, you will easily subdue those who are your adversaries."

3. Such was their counsel, but he would not follow it; rather he was imbued with a wondrous desire to take Athens once more; this was partly of mere perversity, and partly because he thought to signify to the king at Sardis by a line of beacons across the islands that he held Athens. Yet on his coming to Attica he found the Athenians no more there than before, but, as he learnt, the most of them were on shipboard at Salamis; and he took the city, but no men therein. There were ten months between the king's taking of the place and the later invasion of Mardonius.

4. When Mardonius came to Athens, he sent to Salamis one Murychides, a man of the Hellespont, bearing the same offer as Alexander the Macedonian had ferried across to the Athenians. He sent this the second time because, albeit he knew already the Athenians' unfriendly purpose, he expected that they would abate their stiff-neckedness now that Attica was the captive of his spear and lay at his mercy.

5. For this reason he sent Murychides to Salamis, who came before the council and told them Mardonius' message. Then Lycidas, one of the councillors, gave it for his opinion that it seemed to him best to receive the offer brought to them by Murychides and lay it before the people. This was the opinion which he declared, either because he had been bribed by Mardonius, or because the plan pleased him; but the Athenians in the council were very wroth, and so too when they heard of it were they that were outside; and they made a ring στάντες Λυκίδην κατέλευσαν βάλλοντες, τὸν δὲ Ἑλλησπόντιον Μουρυχίδην ἀπέπεμψαν ἰσινέα. γενομένου δὲ θορύβου ἐν τῇ Σαλαμῖνι περὶ τὸν Λυκίδην, πυνθάνονται τὸ γινόμενον αἱ γυναῖκες τῶν Ἀθηναίων, διακελευσαμένη δὲ γυνὴ γυναικὶ καὶ παραλαβοῦσα ἐπὶ τὴν Λυκίδεω οἰκίην ἦσαν αὐτοκελές, καὶ κατὰ μὲν ἔλευσαν αὐτοῦ τὴν γυναῖκα κατὰ δὲ τὰ τέκνα.

6. Ἐς δὲ τὴν Σαλαμῖνα διέβησαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ὧδε. ἕως μὲν προσεδέκοντο ἐκ τῆς Πελοποννήσου στρατὸν ἥξειν τιμωρήσονται σφί, οἱ δὲ ἔμενον ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ· ἐπεὶ δὲ οἱ μὲν μακρότερα καὶ σχολαίτερα ἐποίησαν, ὁ δὲ ἐπιὼν καὶ δὴ ἐν τῇ Βοιωτῇ ἐλέγετο εἶναι, οὕτω δὴ ὑπεξεκομίσαντό τε πάντα καὶ αὐτοὶ διέβησαν ἐς Σαλαμῖνα, ἐς Λακεδαίμονά τε ἔπεμπον ἀγγέλους ἅμα μὲν μεμψομένους τοῖσι Λακεδαιμονίοισι ὅτι περιείδον ἐμβαλόντα τὸν βάρβαρον ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἀλλ' οὐ μετὰ σφέων ἠντίασαν ἐς τὴν Βοιωτίν, ἅμα δὲ ὑπομνήσοντας ὅσα σφί ὑπέσχετο ὁ Πέρσης μεταβαλοῦσι δώσειν, προεῖπαί τε ὅτι εἰ μὴ ἀμυνεῦσι Ἀθηναίοισι, ὥς καὶ αὐτοὶ τινα ἀλεωρὴν εὐρήσονται.

7. Οἱ γὰρ δὴ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ὄρταζόν τε τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον καὶ σφί ἦν Ἱακίνθια, περὶ πλείστου δ' ἤγον τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ πορσύνειν· ἅμα δὲ τὸ τεῖχος σφί, τὸ ἐν τῷ Ἰσθμῷ ἐτείχεον, καὶ ἤδη ἐπάλξις ἐλάμβανε. ὥς δὲ ἀπίκοντο ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα οἱ ἄγγελοι οἱ ἀπ' Ἀθηνέων, ἅμα ἀγόμενοι ἐκ τε Μεγάρων ἀγγέλους καὶ ἐκ Πλαταιέων, ἔλεγον round Lycidas and stoned him to death. But they suffered Murychides the Hellespontian to depart unharmed. There was much noise at Salamis over the business of Lycidas; and when the Athenian women learnt what was afoot, one calling to another and bidding her follow, they went of their own motion to the house of Lycidas, and stoned to death his wife and his children.

6. Now this was how the Athenians had passed over to Salamis. As long as they expected that the Peloponnesian army would come to their aid, so long they abode in Attica. But when the Peloponnesians were ever longer and slower in action, and the invader was said to be already in Boeotia, they did then convey all their goods out of harm's way and themselves crossed over to Salamis; and they sent envoys to Lacedaemon, who should upbraid the Lacedaemonians for suffering the foreigner to invade Attica and not meeting him in Boeotia with the Athenians to aid; and should bid the Lacedaemonians withal remember what promises the Persian had made to Athens if she would change sides, and warn them that the Athenians would devise some succour for themselves if the Lacedaemonians sent them no help.

7. For the Lacedaemonians were at this time holiday-making, keeping the festival of Hyacinthus,¹ and their chiefest care was to give the god his due; moreover, the wall that they were building on the Isthmus was by now even getting its battlements. When the Athenian envoys were arrived at Lacedaemon, bringing with them envoys from Megara and Plataeae, they came before the ephors and said : "The Athenians have sent us with this message : The king of the Medes is ready to give us back our country, and to make us his confederates, equal in right and standing, in all honour and honesty, and to give us withal whatever land we ourselves may choose besides our own. But we, for that we would not sin against Zeus the god of Hellas, and think it shame to betray Hellas, have not consented, but refused, and this though the Greeks are dealing with us wrongfully and betraying us to our hurt, and though we know that it is rather for our advantage to make terms with the Persian than to wage war with him ; yet we will not make terms with him, of our own free will. Thus for our part we act honestly by the Greeks ; but what of you, who once were in great dread lest we should make terms with the Persian ? Because now you have clear knowledge of our temper and are sure that we will never betray Hellas, and because the wall that you are building across the Isthmus is well-nigh finished, to-day you take no account of the Athenians, but have deserted us for all your promises that you would withstand the Persian in Boeotia, and have suffered the foreigner to march into Attica. For the nonce, then, the Athenians are angry with you ; for that which you have done beseems you ill. But now they pray you to send with us an army with all speed, that we may await the foreigner's onset in Attica ; for since we have lost Boeotia, in our own land the fittest battle-ground is the Thriasian plain."

8. When the ephors, it would seem, heard that, they delayed answering till the next day, and again ὕστεραίῃ ἐς τὴν ἐτέρην· τοῦτο καὶ ἐπὶ δέκα ἡμέρας ἐποίησιν, ἐξ ἡμέρης ἐς ἡμέρην ἀναβαλλόμενοι. ἐν δὲ τούτῳ τῷ χρόνῳ τὸν Ἴσθμὸν ἐτείχεον σπουδὴν ἔχοντες πολλὴν πάντες Πελοποννήσιοι, καὶ σφί ἦν πρὸς τέλει. οὐδ' ἔχω εἰπεῖν τὸ αἷτιον διότι ἀπικομένου μὲν Ἀλεξάνδρου τοῦ Μακεδόνος ἐς Ἀθήνας σπουδὴν μεγάλην ἐποιήσαντο μὴ μηδίσαι Ἀθηναίους, τότε δὲ ὥρην ἐποίησαντο οὐδεμίαν, ἄλλο γε ἢ ὅτι ὁ Ἴσθμός σφί ἐτετείχιστο καὶ ἐδόκεον Ἀθηναίων ἔτι δεῖσθαι οὐδέν· ὅτε δὲ Ἀλέξανδρος ἀπὶκετο ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν, οὐκ ἄπετετείχιστο, ἐργάζοντο δὲ μεγάλως καταρρωδηκότες τοὺς Πέρσας.

10. Ὁ μὲν σφί ταῦτα συνεβούλευε· οἱ δὲ φρενὶ λαβύντες τὸν λόγον αὐτίκα, φράσαντε· οὐδὲν τοῖσι ἀγγέλοισι τοῖσι ἀπιγμένοισι ἀπὸ τῶν πολίων, νυκτὸς ἔτι ἐκπέμπουσι πεντακισχιλίου Σπαρτιητέων καὶ ἑπτὰ περὶ ἕκαστον τάξαντες

till the day after; and this they did for ten days, putting off from day to day. In the meantime all the Peloponnesians were fortifying the Isthmus with might and main, and they had the work well-nigh done. Nor can I say why it was that when Alexander the Macedonian came to Athens¹ the Lacedaemonians were urgent that the Athenians should not take the Persian part, yet now made no account of that; except it was that now they had the Isthmus fortified and thought they had no more need of the Athenians, whereas when Alexander came to Attica their wall was not yet built, and they were working thereat in great fear of the Persians.

9. But the manner of their answering at last and sending the Spartan army was this: On the day before that hearing which should have been the last, Chileüs, a man of Tegea, who had more authority with the Lacedaemonians than any other of their guests, learnt from the ephors all that the Athenians had said; and having heard it he said, as the tale goes, to the ephors, "Sirs, this is how the matter stands: if the Athenians be our enemies and the foreigner's allies, then though you drive a strong wall across the Isthmus the Persian has an effectual door opened for passage into the Peloponnese. Nay, hearken to them, ere the Athenians take some new resolve that will bring calamity to Hellas."

10. This was the counsel he gave the ephors, who straightway took it to heart; saying no word to the envoys who were come from the cities, they bade march before dawn of day five thousand Spartans, with seven helots appointed to attend each of them;

and they gave the command to Pausanias son of Cleombrotus. The leader's place belonged of right to Pleistarchus son of Leonidas; but he was yet a boy, and Pausanias his guardian and cousin. For Cleombrotus, Pausanias' father and Anaxandrides' son, was no longer living; after he led away from the Isthmus the army which had built the wall, he lived but a little while ere his death. The reason of Cleombrotus' leading his army away from the Isthmus was that while he was offering sacrifice for victory over the Persian the sun was darkened in the heavens. Pausanias chose as his colleague a man of the same family,¹ Euryanax son of Dorieus.

11. So Pausanias' army had marched away from Sparta; but as soon as it was day, the envoys came before the ephors, having no knowledge of the expedition, and being minded themselves too to depart each one to his own place; and when they were come, "You Lacedaemonians," they said, "abide still where you are, keeping your Hyacinthia and disporting yourselves, leaving your allies deserted; the Athenians, for the wrong that you do them and for lack of allies, will make their peace with the Persian as best they can, and thereafter, seeing that plainly we shall be the king's allies, we will march with him against whatever land his men lead us. Then will you learn what the issue of this matter shall be for you." Thus spoke the envoys; and the ephors swore to them that they believed their army to be even now at Orestheum,² marching against the "strangers," as they called the foreigners. Having no knowledge of this, the envoys questioned them further as to what the tale might mean, and thereby learnt the whole truth; whereat they marvelled, and took the road with all speed after the army; and with them went likewise five thousand chosen men-at-arms of the Lacedaemonian countrymen.¹

12. So they made haste to reach the Isthmus. But the Argives had already promised Mardonius that they would hinder the Spartan from going out to war; and as soon as they were informed that Pausanias and his army had departed from Sparta, they sent as their herald to Attica the swiftest runner of long distances that they could find; who, when he came to Athens, spoke on this wise to Mardonius: "I am sent by the Argives to tell you that the young men have gone out from Lacedaemon to war, and that the Argives cannot stay them from so doing; wherefore, may fortune grant you good counsel."

13. So spoke the herald, and when Mardonius, desirous of remaining of it, he had held his hand, desiring to know the Athenians' plan and what they would do, and neither harmed nor harried the land of Attica, for he still ever supposed that they would make terms with him; but when he could not move them, and learnt all the truth of the matter, he drew off from before Pausanias' army ere it entered the Isthmus; but first he burnt Athens, and utterly overthrew and demolished whatever wall or house or temple was left standing. The reason of his marching away was, that Attica was no country for horsemen's work, and if he should be worsted in a battle there was no way of retreat save one so narrow that a few men could stay his passage.¹ Wherefore it was his plan to retreat to Thebes and do battle where he had a friendly city at his back and ground fitted for horsemen.

14. So Mardonius drew his men off, and when he had now set forth on his road there came a message that over and above the rest an advance guard of a thousand Lacedaemonians was arrived at Megara; at which hearing he took counsel how he might first make an end of these; and he turned about and led his army against Megara, his horse going first and overrunning the lands of that city. That was the most westerly place in Europe to which this Persian armament attained.

15. Presently there came a message to Mardonius that the Greeks were gathered together on the Isthmus. Thereupon he marched back again through Decelea; for the rulers of Boeotia sent for those of the Asopus country that dwelt near, and these guided him to Sphendalae and thence to Tanagra, where he camped for the night; and on the next day he turned thence to Scolus, where he was in Theban territory. There he laid waste the lands of the Thebans, though they took the Persian part; not for any ill-will that he bore them, but because sheer necessity drove him to make a strong place for his army, and to have this for a refuge if the fortune of battle were other than he desired. His army covered the ground from Erythrae past Hysiae and reached unto the lands of Plataeae, where it lay ranked by the Asopus river. I say not that the walled camp which he made was so great; each side of it was of a length of about ten furlongs.

16. While the foreigners were employed about this work, Attaginus son of Phrynon, a Theban, made great preparation and invited Mardonius with fifty who were the most notable of the Persians to be his guests at a banquet. They came as they were bidden; the dinner was given at Thebes. Now here follows the end of that matter, which was told me by Thersandrus of Orchomenus, one of the most notable men of that place. Thersandrus too (he said) was bidden to this dinner, and fifty Thebans besides; and Attaginus made them sit, not each man by himself, but on each couch a Persian and a Theban together. Now after dinner while they drank one with another, the Persian that sat with him asked Thersandrus in the Greek tongue of what country he was; and Thersandrus answered that he was of Orchomenus. Then said the Persian: "Since now you have eaten at the board with me and drunk with me thereafter, I would fain leave some record of my thought, that you yourself may have such knowledge as to take fitting counsel for your safety. See you these Persians at the banquet, and that host which we left encamped by the river side? of all these in a little while you shall see but a little remnant left alive"; and as he said this, the Persian wept bitterly. Marvelling at this saying, Thersandrus answered: "Must you not then tell this to Mardonius and those honourable Persians that are with him?" "Sir," said the Persian, "that which heaven wills to send no man can turn aside; for even truth finds none to believe it. What I have said is known to many of us Persians; but we follow, in the bonds of necessity. And it is the hatefulest of all human sorrows to have much knowledge and no power." This tale I heard from Thersandrus of Orchomenus; who said to me, moreover, that he had straightway told it to others before the fight of Plataeae.

17. So Mardonius was making his encampment in Boeotia; all the Greeks of that region who took the Persian part furnished fighting men, and they joined with him in his attack upon Athens, except only the Phocians: as to taking the Persian part, that they did in good sooth, albeit not willingly but of necessity. But when a few days were past after the Persians' coming to Thebes, there came a thousand Phocian men-at-arms, led by Harmocydes, the most notable of their countrymen. These also being arrived at Thebes, Mardonius sent horsemen and bade the Phocians take their station on the plain by themselves. When they had so done, straightway appeared the whole of the Persian cavalry; and presently it was bruited about through all the Greek army that was with Mardonius, and likewise among the Phocians themselves, that Mardonius would shoot them to death. Then their general Harmocydes exhorted them: "Men of Phocis," he said, "seeing it is plain that death at these fellows' hands stares us in the face (we being, as I surmise, maligned by the Thessalians); now it is meet for

18. "Ὁ μὲν ταῦτα παραίνεε· οἱ δὲ ἱππῆες ἐπεὶ σφῆας ἐκυκλώσαντο, ἐπήλαυνον ὡς ἀπολέοντες, καὶ δὴ διετείνοντο τὰ βέλεα ὡς ἀπήσποντες, καὶ κού τις καὶ ἀπήκε. καὶ οἱ ἀντίοι ἔστησαν πάντῃ συστρέψαντες ἑωυτοὺς καὶ πυκνώσαντες ὡς μάλιστα. ἐνθαῦτα οἱ ἱππῶται ὑπέστρεφον καὶ ἀπήλαυνον ὀπίσω. οὐκ ἔχω δ' ἀτρεκέως εἰπεῖν οὔτε εἰ ἦλθον μὲν ἀπολέοντες τοὺς Φωκέας δεηθέντων Θεσσαλῶν, ἐπεὶ δὲ ὦρον πρὸς ἀλέξῃσιν τραπομένους, δείσαντες μὴ καὶ σφίσι γένηται τρώματα, οὕτω δὴ ἀπήλαυνον ὀπίσω· ὡς γὰρ σφί ἐνετείλατο Μαρδόνιος· οὐτ' εἰ αὐτῶν πειρηθῆναι ἠθέλησε εἰ τι ἀλκῆς μετέχουσι. ὡς δὲ ὀπίσω ἀπήλασαν οἱ ἱππῶται, πέμψας Μαρδόνιος κήρυκα ἔλεγε τάδε. every one of you to play the man; for it is better to end our lives in action and fighting than tamely to suffer a shameful death. Nay, but we will teach them that they whose slaying they have devised are men of Hellas." Thus he exhorted them.

18. But when the horsemen had encircled the Phocians they rode at them as it were to slay them, and drew their bows to shoot, and 'tis like, that some did even shoot. The Phocians fronted them every way, drawing in together and closing their ranks to the best of their power; whereat the horsemen wheeled about and rode back and away. Now I cannot with exactness say if they came at the Thessalians' desire to slay the Phocians, but, when they saw the men preparing to defend themselves, feared lest they themselves should suffer some hurt, and so rode away back (for such was Mardonius' command),—or if Mardonius desired to test the Phocians' mettle. But when the horsemen had ridden away, Mardonius sent a herald, with this message: "Men of Phocis, be of good courage; for you have shown yourselves to be valiant men, and not as it was reported to me. And now push this war zealously forward; for you will outdo neither myself nor the king in the rendering of service."¹ Thus far went the Phocian business.

19. As for the Lacedaemonians, when they were come to the Isthmus, they encamped there. When the rest of the Peloponnesians who chose the better cause heard that, seeing the Spartans setting forth to war, they deemed it was not for them to be behind the Lacedaemonians in so doing. Wherefore they all marched from the Isthmus (the omens of sacrifice being favourable) and came to Eleusis; and when they had offered sacrifice there also and the omens were favourable, they held on their march further, having now the Athenians with them, who had crossed over from Salamis and joined with them at Eleusis. When they came (as it is said) to Erythrae in Boeotia, they learnt that the foreigners were encamped by the Asopus, and taking note of that they arrayed themselves over against the enemy on the lower hills of Cithaeron.

20. The Greeks not coming down into the plain, Mardonius sent against them all his horse, whose commander was Masistius (whom the Greeks call Macistius), a man much honoured among the Persians; he rode a Nesaeon horse that had a golden bit and was at all points gaily adorned. Thereupon the horsemen rode up to the Greeks and charged them by squadrons, doing them much hurt thereby and calling them women.

21. Now it chanced that the Megarians were posted in that part of the field which was openest to attack, and here the horsemen found the readiest approach. Wherefore, being hard pressed by the charges, the Megarians sent a herald to the generals of the Greeks, who came to them and thus spoke: "From the men of Megara to their allies: We cannot alone withstand the Persian horse (albeit we have till now held our ground with patience and valour, though hard pressed) in this post whereunto we were first appointed; and now be well assured that we will leave our post, except you send others to take our place therein." Thus the herald reported, and Pausanias inquired among the Greeks if any would offer themselves to go to that place and relieve the Megarians by holding the post. None other would go; but the Athenians took it upon themselves, even three hundred picked men of Athens, whose captain was Olympiodorus son of Lampon.

22. These were they who took it upon themselves, and were posted at Erythrae in advance of the whole Greek army; and they took with them the archers also. For a long time they fought; and the end of the battle was as I shall show. The horsemen charged by squadrons; and Masistius' horse, being at the head of the rest, was smitten in the side by an arrow, and rearing up in its pain it threw Masistius; who when he fell was straightway set upon by the Athenians. His horse they took then and there, and he himself was slain fighting, though at first they could not kill him; for the fashion of his armour was such, that he wore a purple tunic over a cuirass of golden scales that was within it; and it was all in vain that they smote at the cuirass, till someone saw what they did and stabbed him in the eye, so that he fell dead. But as chance would have it the rest of the horsemen knew nought of this; for they had not seen him fall from his horse, or die; and they wheeled about and rode back without perceiving what was done. But as soon as they halted they saw what they lacked, since there was none to order them; and when they perceived what had chanced, they gave each other the word, and all rode together to recover the dead body.

23. When the Athenians saw the horsemen riding at them, not by squadrons as before, but all together, they cried to the rest of the army for help. While all their foot was rallying to aid, there waxed a sharp fight over the dead body. As long as the three hundred stood alone, they had the worst of the battle by far, and were nigh leaving the dead man; but when the main body came to their aid, then it was the horsemen that could no longer hold their ground, nor avail to recover the dead man, but they lost others of their comrades too besides Masistius. They drew off therefore and halted about two furlongs off, where they consulted what they should do; and resolved, as there was none to lead them, to ride away to Mardonius.

24. When the cavalry returned to the camp, Mardonius and all the army made very great mourning for Masistius, cutting their own hair and the hair of their horses and beasts of burden, and lamenting loud and long; for the sound of it was heard over all Boeotia, inasmuch as a man was dead who was next to Mardonius most esteemed by all Persia and the king.

25. So the foreigners honoured Masistius' death after their manner; but the Greeks were much heartened by their withstanding and repelling of the horsemen. And first they laid the dead man on a cart and carried him about their ranks; and the body was worth the viewing, for stature and goodliness; wherefore they would even leave their ranks and come to view Masistius. Presently they resolved that they would march down to Plataeae; for they saw that the ground there was in all ways fitter by much for encampment than at Erythrae, and chiefly because it was better watered. To this place, and to the Gargaphian spring that was there, they resolved that they must betake themselves and encamp in their several battalions; and they took up their arms and marched along the lower slopes of Cithaeron past Hysiae to the lands of Plataeae, and when they were there they arrayed themselves nation by nation near the Gargaphian spring and the precinct of the hero Androcrates, among low hills and in a level country.

26. There, in the ordering of their battle, arose much dispute between the Tegeans and the Athenians; for each of them claimed that they should hold the second¹ wing of the army, justifying themselves by tales of deeds new and old. First said the Tegeans: "Of all the allies we have ever had the right to hold this post, in all campaigns ancient and late of the united Peloponnesian armies, ever since that time when the Heraclidae after Eurystheus' death essayed to return into the Peloponnese; that right we then gained, for the achievement which we will relate. When we mustered at the Isthmus for war, along with the Achaeans and Ionians who then dwelt in the Peloponnese, and encamped over against the returning exiles, then (it is said) Hyllus² proclaimed his counsel that army should not be risked against army in battle, but that that champion in the host of the Peloponnesians whom they chose for their best should fight with him in single combat on agreed conditions. The Peloponnesians resolving that this should be so, they swore a compact that if Hyllus should vanquish the Peloponnesian champion, the Heraclidae should return to the land of their fathers, but if he were himself vanquished, then contrariwise the Heraclidae should depart and lead their army away, and not seek to return to the Peloponnese till a hundred years were past. Then our general and king Echemus, son of Phegeus' son Eëropus, offered himself and was chosen out of all the allied host; and he fought that duel and slew Hyllus. For that feat of arms the Peloponnesians of that day granted us this also among other great privileges which we have never ceased to possess, that in all united campaigns we should ever lead the army's second wing. Now with you, men of Lacedaemon, we have no rivalry, but forbear and bid you choose the command of whichever wing you will; but this we say, that our place is at the head of the other, as ever aforetime. And setting aside that feat which we have related, we are worthier than the Athenians to hold that post; for many are the fields on which we have fought with happy event in regard to you, men of Lacedaemon, and others besides. It is just, therefore, that we and not the Athenians should hold the second wing; for never early or late have they achieved such feats of arms as we."

27. Thus they spoke; and thus the Athenians replied: "It is our belief that we are here gathered in concourse for battle with the foreigner, and not for discourses; but since the man of Tegea has made it his business to speak of all the valorous deeds, old and new, which either of our nations has at any time achieved, needs must that we prove to you how we, rather than Arcadians, have in virtue of our valour an hereditary right to the place of honour. men. Command us then, as knowing that we will obey." Thus the Athenians answered; and the whole army shouted aloud that the Athenians were worthier to hold the wing than the Arcadians. Thus the Athenians were preferred to the men of Tegea, and gained that place.

28. Presently the whole Greek army was arrayed as I shall show, both the later and the earliest comers. On the right wing were ten thousand Lacedaemonians; five thousand of these, who were Spartans, had a guard of thirty-five thousand light-armed helots, seven appointed for each man. The Spartans chose the Tegeans for their neighbours in the battle, both to do them honour, and for their valour; there were of these fifteen hundred men-at-arms. Next to these in the line were five thousand Corinthians, at whose desire Pausanias suffered the three hundred Potidaeans from Pallene then present to stand by them. Next to these were six hundred Arcadians from Orchomenus, and after them three thousand men of Sicyon. By these a thousand Troezenians were posted, and after them two hundred men of Lepreum, then four hundred from Mycenae and Tiryns, and next to them a thousand from Phlius. By these stood three hundred men of Hermione. Next to the men of Hermione were six hundred Eretrians and Styreans; next to them, four hundred Chalcidians; next again, five hundred Ampraciots. After these stood eight hundred Leucadians and Anactorians, and next to them two hundred from Pale in Cephallenia; after them in the array, five hundred Aeginetans; by them stood three thousand men of Megara, and next to these six hundred Plataeans. At the end, and first in the line, were the Athenians, on the left wing, eight thousand men; their general was Aristides son of Lysimachus.

29. All these, save the seven appointed to attend each Spartan, were men-at-arms, and the whole sum of them was thirty-eight thousand and seven hundred. This was the number of men-at-arms that mustered for war against the foreigner; as regarding the number of the light-armed men, there were in the Spartan array seven for each man-at-arms, that is, thirty-five thousand, and every one of these was equipped for war; the light-armed from the rest of Lacedaemon and Hellas were as one to every man-at-arms, and their number was thirty-four thousand and five hundred.

30 So the sum of all the light-armed men that were fighters was sixty-nine thousand and five hundred, and of the whole Greek army mustered at Plataeae, men-at-arms and light-armed fighting men together, eleven times ten thousand, lacking eighteen hundred. But the Thespians who were there present made up the full tale of an hundred and ten thousand; for the survivors¹ of the Thespians were also present with the army, eighteen hundred in number. These then were arrayed, and encamped by the Asopus.

mourning for Masistius, and heard that the Greeks were at Plataeae, they also came to the part of the Asopus river nearest to them. When they were there they were arrayed for battle by Mardonius as I shall show. He posted the Persians facing the Lacedaemonians; and seeing that the Persians by far outnumbered the Lacedaemonians, they were arrayed in deeper ranks and their line ran fronting the Tegeans also. In his arraying of them he chose out the strongest part of the Persians to set it over against the Lacedaemonians, and posted the weaker by them facing the Tegeans; this he did being so informed and taught by the Thebans. Next to the Persians he posted the Medes, fronting the men of Corinth and Potidaea and Orchomenus and Sicyon; next to the Medes, the Bactrians, fronting the men of Epidaurus, Troezen, Lepreum, Tiryns, Mycenae, and Phlius. After the Bactrians he set the Indians, fronting the men of Hermione and Eretria and Styra and Chalcis. Next to the Indians he posted the Sacae, fronting the Ampraciot, Anactorians, Leucadians, Paleans, and Aeginetans; next to the Sacae, and over against the Athenians and Plataeans and Megarians, the Boeotians and Locrians and Malians and Thessalians and the thousand that came from Phocis; for not all the Phocians took the Persian part, but some of them gave their aid to the Greek cause; these had been beleaguered on Parnassus, and issued out from thence to harry Mardonius' army and the Greeks that were with him. Besides these, he arrayed against the Athenians Macedonians also and the dwellers about Thessaly.

32. These that I have named were the greatest of the nations set in array by Mardonius that were of most note and account; but there was also in the army a mixed multitude of Phrygians, Thracians, Mysians, Paconians, and the rest, besides Ethiopians and the Egyptian swordsmen called Hermotybies and Calasiries,¹ who are the only fighting men in Egypt. These had been fighters on shipboard, till Mardonius while yet at Phalerum disembarked them from their ships; for the Egyptians were not appointed to serve in the land army which Xerxes led to Athens. Of the foreigners, then, there were three hundred thousand, as I have already shown; as for the Greek allies of Mardonius, none knows the number of them, for they were not counted; but as far as guessing may serve, I suppose them to have been mustered to the number of fifty thousand. These were the footmen that were set in array; the cavalry were separately ordered.

33. When they had all been arrayed in their nations and their battalions, on the second day thereafter both armies offered sacrifice. For the Greeks, Tisamenus it was that sacrificed; for he was with their army as a diviner; he was an Elean by birth, a Clytiad of the Iamid clan,² and the Lacedaemonians gave him the freedom of their city. For when Tisamenus was inquiring of the oracle at Delphi concerning issue, the priestess prophesied to him that he should win five great victories. Not under-which were found in all parts of Hellas. The Clytiadae were also Elean priests, but quite separate from the Iamidae; so Stein is probably right in bracketing Κλυτιάδην.

thereat they promised what Melampus demanded and were ready to give it to him. Thereupon, seeing their purpose changed, he asked yet more, and said that he would not do their will except they gave a third of their kingship to his brother Bias; and the Argives, driven thus into a strait, consented to that also.

35. Thus the Spartans too were so eagerly desirous of winning Tisamenus that they granted all his demand. When they had granted him this also, then did Tisamenus of Elis, now become a Spartan, ply his divination for them and aid them to win five very great victories. None on earth save Tisamenus and his brother ever became citizens of Sparta. Now the five victories were these: one, the first, this victory at Plataeae; next that which was won at Tegea over the Tegeans and Argives; after that, over all the Arcadians save the Mantineans at Dipaea; next, over the Messenians at Ithome; lastly, the victory at Tanagra over the Athenians and Argives, which was the last won of the five victories.¹

36. This Tisamenus had now been brought by the Spartans and was the diviner of the Greeks in the lands of Plataeae. Now the sacrifices boded good to the Greeks if they should but defend themselves, but evil if they should cross the Asopus and be the first to attack.

37. But Mardonius' sacrifices also boded nought to his liking if he should be zealous to attack first, and good if he should but defend himself; for he too used the Greek manner of sacrifice; Hegesistratus of Elis was his diviner, the most notable of the sons of Tellias. This man had been put in prison and doomed to die by the Spartans for the much harm that he had done them. Being in this evil case, inasmuch as he was in peril of his life and like to be very grievously maltreated ere his death, he did a deed well nigh past believing: being made fast in iron-bound stocks, he got an iron weapon that was brought in some wise into his prison, and straightway conceived a plan of such hardihood as we have never known; reckoning how best the rest of it might get free, he cut off his own foot at the instep. This done, he burrowed through the wall out of the way of the guards that kept ward over him, and so escaped to Tegea; all night he journeyed and all day he hid and lay close in the woods, till on the third night he came to Tegea, while all the people of Lacedaemon sought him; and they were greatly amazed, seeing the half of his foot cut off and lying there, but not being able to find the man himself. Thus did he then escape from the Lacedaemonians and take refuge in Tegea, which at that time was unfriendly to Lacedaemon; and after he was healed and had made himself a foot of wood, he declared himself an open enemy of the Lacedaemonians. Yet the enmity that he bore them brought him no good at the last; for they caught him at his divinations in Zacynthus, and slew him.

38. Howbeit, the death of Hegesistratus happened after the Plataean business; at the present he was by the Asopus, hired by Mardonius for no small wage, where he sacrificed and wrought zealously, both for the hatred he bore the Lacedaemonians, and for gain. But when no favourable omens for battle could be won either by the Persians themselves or by the Greeks that were with them (for they too had a diviner of their own, Hippomachus of Leucas), and the Greeks the while were ever flocking in and their army grew, Timagenides son of Herpys, a Theban, counselled Mardonius to guard the outlet of the pass over Cithaeron, telling him that the Greeks were ever flocking in daily and that he would thereby cut off many of them.

39. The armies had now lain over against each other for eight days when he gave this counsel. Mardonius perceived that the advice was good; and when night had fallen he sent his horsemen to the outlet of the pass over Cithaeron that leads towards Plataeae, which pass the Boeotians call the Three Heads, and the Athenians the Oaks' Heads. This despatch of the horsemen was no fruitless one; for they caught five hundred beasts of burden issuing into the low country, bringing provision from the Peloponnese for the army, and men that came with the waggons; having taken which quarry the Persians slew without mercy, sparing neither man nor beast. When they had their fill of slaughter, they set what remained in their midst and drove them to Mardonius and his camp.

40. After this deed they waited two days more, neither side desiring to begin the battle; for though the foreigners came to the Asopus to make trial of the Greeks' purpose, neither army crossed it. Howbeit Mardonius' horse was ever besetting and troubling the Greeks; for the Thebans, in their zeal for the Persian part, waged war heartily, and were ever guiding the horsemen to the encounter; thereafter it was the turn of the Persians and Medes, and they and none other would do deeds of valour.

41. Until the ten days were past no more was done than this; but on the eleventh day from their first encampment over against each other, the Greeks growing greatly in number and Mardonius being sore vexed by the delay, there was a debate held between Mardonius son of Gobryas and Artabazus son of Pharnaces, who stood as high as but few others in Xerxes' esteem; and their opinions in council were as I will show. Artabazus held it best that they should strike their camp with all speed and lead the whole army within the walls of Thebes, where they had much provision stored and fodder for their beasts of burden, and where they could sit at their ease and despatch the business by taking the great store they had of gold, minted and other, and silver and drinking-cups, and sending all this without stint to all places in Hellas, but especially to the chief men in the cities of Hellas; let them do this (said he) and the Greeks would quickly surrender their liberty; but let not the Persians risk the event of a battle. This opinion of his was the same as the Thebans', inasmuch as he too had especial foreknowledge; but Mardonius' counsel was more vehement and intemperate and nowise leaning to moderation; for (said he) he deemed that their army was by much stronger than the Greeks', and that they should give battle with all speed, and not suffer yet more Greeks to muster than were mustered already; as for the sacrifices of Hegesistratus, let them pay no heed to these, nor

42. None withstood this argument, so that his opinion prevailed; for it was he and not Artabazus who was generalissimo of the army by the king's commission. He sent therefore for the leaders of the battalions and the generals of those Greeks that were with him, and asked them if they knew any oracle which prophesied that the Persians should perish in Hellas. They that were summoned said nought, some not knowing the prophecies, and some knowing them but deeming it perilous to speak; then said Mardonius himself: "Since, therefore, you either have no knowledge or are afraid to declare it, hear what I tell you out of the full knowledge that I have. There is an oracle that Persians are fated to come to Hellas and there all perish after they have plundered the temple at Delphi. We, therefore, knowing this same oracle, will neither approach that temple nor essay to plunder it; and in so far as destruction hangs on that, none awaits us. Wherefore as many of you as wish the Persians well may rejoice for that, as knowing that we shall overcome the Greeks." Having thus spoken he gave command to have all prepared and set in fair order for the battle that should be joined at the next day's dawn.

43. Now for this prophecy, which Mardonius said was spoken of the Persians, I know it to have been made concerning not them but the Illyrians and the you must reveal to none but Pausanias, lest you even be my undoing; in truth I would not tell it to you were it not by reason of my great care for all Hellas; for I myself am by ancient descent a Greek, and I would not willingly see Hellas change her freedom for slavery. I tell you, then, that Mardonius and his army cannot get from the sacrifices omens to his liking; else had you fought long ere this. But now it is his purpose to pay no heed to the sacrifices, and join battle at the first glimmer of dawn; for he is in dread, as I surmise, lest you should muster to a greater host. Therefore I bid you make ready; and if (as may be) Mardonius should delay and not join battle, wait patiently where you are; for he has but a few days' provision left. But if this war end as you would wish, then must you take thought how to save me too from slavery, who of my zeal have done so desperate a deed as this for the cause of Hellas, in my desire to declare to you Mardonius' intent, that so the foreigners may not fall upon you suddenly ere you yet expect them. I that speak am Alexander the Macedonian." With that he rode away back to the camp and his own place therein.

46. The Athenian generals went to the right wing and told Pausanias what they had heard from Alexander. At the message Pausanias was struck with fear of the Persians, and said: "Since, therefore, the battle is to begin at dawn, it is best that you Athenians should take your stand fronting the Persians, and we fronting the Boeotians and the Greeks that are posted over against you, by reason that you have fought with the Medes at Marathon and know them and their manner of fighting, but we have no experience or knowledge of those men; we Spartans have experience of the Boeotians and Thessalians, but not one of us has put the Medes to the test. Nay, let us take up our equipment and remove, you to this wing and we to the left." "We, too," the Athenians answered, "even from the moment when we saw the Persians posted over against you, had it in mind to make that proffer that now has first come from you; but we feared lest we should displease you by making it. But since you have spoken the wish yourselves, we too hear your words very gladly and are ready to do as you say."

47. Both being satisfied with this, they exchanged their places in the ranks at the first light of dawn. The Boeotians marked that and made it known to Mardonius; who, when he heard, forthwith essayed to make a change for himself also, by moving the Persians along to front the Lacedaemonians. But when Pausanias perceived what was this that was being done, he saw that his act was known, and led the Spartans back to the right wing; and Mardonius did in like manner on the left of his army.

48. When all were at their former posts again, Mardonius sent a herald to the Lacedaemonians with this message: "Men of Lacedaemon, you are said by the people of these parts to be very brave men; it is their boast of you that you neither flee from the field nor leave your post, but abide there and either slay your enemies or are yourselves slain. But it would seem that in all this there is no truth; for ere we can join battle and fight hand to hand, we have seen you even now fleeing and leaving your station, using Athenians for the first assay of your enemy, and arraying yourselves over against those that are but our slaves. This is no brave men's work; nay, we have been grievously mistaken in you; for by what we heard of you, we looked that you should send us a herald challenging the Persians and none other to fight with you; and that we were ready to do; but we find you making no such proffer, but rather quailing before us. Now, therefore, since the challenge comes not from you, take it from us instead. What hinders that we should fight with equal numbers on both sides, you for the Greeks (since you have the name of being their best), and we for the foreigners? and if it be willed that the others fight also, let them fight later after us; but if contrariwise it be willed that we alone suffice, then let us fight it out, and which side soever wins, let that serve as a victory for the whole army."

49. Thus proclaimed the herald; and when he had waited awhile and none made him any answer, he departed back again, and at his return told Mardonius what had befallen him. Mardonius was overjoyed thereat and proud of this semblance of victory, and sent his cavalry to attack the Greeks. The horsemen rode at them and shot arrows and javelins among the whole Greek army to its great hurt, inasmuch as they were mounted archers and ill to close with; and they troubled and choked the Gargaphian spring, whence all the army of the Greeks drew its water. None indeed but the Lacedaemonians were posted near the spring, and it was far from the several stations of the other Greeks,

¹ Several streams flow N. or N.W. from Cithaeron, and unite eventually to form the small river Oëroë. Between two of these there is a long strip of land, which is perhaps whereas the Asopus was near; but they would ever go to the spring, because they were barred from the Asopus, not being able to draw water from that river by reason of the horsemen and the arrows.

50. In this turn of affairs, seeing that their army was cut off from water and disordered by the horsemen, the generals of the Greeks betook themselves to Pausanias on the right wing, and debated concerning this and other matters; for there were other causes that troubled them more than what I have told; they had no food left, and their followers whom they had sent into the Peloponnese to bring provision thence had been cut off by the horsemen, and could not make their way to the army.

51. So they resolved in their council that if the Persians delayed through that day to give battle, they would go to the Island.¹ This is ten furlongs distant from the Asopus and the Gargaphian spring, whereby their army then lay, and in front of the town of Plataeae. It is like to an island on dry land, by reason that the river in its course down from Cithaeron into the plain is parted into two channels, and there is about three furlongs' space between till presently the two channels unite again; and the name of that river is Oëroe, who (say the people of the country) was the daughter of Asopus. To that place then they planned to remove, that they might have water in plenty for their use, and not be harmed by the the νησος; but it is not now actually surrounded by water, as Herodotus describes it.

For some notice of controversy about the battlefield of Plataeae, see the Introduction to this volume.

horsemen, as now when they were face to face; and they resolved to make their removal in the second watch of the night, lest the Persians should see them setting forth and the horsemen press after them and disorder their array. Further, they resolved that when they were come to that place, which is encircled by the divided channels of Asopus' daughter Oëroë as she flows from Cithaeron, they would in that night send half of their army to Cithaeron, to fetch away their followers who were gone to get the provision; for these were cut off from them on Cithaeron.

52. Having formed this design, all that day they suffered unending hardship from the cavalry that continually beset them; but when the day ended and the horsemen ceased from troubling, then at that hour of the night whereat it was agreed that they should depart the most of them arose and took their departure, not with intent to go to the place whereon they had agreed; instead of that, once they were afoot they got quit to their great content of the horsemen, and escaped to the town of Plataeae, and came in their flight to the temple of Here which is without that town, twenty furlongs distant from the Gargaphian spring; thither they came, and piled their arms before the temple.

53. So they encamped about the temple of Here. But Pausanias, seeing their departure from the camp, gave orders to the Lacedaemonians to take up their arms likewise and follow after the others that went before, supposing that these were making for the place whither they had agreed to go. Thereupon, all the rest of the captains being ready to obey Pausanias, Amompharetus son of Poliades, the leader wise prevail with him; and at the last, when the Athenian messenger came among them, hot words began to pass; and in this wrangling Amompharetus took up a stone with both hands and cast it down before Pausanias' feet, crying that it was his pebble wherewith he voted against fleeing from the strangers (meaning thereby the foreigners). Pausanias called him a madman and distraught; then the Athenian messenger putting the question wherewith he was charged, he bade the man tell the Athenians of his present condition, and prayed them to join themselves to the Lacedaemonians and do as they did in respect of departure.

56. So the messenger went back to the Athenians. But when dawn found the dispute still continuing, Pausanias having all this time held his army halted, now gave the word and led all the rest away between the hillocks, the Tegeans following; for he supposed that Amompharetus would not stay behind when the rest of the Lacedaemonians left him; and indeed such was the event. The Athenians set themselves in array and marched, but not by the same way as the Lacedaemonians, who clung close to the broken ground and the lower slopes of Cithaeron, to escape from the Persian horse, but the Athenians marched down into the plain instead.

57. Now Amompharetus at first supposed that Pausanias would never have the heart to leave him and his men, and he was instant that they should remain where they were and not quit their post; but when Pausanias' men went forward on their way, he deemed that they had left him in good earnest, and so bidding his battalion take up its arms he led it at a foot's pace after the rest of the column; which having gone as far as ten furlongs away was waiting for Amompharetus, halting by the stream Moloïs and the place called Argiopium, where is set a shrine of Eleusinian Demeter. The reason of their waiting was that, if Amompharetus and his battalion should not leave the place where it was posted but abide there still, they might return and succour him. No sooner had Amompharetus' men come up than the foreigners' cavalry attacked the army; for the horsemen did according as they had ever been wont, and when they saw no enemy on the ground where the Greek array had been on the days before this, they rode ever forward and attacked the Greeks as soon as they overtook them.

58. When Mardonius learnt that the Greeks had departed under cover of night, and saw the ground deserted, he called to him Thorax of Larissa and his brothers Eurypylus and Thrasydeïus, and said: "What will you now say, sons of Aleuas! when you see this place deserted? for you, who are their neighbours, ever told me that Lacedaemonians fled from no battlefield and were surpassing masters of war; yet these same men you lately saw changing from their post, and now you and all of us see that they have fled away in the night that is past; no sooner must they measure themselves in battle with those that are in very truth the bravest on earth, than they plainly showed that they are men of no account, and all other Greeks likewise. Now you for your part were strangers to the Persians, and I could readily pardon you for praising these fellows, who were in some sort known to you; but I marvelled much more at Artabazus, that he should be so sore affrighted by the Lacedaemonians as to give us a craven's advice to strike our camp, and march away to be beleaguered in Thebes; of which advice the king shall yet learn from me. This shall be matter for speech elsewhere; but now, we must not suffer our enemies to do as they desire; they must be pursued till they be overtaken and pay the penalty for all the harm they have wrought the Persians."

59. With that, he led the Persians at speed across the Asopus in pursuit of the Greeks, supposing that they were in flight; it was the army of Lacedaemon and Tegea alone that was his goal; for the Athenians marched another way over the broken ground, and were out of his sight. Seeing the Persians setting forth in pursuit of the Greeks, the rest of the foreign battalions straightway raised their standards and pursued likewise, each at the top of his speed, no battalion having order in its ranks nor place assigned in the line.

60. So they ran pell-mell and shouting, as though they would utterly make an end of the Greeks; but Pausanias, when the cavalry attacked him, sent a horseman to the Athenians, with this message: "Men of Athens, in this great issue which must give freedom or slavery to Hellas, we Lacedaemonians and you Athenians have been betrayed by the flight of our allies in the night that is past. Now therefore I am resolved what we must forthwith do; we must protect each other by fighting as best we can. If the cavalry had attacked you first, it had been for us and the Tegeans with us, who are faithful to Hellas, to succour you; but now, seeing that the whole brunt of their assault falls on us, it is right that you should come to the aid of that division which is hardest pressed. But if, as may be, aught has befallen you whereby it is impossible that you should aid us, yet do us the service of sending us your archers. We are assured that you will hearken to us, as knowing that you have been by far more zealous than all others in this present war."

61. When the Athenians heard that, they essayed to succour the Lacedaemonians and defend them with all their might; but when their march was already begun they were set upon by the Greeks posted over against them, who had joined themselves to the king; wherefore they could now send no aid, being troubled by the foe that was closest. Thus it was that the Lacedaemonians and Tegeans stood alone; men-at-arms and light-armed together, there were of the Lacedaemonians fifty thousand and of the Tegeans, who had never been parted from the Lacedaemonians, three thousand; and they offered sacrifice, the better to join battle with Mardonius and the army that was with him. But as they could get no favourable omen from their sacrifices, and in the meanwhile many of them were slain and by far more wounded (for the Persians set up their shields for a fence, and shot showers of arrows innumerable), it was so, that, the Spartans being hard pressed and their sacrifices of no avail, Pausanias lifted up his eyes to the temple of Here at Plataeae and called on the goddess, praying that they might nowise be disappointed of their hope.

62. While he yet prayed, the men of Tegea leapt out before the rest and charged the foreigners; and immediately after Pausanias' prayer the sacrifices of the Lacedaemonians grew to be favourable; which being at last vouchsafed to them, they too charged the Persians, and the Persians met them, throwing away their bows. And first they fought for the fence of shields; and when that was down, thereafter the battle waxed fierce and long about the temple of Demeter itself, till they grappled and thrust; for the foreigners laid hold of the spears and broke them short. Now the Persians were neither the less valorous nor the weaker; but they had no armour, and moreover they were unskilled and no match for their adversaries in craft; they would rush out singly and in tens or in groups great or small, hurling themselves on the Spartans and so perishing.

63. Where Mardonius was himself, riding a white horse in the battle and surrounded by a thousand picked men who were the flower of the Persians, there they pressed their adversaries hardest. So long as Mardonius was alive the Persians stood their ground and defended themselves, overthrowing many Lacedaemonians; but when Mardonius was slain and his guards, who were the strongest part of the army, fallen likewise, then the rest too yielded and gave ground before the men of Lacedaemon. For what chiefly wrought them harm was that they wore no armour over their raiment, and fought as it were naked against men fully armed.

64. On that day the Spartans gained from Mardonius their full measure of vengeance for the slaying of Leonidas, according to the oracle, and the most glorious of victories ever known to men was won by Pausanias, the son of Cleombrotus, who was the son of Anaxandrides. (I have named the rest of Pausanias' ancestors in the lineage of Leonidas; for they are the same for both.) As for Mardonius, he was slain by Aeimnestus, a Spartan of note; who long after the Persian business did in time of war lead three hundred men to battle at Stenyclerus against the whole army of Messenia, and was there slain, he and his three hundred.

65. But at Plataeae, the Persians being routed by the Lacedaemonians fled in disorder to their own camp and within the wooden walls that they had made in the lands of Thebes. And herein is a marvellous thing, that though the battle was hard by the grove of Demeter there was no sign that any Persian had been slain in the precinct, or entered into it; most of them fell near the temple in unconsecrated ground; and I judge—if it be not a sin to judge of the ways of heaven—that the goddess herself denied them entry, for that they had burnt her temple, the shrine at Eleusis.

66. Thus far then went this battle. But Artabazus son of Pharnaces had from the very first disliked the king's leaving Mardonius, and now all his counselling not to join battle had been of no avail; and in his displeasure at what Mardonius was doing he himself did as I will show. He had with him a great army, even as many as forty thousand men; knowing well what would be the event of the battle, no sooner had the Greeks and Persians met than he led these with purpose fixed, bidding them follow him all together whither he should lead them, according to whatsoever they should see to be his intent; and with that command he made pretence of leading them to battle. But as he came farther on his way he saw the Persians already fleeing; whereat he led his men no longer in the same array, but took to his heels and fled with all speed not to the wooden fort nor to the walled city of Thebes, but to Phocis, that so he might make his way with all despatch to the Hellespont.

67. So Artabazus and his army turned that way. All the rest of the Greeks that were on the king's side fought of set purpose ill; but not so the Boeotians; they fought for a long time against the Athenians. For those Thebans that took the Persian part showed no small zeal in the battle, and had no will to fight slackly, insomuch that three hundred of their first and best were there slain by the Athenians. But at last the Boeotians too yielded; and they fled to Thebes, not by the way that the Persians had fled and all the multitude of the allies, a multitude that had fought no fight to the end nor achieved any feat of arms.

68. This flight of theirs ere they had even closed, because they saw the Persians flee, proves to me that it was on the Persians that all the fortune of the foreigners hung. Thus they all fled, save only the cavalry, Boeotian and other; which did in so far advantage the fleeing men as it kept ever between them and their enemies, and shielded its friends from the Greeks in their flight.

69. So the Greeks followed in victory after Xerxes' men, pursuing and slaying. In this rout that grew apace there came a message to the rest of the Greeks, who lay at the temple of Here and had kept away from the fight, that there had been a battle and that Pausanias' men were victorious; which when they heard, they set forth in no ordered array, they that were with the Corinthians keeping to the spur of the mountain and the hill country, by the road that led upward straight to the temple of Demeter, and they that were with the Megarians and Philiarians following the levellest way over the plain. But when the Megarians and Philiarians were come near to the enemy, the Theban horsemen (whose captain was Asopodorus son of Timander) espied them approaching in haste and disorder, and rode at them; by which onfall they laid six hundred of them low, and pursued and swept the rest to Cithaeron.

70. So these perished, none regarding them. But when the Persians and the rest of the multitude had fled within the wooden wall, they made a shift to get them up on the towers before the coming of the Lacedaemonians, which done they strengthened the wall as best they could; and when the Athenians were now arrived there began a stiff battle for the wall. For as long as the Athenians were not there, the foreigners defended themselves, and had greatly the advantage of the Lacedaemonians, they having no skill in the assault of walls; but when the Athenians came up, the fight for the wall waxed hot and continued long. But at the last the Athenians did by valour and steadfast endeavour scale the wall and breach it, by which breach the Greeks poured in; the first to enter were the Tegeans, and it was they who plundered the tent of Mardonius, taking from it beside all else the manger of his horses, that was all of bronze and a thing worth the beholding. The Tegeans dedicated

 of account the Laconian περὶοικοι and the rest of the light-

this manger of Mardonius in the temple of Athene Alea; all else that they took they brought into the common stock, as did the rest of the Greeks. As for the foreigners, they drew no more to a head once the wall was down, but they were crazed with panic fear, as men hunted down in a narrow space where many myriads were herded together; and such a slaughter were the Greeks able to make, that of two hundred and sixty thousand, that remained after Artabazus had fled with his forty thousand, scarce three thousand were left alive. Of the Lacedaemonians from Sparta there were slain in the battle ninety-one in all; of the Tegeans, seventeen; and of the Athenians, fifty-two.¹

71. Among the foreigners they that fought best were the Persian foot and the horse of the Sacae, and of men, it is said, the bravest was Mardonius; among the Greeks, the Tegeans and Athenians bore themselves gallantly, but the Lacedaemonians excelled all in valour. Of this my only clear proof is (for all these vanquished the foes opposed to them) that the Lacedaemonians met the strongest part of the army, and overcame it. According to my judgment, he that bore himself by far the best was Aristodemus, who had been reviled and dishonoured for being the only man of the three hundred that came alive from Thermopylae;² and the next after him in valour were Posidonius and Philocyon and Amompharetus. Nevertheless when there was talk, and question who had borne himself most bravely, those Spartans that were there judged that Aristodemus had achieved great feats because by reason of the reproach under which he lay he plainly wished to die, and so pressed forward in frenzy from his post, whereas Posidonius had borne himself well with no desire to die, and must in so far be held the better man. This they may have said of mere jealousy; but all the aforesaid who were slain in that fight received honour, save only Aristodemus; he, because he desired death by reason of the reproach afore-mentioned, received none.

72. These won the most renown of all that fought at Plataeae. Callicrates is not among them; for he died away from the battle, he that, when he came to the army, was the goodliest Lacedaemonian, aye, or Greek, in the Hellas of that day. He, when Pausanias was offering sacrifice, was wounded in the side by an arrow where he sat in his place; and while his comrades were fighting, he was carried out of the battle and died a lingering death, saying to Arimnestus, a Plataean, that it was no grief to him to die for Hellas' sake; his sorrow was rather that he had struck no blow and achieved no deed worthy of his merit, for all his eager desire so to do.

73. Of the Athenians, Sophanes son of Euty-chides is said to have won renown, a man of the township of Decelea; that Decelea whose people once did a deed that was for all time serviceable, as the Athenians themselves say. For of old when the sons of Tyndarus strove to win Helen¹ back and broke with a great host into Attica, and were turning the townships upside down because they knew not where Helen had been hidden, then (it is said) the Decelcans (and, as some say, Decelus himself, because he was angered by the pride of Theseus and feared for the whole land of Attica) revealed the whole matter to the sons of Tyndarus, and guided them to Aphidnae, which Titacus, one of the country's oldest stock, betrayed to the Tyndaridae. For that deed the Decelcans have ever had and still have at Sparta freedom from all dues and chief places at feasts, insomuch that even as late as in the war that was waged many years after this time between the Athenians and Peloponnesians, the Lacedaemonians laid no hand on Decelea when they harried the rest of Attica.¹

74. Of that township was Sophanes, who now was the best Athenian fighter in the battle; concerning which, two tales are told. By the first, he bore an anchor of iron made fast to the girdle of his cuirass with a chain of bronze; which anchor he would ever cast whenever he drew nigh to his enemies in onset, that so the enemies as they left their ranks might not avail to move him from his place; and when they were put to flight, it was his plan that he would weigh his anchor and so pursue them. So runs this tale; but the second that is told is at variance with the first, and relates that he bore no anchor of iron made fast to his cuirass, but that his shield, which he ever whirled round and never kept still, had on it an anchor for device.

75. Ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἕτερον Σωφάνει λαμπρὸν ἔργον ἐξεργασμένον, ὅτι περικατημένων Ἀθηναίων Λίγιναν Εὐρυβάτην τὸν Ἀργεῖον ἄνδρα πεντάεθλον ἐκ προκλήσιος ἐφόνευσε. αὐτὸν δὲ Σωφάνεα χρόνῳ ὕστερον τούτων κατέλαβε ἄνδρα γενόμενον ἀγαθόν, Ἀθηναίων στρατηγέοντα ἅμα Λεάγρῳ τῷ Γλαύκωνος, ἀποθανεῖν ὑπὸ Ἰδωνῶν ἐν Δάτῳ περὶ τῶν μετὰλλων τῶν χρυσέων μαχόμενον.

75. Another famous feat of arms Sophanes achieved: when the Athenians were beleaguering Argina, he challenged and slew Eurybates the Argive, a victor in the Isthmian Contests. But long after this Sophanes, who had borne himself thus gallantly, came by his death, being general of the Athenians with Leagrus, son of Glaucon, he was slain at Datus¹ by the Thracians in a battle for the gold mines.

76. Immediately after the Greeks had laid low the foreigners at Malacæ, there came to them a woman, deserting from the enemy, who was the concubine of Pharandates, a Persian, son of Teaspis. She, learning that the Persians were destroyed and the Greeks victorious, decked herself (as did also her attendants) with many gold ornaments and the fairest raiment that she had, and so lighting from her carriage came to the Lacedæmonians while they were yet at the slaughtering; and seeing Pausanias ordering all that business, whose name and country she knew from her often hearing of it, she knew that it was he, and thus besought him, clasping his knees: "Save me, your suppliant, O king of Sparta! from captive slavery; for you have done me good service till this hour, by making an end of yonder men, that regard not aught that is divine in heaven or earth. Coan am I by birth, daughter to Hegetorides, son of Antagoras; in Cos the Persian laid violent hands on me and held me prisoner." "Be of good cheer, lady," Pausanias answered, "for that you are my suppliant, and for your tale withal, if you be verily daughter to Hegeloides of Cor, for he is my closest friend, of all that dwell in those lands." Thus saying, he gave her for the nonce in charge to those of the ephors who were present, and thereafter sent her to Aegina, whither she herself desired to go.

77. Immediately after the coming of this woman, came the men of Mantinea, when all was over; who, learning that they were come too late for the battle, were greatly distressed, and said that they deserved to punish themselves therefor. Hearing that the Medes with Artabazus were fleeing, they would have pursued after them as far as Thessaly; but the Lacedaemonians would not suffer them to pursue fleeing men; and returning to their own land the Mantineans banished the leaders of their army from the country. After the Mantineans came the men of Elis, who also went away sorrowful in like manner as the Mantineans, and after their departure banished their leaders likewise. Such were the doings of the Mantineans and Eleans.

78. Now there was at Plataeae in the army of the Aeginetans one Lampon, son of Pytheas, a leading man of Aegina; he sought Pausanias with most unrighteous counsel, and having made haste to come said to him: "Son of Cleombrotus, you have done a deed of surpassing greatness and glory; by heaven's favour you have saved Hellas, and thereby won greater renown than any Greek known to men. But now you must finish what remains to do, that your fame may be yet the greater, and that no foreigner may hereafter make bold unprovoked to wreak his mad and wicked will on the Greeks. When Leonidas was slain at Thermopylae, Mardonius and Xerxes cut off his head and set it on a pole; make them a like return, and you will win praise from all Spartans, and the rest of Hellas besides; for if you impale Mardonius you will be avenged for your father's brother Leonidas."

79. So said Lampon, thinking to please. But Pausanias answered him thus: "Sir Aeginetan, I thank you for your goodwill and forethought; but you have missed the mark of right judgment; for first you exalt me on high and my fatherland and my deeds withal, yet next you cast me down to mere nothingness when you counsel me to insult the dead, and say that I shall win more praise if I so do; but that were an act more proper for foreigners than for Greeks, and one that we deem matter of blame even in foreigners. Nay, for myself, I would fain in this business find no favour either with the people of Aegina or whoso else is pleased by such acts; it is enough for me if I please the Spartans by righteous deed and righteous speech. As for Leonidas, whom you would have me avenge, I hold that he has had full measure of vengeance; the uncounted souls of these that you see have done honour to him and the rest of those who died at Thermopylae. But to you this is my warning, that you come not again to me with words like these nor give me such counsel; and be thankful now that you go unpunished."

80. With that answer Lampon departed. Then Pausanias made a proclamation, that no man should touch the spoil, and bade the helots gather all the stuff together. They, scattering all about the camp, found there tents adorned with gold and silver, and couches gilded and silver-plated, and golden bowls and cups and other drinking-vessels; and sacks they found on wains, wherein were seen cauldrons of gold and silver; and they stripped from the dead that lay there their armlets and torques, and daggers of gold; as for many-coloured raiment, it was nothing regarded. Much of all this the helots showed, as much as they could not conceal; but much they stole and sold to the Aeginetans; insomuch that the Aeginetans thereby laid the foundation of their great fortunes, by buying gold from the helots as though it were bronze.

· 81. Having brought all the stuff together they set apart a tithe for the god of Delphi, whereof was made and dedicated that tripod that rests upon the bronze three-headed serpent,¹ nearest to the altar; another they set apart for the god of Olympia, whereof was made and dedicated a bronze figure of Zeus, ten cubits high; and another for the god of the Isthmus, whereof came a bronze Poseidon seven cubits high; all which having set apart they divided the remnant, and each received according to his desert of the concubines of the Persians, and the gold and silver, and all the rest of the stuff, and the beasts of burden. How much was set apart and given to those who had fought best at Plataeae, no man says; but I think that they also received gifts; but tenfold of every kind, women, horses, talents, camels, and all other things likewise, was set apart and given to Pausanias.

one without suture, and a jawbone wherein the teeth of the upper jaw were one whole, a single bone, front teeth and grinders; and there were to be seen the bones of a man of five cubits' stature.

84. As for the body of Mardonius, it was made away with on the day after the battle; by whom, I cannot with exactness say; but I have heard of very many of all countries that buried Mardonius, and I know of many that were richly rewarded for that act by Mardonius' son Artontes; but which of them it was that stole away and buried the body of Mardonius I cannot learn for a certainty, albeit some report that it was buried by Dionysophanes, an Ephesian. Such was the manner of Mardonius' burial.

85. But the Greeks, when they had divided the spoil at Plataeae, buried their dead each severally in their place. The Lacedaemonians made three vaults; there they buried their "irens,"¹ among whom were Posidonius and Amompharetus and Philocyon and Callicrates. In one of the tombs, then, were the "irens," in the second the rest of the Spartans, and in the third the helots. Thus the Lacedaemonians buried their dead; the Tegeans buried all theirs together in a place apart, and the Athenians did likewise with their own dead; and so did the Megarians and Phliasians with those who had been slain by the horsemen. All the tombs of these peoples were filled with dead; but as for the rest of the states whose tombs are to be seen at Plataeae, their tombs are but empty barrows that they built for the sake of men that should come after, because they were ashamed to have been absent from the battle. In truth there is one there that is called the tomb of the Aeginetans, which, as I have been told, was built as late as ten years after, at the Aeginetans' desire, by their patron and protector Cleades son of Autodicus, a Plataean.

86. As soon as the Greeks had buried their dead at Plataeae, they resolved in council that they would march against Thebes and demand surrender of those who had taken the Persian part, but specially of Timagenidas and Attaginus, who were chief among their foremost men; and that, if these men were not delivered to them, they would not withdraw from before the city till they should have taken it. Being thus resolved, they came with this intent on the eleventh day after the battle and laid siege to the Thebans, demanding the surrender of the men; and the Thebans refusing this surrender, they laid their lands waste and assaulted the walls.

87. Seeing that the Greeks would not cease from their harrying, when nineteen days were past, Timagenidas thus spoke to the Thebans: "Men of Thebes, since the Greeks have so resolved that they will not raise the siege till Thebes be taken or we be delivered to them, now let not the land of Boeotia increase the measure of its ills for our sake; nay, if it is money they desire and their demand for our surrender is but a pretext, let us give them money out of our common treasury (for it was by the common will and not ours alone that we took the Persian part); but if they be besieging the town for no other cause save to have us, then we will give close after me. It is for you to entertain him, and show that you do him good service; for if you so do, you will not afterwards repent of it." So saying, he used all diligence to lead his army away straight towards Thrace through Thessaly and Macedonia, brooking in good sooth no delay and following the shortest inland road. So he came to Byzantium, but he left behind many of his army, cut down by the Thracians or overcome by hunger and weariness; and from Byzantium he crossed over in boats. In such case Artabazus returned into Asia.

90. Now on the selfsame day when the Persians were so stricken at Plataeae, it so fell out that they suffered a like fate at Mycale in Ionia. For the Greeks who had come in their ships with Leutychides the Lacedaemonian being then in quarters at Delos, there came to them certain messengers from Samos, to wit, Lampon son of Thrasycles, Athenagoras son of Archestratides, and Hegesistratus son of Aristagoras; these the Samians had sent, keeping their despatch secret from the Persians and the despot Theomestor son of Androdamas, whom the Persians had made despot of Samos. When they came before the generals, Hegesistratus spoke long and vehemently: "If the Ionians but see you," said he, "they will revolt from the Persians; and the foreigners will not stand; but if perchance they do stand, you will have such a prey as never again"; and he prayed them in the name of the gods of their common worship to deliver Greeks from slavery and drive the foreigner away. That, said he, would be an easy matter for them; "for the Persian ships are unseaworthy and no match for yours; and if you

91. This Samian stranger being so earnest in entreaty, Leutychides asked him (whether it was that he desired to know for the sake of a presage, or that heaven happily prompted him thereto), "Sir Samian, what is your name?" "Hegesistratus,"¹ said he. Then Leutychides cut short whatever else Hegesistratus had begun to say, and cried: "I accept the omen of your name, Sir Samian; now do you see to it that ere you sail hence you and these that are with you pledge yourselves that the Samians will be our zealous allies."

92. Thus he spoke, and then and there added the deed thereto; for straightway the Samians bound themselves by pledge and oath to alliance with the Greeks. This done, the rest sailed away, but Leutychides bade Hegesistratus take ship with the Greeks, for the good omen of his name.

93. The Greeks waited through that day, and on the next they sought and won favourable augury; their diviner was Delphonus son of Evenius, a man of that Apollonia which is in the Ionian gulf. This man's father Evenius had once fared as I will now relate. There is at the aforesaid Apollonia a certain flock sacred to the Sun, which in the day-time is pastured beside the river Chon, which flows from the mountain called Lacmon through the lands of Apollonia and issues into the sea by the haven of Oricum; by night, those townsmen who are most notable for wealth or lineage are chosen to watch it, each man serving for a year; for the people of Apollonia set great store by this flock, being so taught by a certain oracle. It is folded in a cave far distant from the town. Now at the time whereof I speak, Evenius was the chosen watchman. But one night he fell asleep, and wolves came past his guard into the cave, killing about sixty of the flock. When Evenius was aware of it, he held his peace and told no man, being minded to restore what was lost by buying others. But this matter was not hid from the people of Apollonia; and when it came to their knowledge they haled him to judgment and condemned him to lose his eyesight for sleeping at his watch. So they blinded Evenius; but from the day of their so doing their flocks bore no offspring, nor did their land yield her fruits as aforetime; and a declaration was given to them at Dodona and Delphi, when they inquired of the prophets what might be the cause of their present ill: the gods told them by their prophets that they had done unjustly in blinding Evenius, the guardian of the sacred flock, "for we ourselves" (said they) "sent those wolves, and we will not cease from avenging him ere you make him such restitution for what you did as he himself chooses and approves; when that is fully done, we will ourselves give Evenius such a gift as will make many men to deem him happy."

94. This was the oracle given to the people of Apollonia. They kept it secret, and charged certain of their townsmen to carry the business through; who did so as I will now show. Coming and sitting down by Evenius at the place where he sat, they spoke of other matters, till at last they fell to commiserating his misfortune; and thus guiding the discourse they asked him what requital he would choose, if the people of Apollonia should promise to requite him for what they had done. He, knowing nought of the oracle, said he would choose for a gift the lands of certain named townsmen whom he deemed to have the two fairest estates in Apollonia and a house besides which he knew to be the fairest in the town; let him (he said) have possession of these, and he would forgo his wrath, and be satisfied with that by way of restitution. They that sat by him waited for no further word than that, and said: "Evenius, the people of Apollonia hereby make you that restitution for the loss of your sight, obeying the oracle given to them." At that he was very angry, for he learnt thereby the whole story and saw that they had cheated him; but they bought from the possessors and gave him what he had chosen; and from that day he had a natural gift of divination, so that he won fame thereby.

95. Deïphonus, the son of this Evenius, had been brought by the Corinthians, and practised divination for the army. But I have heard it said ere now, that Deïphonus was no son of Evenius, but made a wrongful use of that name, and wrought for wages up and down Hellas.

96. Having won favourable omens, the Greeks stood out to sea from Delos for Samos. When they were now near Calamisa in the Samian territory, they anchored there hard by the temple of Here that is in those parts, and prepared for a sea-fight; the Persians, learning of their approach, stood likewise out to sea and made for the mainland, with all their ships save the Phœnicians, whom they sent sailing away. It was determined by them in council that they would not do battle by sea; for they deemed themselves overmatched; and the reason of their making for the mainland was, that they might lie under the shelter of their army at Mycale, which had been left by Xerxes' command behind the rest of his host to hold Ionia; there were sixty thousand men in it, and Tigranes, the goodliest and tallest man in Persia, was their general. It was the design of the Persian admirals to flee to the shelter of that army, and there to beach their ships and build a fence round them which should be a protection for the ships and a refuge for themselves.

97. With this design they put to sea. So when they came past the temple of the Goddesses¹ at Mycale to the Gaeson and Scolopis,² where is a temple of Eleusinian Demeter (which was built by Philistus son of Pasicles, when he went with Nileus son of Codrus to the founding of Miletus), there they beached their ships and fenced them round with stones and trunks of orchard trees that they cut down; and they drove in stakes round the fence, and prepared for siege or victory, making ready of deliberate purpose for either event.

98. When the Greeks learnt that the foreigners were off and away to the mainland, they were ill-pleased to think that their enemy had escaped them, and doubted whether to return back or make sail for the Hellespont. At the last they resolved that they would do neither, but sail to the mainland; and equipping themselves therefore with gangways and all else needful for a sea-fight, they with whatever Greeks came rushing within the walls. Of the Persian leaders two escaped by flight and two were slain; Artayntes and Ithamitres, who were admirals of the fleet, escaped; Mardontes and Tigranes, the general of the land army, were slain fighting.

103. While the Persians still fought, the Lacedæmonians and their comrades came up, and finished what was left of the business. The Greeks too lost many men there, notably the men of Sicyon and their general Perilaus. As for the Samians who served in the Median army, and had been disarmed, they, seeing from the first that victory hung in the balance,¹ did what they could in their desire to aid the Greeks; and when the other Ionians saw the Samians set the example, they also thereupon deserted the Persians and attacked the foreigners.

104. The Persians had for their own safety appointed the Milesians to watch the passes, so that if haply aught should befall the Persian army such as did befall it, they might have guides to bring them safe to the heights of Mycale. This was the task to which the Milesians were appointed, for the aforesaid reason, and that they might not be present with the army and so turn against it. But they did wholly contrariwise to the charge laid upon them; they misguided the fleeing Persians by ways that led them among their enemies, and at last themselves became their worst enemies and slew them. Thus did Ionia for the second time revolt from the Persians.

¹ ἐτεροαλκῆς here probably means "doubtful," giving victory to one side or other; cp vii. 11; in Homer it means "decisive," giving victory to one as opposed to the other.

105. In that battle those of the Greeks that fought best were the Athenians, and the Athenian that fought best was one who practised the pancratium,¹ Hermolycus son of Euthoenus. This Hermolycus on a later day met his death in battle at Cyrnus in Carystus during a war between the Athenians and Carystians, and lay dead on Geraestus. Those that fought best next after the Athenians were the men of Corinth and Troezen and Sicyon.

106. When the Greeks had made an end of most of the foreigners, either in battle or in flight, they brought out their booty on to the beach, and found certain stores of wealth; then they burnt the ships and the whole of the wall, which having burnt they sailed away. When they were arrived at Samos, they debated in council whether they should dispeople Ionia, and in what Greek lands under their dominion it were best to plant the Ionians, leaving the country itself to the foreigners; for it seemed to them impossible to stand on guard between the Ionians and their enemies for ever, yet if they should not so stand, they had no hope that the Persians would suffer the Ionians to go unpunished. In this matter the Peloponnesians that were in authority were for removing the people from the marts of those Greek nations that had sided with the Persians, and giving their land to the Ionians to dwell in; but the Athenians disliked the whole design of dispeopling Ionia, or suffering the Peloponnesians to determine the lot of Athenian colonies; and as they resisted hotly, the Peloponnesians yielded. Thus it came about that they admitted to their alliance the Samians, Chians, Lesbians, and all other islanders who had served with their armaments, and bound them by pledge and oaths to remain faithful and not desert their allies; who being thus sworn, the Greeks set sail to break the bridges, supposing that these still held fast. So they laid their course for the Hellespont.

107. The few foreigners who escaped were driven to the heights of Mycale, and made their way thence to Sardis. While they were journeying on the road, Masistes son of Darius, who had chanced to be present at the Persian disaster, reviled the admiral Artayntes very bitterly, telling him (with much beside) that such generalship as his proved him worse than a woman, and that no punishment was too bad for the hurt he had wrought to the king's house. Now it is the greatest of all taunts in Persia to be called worse than a woman. These many insults so angered Artayntes, that he drew his sword upon Masistes to kill him; but Xenagoras son of Praxilaus of Halicarnassus, who stood behind Artayntes himself, saw him run at Masistes, and caught him round the middle and lifted and hurled him to the ground; meanwhile Masistes' guards came between them. By so doing Xenagoras won the gratitude of Masistes himself and Xerxes, for saving the king's brother; for which deed he was made ruler of all Cilicia by the king's gift. They went then on their way without any outcome of the matter, and came to Sardis.

108. Now it chanced that the king had been at Sardis ever since he came thither in flight from Athens after his overthrow in the sea-fight. Being then at Sardis he became enamoured of Masistes' wife, who was also at that place. But as all his messages could not bring her to yield to him, and he would not force her to his will, out of regard for his brother Masistes (which indeed wrought with the woman also, for she knew well that no force would be used with her), Xerxes found no other way to his purpose than that he should make a marriage between his own son Darius and the daughter of this woman and Masistes; for he thought that by so doing he would be likeliest to get her. So he betrothed them with all due ceremony, and rode away to Susa. But when he was come thither and had taken Darius' bride into his house, he thought no more of Masistes' wife, but changed about, and wooed and won this girl Artaynte, Darius' wife and Masistes' daughter.

109. But as time went on the truth came to light, and in such manner as I will show. Xerxes' wife, Amestris, wove and gave to him a great gaily-coloured mantle, wondrous to behold. Xerxes was pleased with it, and went wearing it to Artaynte; and being pleased with her too, he bade her ask for what she would have in return for her favours, for he would deny nothing at her asking. Thereat—for she and all her house were doomed to evil—she said to Xerxes, "Will you give me whatever I ask of you?" and he promised and swore it, supposing that she would ask anything but that; but when he had sworn, she asked boldly for his mantle. Xerxes strove hard to refuse her, for no cause save

At that Masistes was amazed; "Sire," he said, "what is this evil command that you lay upon me, bidding me deal thus with my wife? Truly, O king, I deem it a high honour to be accounted worthy of your daughter; but I will do neither the one nor the other. Nay, constrain me not to consent to such a desire; you will find another husband for your daughter as good as I; but suffer me to keep my own wife." Thus answered Masistes; but Xerxes was very angry, and said: "To this pass you are come, Masistes, I will give you no daughter of mine to wife, nor shall you longer live with her that you now have; thus shall you learn to accept that which is offered you." Hearing that, Masistes said nought but this: "Nay, sire, you have not destroyed me yet!" and so departed.

112. But in the meantime, while Xerxes talked with his brother, Amestris sent for Xerxes' guards and used Masistes' wife very cruelly; she cut off the woman's breasts and threw them to dogs, and her nose and ears and lips likewise, and cut out her tongue, and sent her home thus cruelly used.

113. Knowing nought as yet of this, but fearing evil, Masistes ran speedily to his house. Seeing the by the Aeolians of the country, but with him were Persians and a great multitude of their allies withal.

116. This province was ruled by Xerxes' viceroy Artayctes, a cunning man and a wicked; witness the deceit that he practised on the king in his march to Athens, how he stole away from Elaeus the treasure of Protesilaus¹ son of Iphiclus. This was the way of it: there is at Elaeus in the Chersonesus the tomb of Protesilaus, and a precinct about it, where was much treasure, with vessels of gold and silver, bronze, raiment, and other dedicated offerings; all of which Artayctes carried off, by the king's gift. "Sire," he said deceitfully to Xerxes, "there is here the house of a certain Greek, who met a just death for invading your territory with an army; give me this man's house, whereby all may be taught not to invade your territory." It was to be thought that this plea would easily persuade Xerxes to give him a man's house, having no suspicion of Artayctes' meaning; whose reason for saying that Protesilaus had invaded the king's territory was, that the Persians believe all Asia to belong to themselves and whosoever is their king. So when the treasure was given him, he carried it away from Elaeus to Sestus, and planted and farmed the precinct; and he would come from Elaeus and have intercourse with women in the shrine. Now, when the Athenians laid siege to him, he had made no preparation for it, nor thought that the Greeks would come, and he had no way of escape from their attack.

117. But the siege continuing into the late autumn, the Athenians grew weary of their absence from home and their ill success at taking the fortress, and entreated their generals to lead them away again; but the generals refused to do that, till they should take the place or be recalled by the Athenian state. Thereat the men endured their plight patiently.

118. But they that were within the walls were by now brought to the last extremity, insomuch that they boiled the thongs of their beds for food; but at the last even these failed them, and Artajctes and Oeobazus and all the Persians made their way down from the back part of the fortress, where their enemies were scarcest, and fled away at nightfall. When morning came, the people of the Chersonesus signified from their towers to the Athenians what had happened, and opened their gates; and the greater part of the Athenians going in pursuit, the rest stayed to hold the town.

119. Oeobazus made to escape into Thrace; but the Apsinthians of that country caught and sacrificed him after their fashion to Plistorus the god of their land; as for his companions, they slew them in another manner. Artajctes and his company had begun their flight later, and were overtaken a little way beyond the Goat's Rivers,¹ where after they had defended themselves a long time some of them were slain and the rest taken alive. The Greeks bound and carried them to Sestus, and Artajctes and his son likewise with them in bonds.

120. It is told by the people of the Chersonesus that a marvellous thing befell one of them that guarded Artajctes: he was frying dried fishes, and these as they lay over the fire began to leap and writhe as though they were fishes newly caught. The rest gathered round, amazed at the sight; but when Artajctes saw the strange thing, he called him that was frying the fishes and said to him: "Sir Athenian, be not afraid of this portent; it is not to you that it is sent; it is to me that Protesilaus of Elaeus would signify that though he be dead and dry he has power given him by heaven to take vengeance on me that wronged him. Now therefore I offer a ransom, to wit, payment of a hundred talents to the god for the treasure that I took from his temple; and I will pay to the Athenians two hundred talents for myself and my son, if they spare us." But Xanthippus the general was unmoved by this promise; for the people of Elaeus entreated that Artajctes should be put to death in justice to Protesilaus, and the general himself likewise was so minded. So they carried Artajctes away to the headland where Xerxes had bridged the strait (or, by another story, to the hill above the town of Madytus), and there nailed him to boards and hanged him aloft; and as for his son, they stoned him to death before his father's eyes.

121. This done, they sailed away to Hellas, carrying with them the tackle of the bridges to be dedicated in their temples, and the rest of the stuff withal. And in that year nothing further was done.

122. This Artajctes who was crucified was grandson to that Artembares¹ who instructed the Persians in a design which they took from him and laid before Cyrus; this was its purport: "Seeing that Zeus grants lordship to the Persian people, and to you, Cyrus, among them, by bringing Astyages low, let us now remove out of the little and rugged land that we possess and take to ourselves one that is better. There be many such on our borders, and many further distant; if we take one of these we shall have more reasons for renown. It is but reasonable that a ruling people should act thus; for when shall we have a fairer occasion than now, when we are lords of so many men and of all Asia?" Cyrus heard them, and found nought to marvel at in their design; "Do so," said he; "but if you do, make ready to be no longer rulers, but subjects. Soft lands breed soft men; wondrous fruits of the earth and valiant warriors grow not from the same soil." Thereat the Persians saw that Cyrus reasoned better than they, and they departed from before him, choosing rather to be rulers on a barren mountain side than slaves dwelling in tilled valleys.

DESCRIPTIVE PROSPECTUS ON APPLICATION

London
Cambridge, Mass

- WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD
HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS

in possession had a decree of a Civil Court declaring him entitled to possession, held that the order of the Magistrate was valid—Id. Hussain v. Pachayappa, 42 M L J. 147, 23 Cr.L.J. 92. But, where the Magistrate declared possession in favour of the opposite party as evidenced by certain documents of title relating to a period as old as 10 years prior to the proceeding, without taking further evidence, oral or documentary, to see whether that possession continued up to the date of proceeding, the High Court set aside the order as contrary to the provisions of this sub-section—Juthan v. Ram Narayan, 18 C.W.N. 700, 15 Cr.L.J. 202.

Land under water—Where the Magistrate made the final order in favour of one party, finding that as there could not be any act of peaceful possession within two months of the date of the proceeding owing to the land being under water, the possession in the current year was to be presumed in favour of the man who was in possession during the previous years, it was held that the order was in direct contravention of this section and the Magistrate should have passed an order under Sec. 146—Satyendra v. Krishnadhan, 20 C.W.N. 1014, 18 Cr.L.J. 80.

Joint possession—See Note 405 ante.

419. Forcible and wrongful possession :—The Magistrate's duty is to find peaceful possession. Ouster of a person lawfully in possession by a trespasser does not confer on the latter any rights which can be recognised under this section. The Magistrate must look to the possession which may be termed peaceful. He must go back to the time when the present dispute originated and not to the result of the dispute itself—In re Mohesh Chandra, 4 Cal. 417. The recent occupation of a trespasser is not a possession which a Magistrate can direct the party to retain under this section. The possession is still with the person ousted by the trespasser, and an order directing him to have possession and the trespasser to be dispossessed is the proper order to be made—Ram Singh v. Dalla, 1876 P.R. 8. Where it appeared that one of the parties within two months prior to the proceedings obtained sanction from the Municipality and proceeded to dig a tank on the land in dispute to the exclusion of another party who was then found to be in possession, it was held that it was forcible and wrongful dispossession within the meaning of this section, and possession must be deemed to be in the party dispossessed—Manmatha Nath v. Ganga, 20 C.W.N. 978, 17 Cr.L.J. 449. But where the Magistrate finds that on the date when the proceedings under this section were instituted and for more than two months preceding that date, the members of the first party have been and are in possession, although the members of the second party obtained delivery of possession of the property through Court a year ago, held that the Magistrate should pass his order in favour of the first party—Shahabai v. Bhajahari, 49 Cal. 177 (181), 24 Cr.L.J. 875.

This proviso lays down that if a party has been dispossessed within two months before the date of the preliminary order, the other party should be maintained in possession. But if through delay in the action of the Magistrate the preliminary order is not passed within two months of the date of dispossession, the dispossessor should not have the benefit of the delay. The proviso should be interpreted reasonably and not literally—Srinivasa v. Dasaratha, 52 Mad. 66, 30 Cr.L.J. 144; Chinchilada v. Chintalasami, 28 Cr.L.J. 782 (783).

If a person has been turned out of possession and submits to the ouster, and the other party, whether rightfully or wrongfully, is in peaceful possession, a Magistrate will not go behind the period when possession may be found to have become peaceable—In re Bunwari Lal, 1 C.L.R. 136. For, the point for inquiry under this section is not whether any of the claimants has taken possession of the subject of dispute by force, but whether the struggle for it has ceased, leaving it in the hands of one of them. If the struggle has ceased, the party in whose hands it remains is in actual possession which the Magistrate is bound to recognise under this section—Q. E. v. Gauhar, 1897 P.R. 5. If, however, the struggle for possession is still proceeding between the party who has taken forcible possession and the rightful owner, or if neither party can show his complete control over the subject at the time when the proceedings are taken, neither party is to be regarded as in possession, and the Magistrate is to take action under section 146—Ibid.

'Forcible' does not mean that actual force or violence should have been used, when the dispossession of a person is effected by a show of criminal force, that person is said to be forcibly dispossessed—Sita Nath v. Harvey, 25 C.W.N. 601, 22 Cr.L.J. 637.

But the mere ouster of people having no title to the land, by the rightful owner, without using any physical violence, and by removing things which had no right to be on the land, cannot be said to be an unlawful and forcible entry on the land within the meaning of this section, and the persons so ousted cannot be treated to have been in possession—Collector of Howrah v. Santak, 44 C.L.J. 593, 28 Cr.L.J. 210. Where a landlord resumes possession of an abandoned holding after compliance with the procedure laid down in sec 87 Bengal Tenancy Act, it cannot be said that he has taken forcible possession of the holding—Nikunja Behari v. Usabati, 31 C.W.N. 242, 28 Cr.L.J. 245.

This sub-section contemplates that the dispossession should be forcible as well as wrongful, the mere wrongful dispossession, without any evidence to show that it was forcible as well, does not come within the purview of this section. The remedy of the party wrongfully dispossessed lies only in the Civil Court—H. V. Low & Co v. Manindra Chandra, 3 Pat. 809 (813, 814), 26 Cr.L.J. 268, Ala Husain v. Latif, 28 Cr.L.J. 437 (All.).

The words "wrongfully dispossessed" mean dispossessed without due warrant of law, or dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law, even though the dispossessor be the rightful owner—Bat Jiba v. Chandulal, 27 Bom. L.R. 1353, A.I.R. 1926 Bom 91, 27 Cr.L.J. 661.

420. Attachment:—See the 2nd proviso to clause (4) Power is given to a Magistrate for the purpose of preserving the peace, and only for that purpose, to attach the disputed property. An order of attachment cannot be passed for the mere purpose of avoiding a future litigation in respect of the right to the present produce of the land in dispute—Atma Singh v. Harnam, 7 Lah 136, 27 P.L.R. 341, 27 Cr L.J. 761.

An order for attachment under the proviso to clause (4) would remain in force only pending the Magistrate's decision, and not until a decree or order of the Civil Court is obtained—Farid v. Piru, 8 S.L.R. 207, 16 Cr L.J. 235.

Where a land was attached under this section and the crops standing on the land were sold and the sale proceeds kept in deposit in the Court, but the preliminary order was afterwards cancelled by the Magistrate on the ground that there was no immediate danger of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate could order the sale-proceeds to be restored to the persons who raised the crops—Suryanarayana v. Ankineed, 47 Mad. 713 (715), 46 M.L.J. 565, 25 Cr L.J. 978, Mahalakshmi v. Subbarayadu, 17 L.W. 429, 24 Cr L.J. 783, or he could order the money to be kept in deposit in the Court, until one party or the other obtained an order in his favour—Suryanarayana v. Ankineed, 47 Mad 713 (716); Chenga Reddi v. Ramasamy, 16 Cr L.J. 104 (Mad).

Moveable property—This section does not authorise the Magistrate to attach moveables—Q E v. Ramchandra, Ratanlal 891; Gopala v. Krishnaswamy, 27 M.L.T. 234, 21 Cr L.J. 73; Arjun v. Chandan, 24 O.C. 167, 22 Cr L.J. 625, Gajraj v. Emp., 20 A.L.J. 906.

Postponement of proceedings—A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order postponing sine die a proceeding under this section, at the same time retaining under attachment the property covered by the proceeding, on grounds extraneous to the proceeding—Abdul Rauf v. Rahimuddin, 13 C.W.N. 104, 9 Cr.L.J. 35.

421. Appointment of receiver—A Magistrate cannot appoint a receiver under the proviso to clause (4) of this section before the commencement of the inquiry. He can do so only under Sec. 146, and after the conclusion of the inquiry—Subhadramma v. Satyam, 1910 M.W.N. 821, 11 Cr L.J. 536, Mewa Lal v. Emp., 3 P.L.J. 147, 19 Cr L.J. 249, Emp. v. Diwan, 30 P.L.R. 23, 30 Cr L.J. 411 (413); Dasrath v. Tarachand, 21 N.L.R. 191, 26 Cr L.J. 1378. Even if a Magistrate appoints a receiver under this section, such receiver will only be an agent or servant of the Magistrate acting under his order. The right to attach (under the second proviso to this clause) carries with it the right to take the necessary steps for the custody and management of the property, and the Magistrate may appoint a receiver for that purpose—Srinivasa v. Sathayappa, 13 Cr L.J. 295 (Mad). The power of such receiver will not be the same as that of a receiver appointed under sec. 146. His duty will be simply to take and keep possession of the properties attached and to make an inventory thereof—Gopala v. Krishnaswami, 27 M.L.T. 234, 21 Cr.L.J. 73.

The amount of the receiver's remuneration should be reasonable, and should not in any case exceed the amount of the nett income realised by the receiver—Yamunabai v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 22, 8 N.L.J. 167.

A receiver can be appointed only by the Magistrate while the inquiry is proceeding and only when he is satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace still exists. The High Court in revision cannot appoint a receiver, because the inquiry is already over and there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace, as the Magistrate's order has put one party in possession of the property in dispute—Marudayya v. Shanmugasundara, 49 M.L.J. 593, A I.R. 1926 Mad. 139, 27 Cr.L.J. 126.

422. Joint Inquiry :—(1) One dispute as to several plots :— When the dispute is one, the fact that it embraces several distinct parcels of land does not necessitate an independent proceeding in respect of each. His findings should naturally be directed to possession of particular plots, but the fact that he did not take separate proceedings in respect to each plot would not invalidate his entire proceedings—Krishna Kamini v Abdul Jabbar, 30 Cal. 155 (F B) at pp 185, 200; Sajani Kanta v. Shamsher, 24 Cr L J. 235 (Cal). Although it may be desirable under such circumstances to deal with each dispute relating to each of several plots separately, it is impossible to extend to such proceedings the strict rule of procedure observed in civil actions—Manik Mandal v. Gobinda, 6 C.W.N 206. To draw up one proceeding with respect to several plots of land claimed to be in the possession of different persons would not be bad, if it was shown that none of the parties had been precluded from giving any evidence and no party was prejudiced by the Magistrate's action in not taking separate proceedings—Ishwar Chandra v. Ambica Charan, 5 C.W.N 544; Gajadhar v Thakur Singh, 26 Cr.L.J 424 (Pat.).

(2) Different disputes as to different subjects :— Where the parties are found to be in possession of different and separate pieces of land, e.g., when the dispute is alleged to exist in 230 villages and each village stands on its own footing, the Magistrate does not exercise proper jurisdiction if he clubs together 230 subjects of dispute and treats them as one. The Magistrate should decide which party is in possession of this or that village, instead of arbitrarily finding that one party was in possession of all the villages—Tirumatraja v Lodd Gobind Doss, 29 Mad. 561, Crown v. Jamal, 1 S L.R. 25, 9 Cr.L.J 265. When there are independent disputes relating to distinct parcels of land, they ought to be dealt with in separate proceedings—Krishna Kamini v Abdul, 30 Cal 155 (200) (F.B.).

(3) Different claims :— In a dispute regarding possession of 708 bighas of land belonging to a Zemindari, the parties to the dispute were persons interested as tenants under the Zemindari on the one side, and on the other side persons claiming under the same Zemindar to be interested in various portions of the land as their maurasi jote in different quantities and under interests acquired at different times; and the Magistrate tried the case together and passed an order in favour of the former, directing that they as a body should remain in possession until evicted therefrom by order of a Civil Court, held that the Magistrate should have distinctly specified which persons were entitled as against which, and to which, portion of the land in dispute. The proceedings were set aside—Kutuhul v. Uma Singh, 15 Cal 31.

there is no reason why he should not be able to stay further proceedings on similar information, without being obliged to record such evidence as the parties may produce with the same formality as he would have done if he had gone on with his inquiry instead of dropping it—Suryanarayan v Ankineed, 47 Mad 713 (715), 35 M.L.T. 68, 25 Cr.L.J. 978

When a Magistrate cancels an order under this sub-section, he has no jurisdiction to allow one of the parties to reap the crops to the exclusion of the other—Karimuddi v Namuddi, 3 C.L.J. 573. When the Magistrate has cancelled his preliminary order and dropped the proceedings, he becomes functus officio and has no jurisdiction to direct the delivery of the property or of its sale-proceeds (e.g., where the property is sold, being perishable) to one of the contending parties. The proper course under these circumstances is to retain the property or its sale-proceeds in court, until one of the parties obtains an order of a Civil Court—Narasayya v Venkiah, 49 Mad 232, 49 M.L.J. 784, 27 Cr.L.J. 95; Changa v Ramasamy, 16 Cr.L.J. 104 (Mad); Dasrath v. Tarachand, 21 N.L.R. 191, 26 Cr.L.J. 1378

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to cancel the order of his predecessor—In re Krishnasami, 2 Weir 108. Where a proceeding under sec. 145 has been drawn up by a Deputy Magistrate, the District Magistrate can cancel the proceeding after transferring the case to his own file, and on a consideration of the facts and after hearing the objections of the parties—Tara Charan v Bengal Coal Co., Ltd., 13 C.W.N. 125.

Effect of cancellation—An order striking off proceedings under this section does not amount to an adjudication of the question of possession for the purpose of sub-section (6)—Manindra v Baroda, 30 Cal. 112.

Fresh proceedings—When proceedings under this section are struck off on the ground that there is no immediate apprehension of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to revive the proceedings. He can only start fresh proceedings upon fresh materials which must be specific relating to the lands in dispute. A general state of affairs in the locality is insufficient—Khubi v Darbari, 2 P.L.T. 267, 22 Cr.L.J. 481. If it is intended to take fresh proceedings upon new materials, it is necessary for the Magistrate to record such materials in his order renewing the proceedings—Manik v Azimuddi, 6 C.W.N. 923.

But a Magistrate can, after withdrawing the proceedings under this section, start proceedings under sec. 10 of the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act, 1920—Digendra v Janaki, 33 C.W.N. 1115 (1117).

425. Clause (6)—Final Order :—

Contents :—Whether sections 366 and 367 do or do not apply to proceedings under sec. 145, the Magistrate in his final order must give reasons for his decision sufficient to enable the High Court to determine whether he has complied with the terms of sub-section (4) and directed his mind to the consideration of the evidence adduced before him, and whether he has acted with jurisdiction in making his final order. A statement in the final order that the witnesses have been examined, pleaders have been heard on both sides, and oral and documentary evidence of both parties has been considered, is of a stereotyped nature applicable to any and every case and does not enable the High Court to understand what in fact the evidence was or to say that the mind of the trying Magistrate had been properly and sufficiently directed to its consideration. Such a final order is bad and the case must be retried—Bhuban Chandra v. Nibaran, 49 Cal 187 (189), 25 C.W.N. 887, 22 Cr.L.J. 499; Peria Subba v. Sinna Subbaya, 31 M.L.T. 312, 45 M.L.J. 56, 23 Cr.L.J. 670; Mothahar Ali v. Eshaque, 39 C.L.J. 366, 25 Cr.L.J. 1115; Ishan Chandra v. Hriday, 29 C.W.N. 475, 26 Cr.L.J. 915, 41 C.L.J. 357.

Signature —A Magistrate should sign his name in full to a judicial order under this section and should also note his official position—Nojem v. Jamalali 12 C.W.N. 771

Who can pass order —The jurisdiction to make a final order under this section is not personal to the Magistrate who initiates the proceedings; and a District Magistrate may of his own motion transfer a case under this chapter to another Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him, and the latter can pass the final order—Ram Kissors v. Dwarka, 10 C.W.N. 1095; Satish Chandra v. Rajendra, 22 Cal 898 (901).

But where a Magistrate who heard a case under this section handed over his charge to another Magistrate and was transferred to another district, and subsequently delivered the final order in the case, held that once he had handed over the charge and was transferred to another district he became functus officio and ceased to have any jurisdiction. In the case He therefore acted without jurisdiction in delivering the final order—Jagatbandhu v. Jagabandhu, 38 C.L.J. 201, 25 Cr.L.J. 192 (following Emp. v. Anand Sarup, 3 All. 563).

"Or should...be treated as being" :—"We think that this sub-section should apply not only to the case of a party in actual possession but also to one who is to be treated as being in possession under the proviso to sub-section (4), and we have amended sub-section (6) in this sense"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

426. "May restore to possession" etc. :—"Power has been given to restore to possession a party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). "We think that this is a logical carrying out of the provision contained in the first proviso to sub-section (4)"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Prior to this amendment, it was held in several cases that the only order which a Magistrate was competent to pass under this section was one declaring one of the parties to be entitled to possession, but he had no jurisdiction to deliver possession or to oust one person and place another in possession of the property—Tulsi Ram v. Abrar Ahmad, 37 All. 654, 13 A.L.J. 932, 16 Cr.L.J. 714; Emp. v. Rameshar, 27 All. 300; Sheorani v. Baij Nath, 14 A.L.J. 146, 17 Cr.L.J. 145; Moore v. Monoranjan, 12 C.W.N. 696 (699); Ranendra Narain v. Kishori, 14 C.W.N. 78, 11 Cr.L.J. 26; Ram Ratton v. Nettra Kally, 4 Cal. 339. These cases are no longer of any authority.

there is no reason why he should not be able to stay further proceedings on similar information, without being obliged to record such evidence as the parties may produce with the same formality as he would have done if he had gone on with his inquiry instead of dropping it—Suryanarayan v. Ankineed, 47 Mad 713 (715), 35 M.L.T. 68, 25 Cr.L.J. 978

When a Magistrate cancels an order under this sub-section, he has no jurisdiction to allow one of the parties to reap the crops to the exclusion of the other—Karimuddin v. Naimuddin, 3 C.L.J. 573. When the Magistrate has cancelled his preliminary order and dropped the proceedings, he becomes functus officio and has no jurisdiction to direct the delivery of the property or of its sale-proceeds (e.g., where the property is sold, being perishable) to one of the contending parties. The proper course under these circumstances is to retain the property or its sale-proceeds in court, until one of the parties obtains an order of a Civil Court—Narasayya v. Venkiah, 49 Mad 232, 49 M.L.J. 784, 27 Cr.L.J. 85; Chenga v. Ramasamy, 16 Cr.L.J. 104 (Mad.); Dasrath v. Tarachand, 21 N.L.R. 191, 26 Cr.L.J. 1378.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to cancel the order of his predecessor—In re Krishnasami, 2 Weir 108. Where a proceeding under sec. 145 has been drawn up by a Deputy Magistrate, the District Magistrate can cancel the proceeding after transferring the case to his own file, and on a consideration of the facts and after hearing the objections of the parties—Tara Charan v. Bengal Coal Co., Ltd., 13 C.W.N. 125.

Effect of cancellation:—An order striking off proceedings under this section does not amount to an adjudication of the question of possession for the purpose of sub-section (6)—Manindra v. Baroda, 30 Cal. 112.

Fresh proceedings —When proceedings under this section are struck off on the ground that there is no immediate apprehension of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to revive the proceedings. He can only start fresh proceedings upon fresh materials which must be specific relating to the lands in dispute. A general state of affairs in the locality is insufficient—Khubi v. Darbari, 2 P.L.T. 267, 22 Cr.L.J. 481. If it is intended to take fresh proceedings upon new materials, it is necessary for the Magistrate to record such materials in his order renewing the proceedings—Manik v. Azimuddin, 6 C.W.N. 923.

But a Magistrate can, after withdrawing the proceedings under this section, start proceedings under sec. 10 of the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act, 1920—Digendra v. Janaki, 33 C.W.N. 1115 (1117).

425. Clause (6)—Final Order :—

Contents.—Whether sections 366 and 367 do or do not apply to proceedings under sec. 145, the Magistrate in his final order must give reasons for his decision sufficient to enable the High Court to determine whether he has complied with the terms of sub-section (4) and directed his mind to the consideration of the evidence adduced before him, and whether he has acted with jurisdiction in making his final order. A statement in the final order that the witnesses have been examined, pleaders have contending its validity the burden of proving his title. The onus is not upon the person in possession to show that the judgment in his favour is right; it is for his opponent to show that it is wrong, and where and why it is wrong—Ibid. The onus is on the plaintiff to show that the person in possession under the order of the Magistrate has no right to possession—Manindra v. Saradinda, 23 C.W.N. 593.

Appointment of Receiver by Civil Court:—The fact that there is an order under this section does not bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to appoint a Receiver under O. XL, C. P. Code, 1908. The C. P. Code and the powers of the Civil Court under that Code are in no way fettered by an order that may be passed by a Magistrate under this section. The Magistrate's order is only intended to control any period up to the time when the Civil Court takes seizure of the matter—Barkatunnissa v. Abdul Aziz, 22 All. 214.

Mamlatdar's order as to possession.—An order under this section does not take away the jurisdiction of the Mamlatdar or any other Civil Court to decide who was in actual possession before the date of the order.—Nagappa v. Syed Badruddin, 26 Bom. 353

Suit under sec 9 Specific Relief Act—An unsuccessful party in a proceeding under this section cannot be said to have been dispossessed, and therefore he has no cause of action to bring a suit under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act.—Moore v. Manoranjan, 12 C W N 696. But where the plaintiff was forcibly dispossessed by the defendant before the institution of proceedings under this section, and the trespasser's possession was maintained by the Magistrate, the plaintiff is entitled to sue under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act—Jwala v. Ganga Prasad, 30 All. 331.

Evidentiary value:—Orders of Magistrates under this section are admissible in evidence to show the fact that such orders were made. They are also evidence of the following facts all or which appear from the orders themselves, viz., who the parties in dispute were, what the land in dispute was, and who was declared entitled to retain possession. For this purpose and to this extent such orders are admissible in evidence for and against every one, when the fact of possession at the date of order has to be ascertained. If the order refers to a map, that map is admissible in evidence to render the order intelligible—Dinomoni v. Brojo Mohini, 29 Cal. 187 (P.C.), 6 C.W.N. 386.

429. Orders which cannot be made under this section:—The final order should declare which party is in possession and should state that he will continue in possession until evicted therefrom in due course of law, and should forbid all disturbance of such possession. An order in these terms "I warn the opposite party not to interfere with the possession of the first party in any way" is not one in sufficient compliance with the law—Khubi v. Darbari, 2 P.L.T. 267, 22 Cr L J 481. Where possession is found to be in one party, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to grant to the other party permission to cultivate the lands in dispute pending any suit that might be subsequently brought—Shib Churn v. Ishen, 18 W.R. 27. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a division of crops on the land between the parties—Ram Narain v. Kailash, 8 C.L.J. 242. Nor can he order that a person shall be maintained in possession until he has reaped the crops and then he shall give way to another—In re Bunwari Lal, 1 C.L.R. 136.

Where a Magistrate found that the disputed land was in the possession of the second party, and declared that party to be in possession of the land, but directed that two pathways on the land should be made over to the first party, held that there was nothing in this section which gave the Magistrate power to pass an order of this kind—Asit Mohan v. Sarat Chandra, 17 C.W.N. 793, 14 Cr L.J. 391. But the Bombay High Court dissents from this ruling and holds that in proceedings under this section, it is competent to the Magistrate not only to award possession of the land in dispute but also to grant a right of way to one of the parties. If the Magistrate has power to put the petitioners in possession of a certain portion of a land, he is also empowered (under sec 147, if not under sec 145) to give them a lesser right, viz the right to pass over a strip in that land—In re Amarsang, 48 Bom 512 (515), 26 Bom.L.R. 436.

In a dispute as to the right to tap a tree, the Magistrate cannot direct that a passage should be left, for the purpose of such tapping, in a wall which was being built by the second party—Fiblal v. Emp, 3 P.L.J. 316, 19 Cr L.J. 656.

A Magistrate is not competent to pass an order directing the method by which the possession is to be exercised or the agency by which the person in possession is to collect the profits—Akaloo v. Mohesh Lal, 36 Cal 986, 11 Cr.L.J. 28.

430. Supplementary order without notice :—Proceedings under this section were drawn up in respect of certain premises consisting of a dalan, a hotel and a privy, and the Magistrate made his final order with regard to the first two. Subsequently, the omission in respect of the privy being brought to his notice by one of the parties, the Magistrate declared that party's possession of it without notice to the other party. It was held that the order in respect of the privy should not have been made without hearing the other party—Natabar v. Bireswar, 22 C.W.N. 552, 19 Cr L.J. 732.

431. Order in respect of land not covered by proceedings :—In a proceeding under this section, the Magistrate is bound to ascertain and define the land in dispute, and he has no jurisdiction to pass an order in respect of lands which were not covered by the initiatory proceeding—Amriteswar v. Darpa Narain, 7 C.W.N. 558; Sukhari v. Ram Khelawan, 4 P.L.T. 372, 24 Cr L.J. 309; Ultam Singh v. Jodhan Rai, 3 Pat 288 (295), 27 Cr L.J. 220.

A Magistrate would also be exceeding his jurisdiction if his final order covers plots of land not included in the preliminary order passed under sub-section (1)—Chaman Singh v. Gook, 11 C.W.N. xliii.

432. Alteration of proceedings :—If a Magistrate, after having initiated proceedings under sec. 145, afterwards finds that the dispute is as regards a right of way over a land, rather than regarding the possession of the land, he can alter the proceedings under sec. 145 into proceedings under sec. 147 and pass an order under the latter section—In re Amarsang, 48 Bom. 512 (515), 26 Bom.L.R. 436; Anath Bandhu v. Wahid Ali, 26 Cr.L.J. 558 (Cal).

433. Persons bound by the order :—The parties whom the Magistrate has to deal with are not merely the actual parties to, but all persons who may be concerned in, the dispute, the object being to prevent a breach of the peace. Therefore it is not only the actual parties but all parties who may have notice of the proceedings that are bound by the order—In re Nathubhai, 11 Bom.L.R. 277 This is borne out by sub-section (3) which lays down that the preliminary order must be published at some conspicuous place at or near the subject of dispute. An order under this section is binding not only on the actual parties but also on persons who, though not made parties, were aware of the proceedings and acted in collusion with the second party—Satya Charan v. K. E., 33 C.W.N. 1002 (1004) Once a declaration has been made as regards the possession of a land, it is binding on all persons interested therein. Consequently, it is for the person who disputes that possession, whether he was a party to the proceedings or not, to institute a suit in a Civil Court—Jainath v. Ramalakhan, 10 P.L.T. 689, 30 Cr.L.J. 840 (841). The Oudh Chief Court, however, has been of opinion that orders under this section are not binding on persons who were not made parties to the proceedings. See Muqimunnissa v. Ahmedunnissa, 2 O.W.N. 704, 26 Cr.L.J. 1581; Mahesh v. K.E., 11 O.L.J. 743, 26 Cr.L.J. 398.

An order under this section binds not only the actual parties but their representatives also. It is binding on a purchaser from the person against whom it was made and with knowledge of such order—Goluck v. Kali Charan, 13 Cal 175 It is binding upon all persons who may claim the property through the parties to the proceedings under a title derived subsequent to the order—Jogendra v. Brojendra, 23 Cal 731

But a person who was merely examined as a witness in the proceeding is not a party bound by an order under this section—Q. E. v. Kuppayyar, 18 Mad 51.

434. Duration of the order :—An order of the Magistrate is meant to be a temporary order and is to be in operation until one or other of the parties applies for and obtains a determination of his rights in a Civil Court—Amriteswari v. Darpa Narain, 7 C.W.N. 558, Kunja Behari v. Khetra Pal, 29 Cal 208 It is intended to control only the period up to the time when the Civil Court takes seisin of the matter and passes such order as may be necessary for the protection of the property—Barkalunnissa v. Abdul Aziz, 22 All 214 This section does not empower a Magistrate to make an order permanently settling the difference of the parties—Mad. High Court Pro., 23-6-1883

435. Subsection (7)—Continuation of proceedings :
—Before the amendment of 1923, this sub-section stood as follows :—

“Proceedings under this section shall not abate by reason only of the death of any of the parties thereto.”

The sub-section has now been expanded. “The Magistrate has been authorised, on the death of a party, to make his legal representative a party to the proceedings, and if necessary, to decide who such legal representative is”—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

This clause supersedes the decision in Bechu v. Debkumari, 21 Cal. 404, where it was held that a son could not be made a party in place of his deceased father.

The words “may cause” show that the Magistrate is not bound to continue the proceedings on the death of a party. The provision in clause (7) is intended to keep alive the jurisdiction of the Court where the danger to the peace still exists inspite of the death of any party to the proceedings. If however, the dispute no longer exists and the danger has disappeared, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to discontinue the proceedings—Kamalammal v Vavu Rowther, 4 L.W. 57, 17 Cr.L.J. 138.

Death of Petitioner before High Court :—The death of the petitioner (who applied for revision of an order of a District Magistrate) during the pendency of the application for revision in the High Court, causes the application to abate. This sub-section only applies to proceedings before a Magistrate—Krishen Deo v Hari Singh, 1919 P.R. 23, 20 Cr.L.J. 730; Subbaraju v Ramachandra, 4 L.W. 440, 17 Cr.L.J. 369.

Sub-section (8) :—“The Magistrate has been empowered to pass necessary orders for the custody or sale of the property in dispute which is subject to speedy and natural decay”—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). Thus, if the subject matter of dispute is a crop growing on the land, the Magistrate can cause the crop to be sold by auction and the price placed in deposit, as was done in Mir Singh v. Makkhan, 45 All. 404.

436. Sub-section (9) :—“We have added this sub-section on the lines of section 244 (2)”—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). Even prior to this amendment, there has been a large number of decisions empowering the Magistrate to issue summons to witnesses, which are given below.

Summons to witnesses —If the parties cannot procure the attendance of witnesses, it is the Magistrate’s duty to issue summons for their attendance—Ram Chandra v. Monohur, 21 Cal. 29; Surya Kanta v. Hem Chandra, 30 Cal. 508. When an application for the issue of summonses to witnesses is made at a proper time, the Magistrate should not arbitrarily refuse his assistance merely on the ground that the number of witnesses mentioned is large—Hurendra v. Bhowani, 11 Cal. 762, or on the ground that the application for the issue of summonses is vexatious—Gajjudi v. Ainuddi, 18 C.W.N. 94, 15 Cr.L.J. 79. But it is not obligatory on a Magistrate to assist the parties in producing their witnesses, and they cannot claim as a matter of right that processes should be issued by the Court to enable them to bring forward their evidence—Tarapada v. Nurul Haq, 32 Cal. 1093; Harendra v. Girish Chandra, 38 Cal. 24, 11 Cr.L.J. 530; Arjun v. Juggar Nath, 3 P.L.T. 433, 23 Cr.L.J. 275. A Magistrate is not bound to exhaust the processes of the Court in order to enforce the attendance of witnesses that do not appear or cannot be found—Haripada v. Sanyasi, 17 C.W.N. 144, 14 Cr.L.J. 40. Cf. the words "may if he thinks fit" in the sub-section

437. Sub-section (10)—Power to proceed under Sec. 107:—In Balajit v. Bhoju, 35 Cal. 117, it has been held that the word 'shall' in sub-section 1 ('he shall make an order in writing' etc.) is mandatory; and therefore where there is a bona fide dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, the Magistrate is bound to proceed under this section, and he has no discretion to act under sec. 107. It was proposed by the Amending Bill of 1914 to substitute the word 'may' for 'shall', so as to give the Magistrate a discretion to proceed either under Sec. 107 or under Sec. 145. The Select Committee of 1916, instead of making the verbal alteration, added the present sub-section

There may be cases in which it would be necessary to bind parties over under section 107, in order to prevent a breach of the peace even though proceedings under sec. 145 had been taken. An order under section 145 is no bar to the passing of an order under sec. 107—In re Muthia, 36 Mad. 315, 14 Cr.L.J. 559, K. E. v. Bandi, 24 O.C. 21, 22 Cr.L.J. 384

Miscellaneous :—

438. Effect of prior decree on a proceeding under this section :—Where there is a decree of a Civil Court for possession in respect of the disputed land, the duty of a Criminal Court proceeding under this section is to find which party held such Civil Court decree and then to maintain that party in possession—Sims v. Johurry, 5 C.W.N. 563; Atul Hazra v. Uma Charan, 20 C.W.N. 796, 17 Cr.L.J. 182; Md. Husain v. Pachayappa, 42 M.L.J. 147, Ram Krishna v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 335, 23 Cr.L.J. 321; Kedar Nath v. Jaleswar, 4 P.L.T. 248; Gobind Chander v. Abdul, 6 Cal. 835, Kunja Behari v. Khetra Pal, 29 Cal. 208. It is the duty of the Magistrate to maintain any order which has been passed by the Civil Court, and therefore to take proceedings which must necessarily have the effect of modifying or cancelling such order or of interfering with the rights of parties determined by a Civil Court, is to assume a jurisdiction that the law does not contemplate—Doulat v. Rameswari, 26 Cal. 625, In re Pandurang, 24 Bom. 527; Baldeo v. Raj Ballam, 2 A.L.J. 274, Brahmanath v. Sundarnath, 17 A.L.J. 434, 20 Cr.L.J. 410; Behari Gir v. Bhubaneswari, 1 P.L.T. 9, 5 P.L.J. 104, 21 Cr.L.J. 200, Abhoy Mandal v. Basu Rai, 27 C.W.N. 267, 37 C.L.J. 256, Durganand v. Hiranand, 25 Cr.L.J. 88 (Pat)

Thus, where a Nazir acting under the authority of the Civil Court puts the auction-purchaser in possession of a haut, the Magistrate is not competent to direct the judgment-debtor, who raises the plea that the property is debutter, to be retained in possession until ousted by a Civil Court, but should see that the possession as given by the Nazir is maintained, leaving it to the judgment-debtor to substantiate his claim as shebait in a Civil Court—In re Chutraput Singh, 5 C.L.R. 200. In a proceeding under this section, the Magistrate has no right to compel a party who has obtained a decree from a Civil Court in respect of the property in dispute to go back to the Civil Court and get something else. The Magistrate has nothing to do but to give effect to the decree of the Civil Court—Lachmi v Partab, 27 Cr.L.J. 43 (Oudh). The Magistrate cannot ignore the decree of the Civil Court on the ground that that Court had no jurisdiction over the property. He cannot go behind the decision of the Civil Court and ignore the decree, even though that Court had no jurisdiction over the land. It is not for the Magistrate to question the validity of a decree that has not been set aside by a competent Court—Abhoy Mondal v Basu Rai, 27 C.W.N. 267; Tufani v Bibi Umatul, 5 P.L.T. 535, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 765. Where a decree-holder has obtained delivery of possession under O. 21, rule 35, C. P. Code, in execution of his decree, the judgment debtor is precluded from raising the question, and a Magistrate acts illegally in starting a case under sec. 145 of the Crim. Pro. Code and in not upholding the Civil Court's decree and the delivery of possession given by that Court—Behari v Rani Bhubaneswari, 5 P.L.J. 104, 21 Cr.L.J. 200. Where the Civil Court decree has defined the boundaries of a jalkar right, the Magistrate in instituting proceedings under this section ought to follow that decree and not to attempt an explanation of it—Fani Bhusan v. Jamiruddin, 6 C.W.N. 161. Where one of the parties to a dispute regarding the land has been actually put in possession of the same by a Civil Court, as a result of sale under its decree, it is the duty of a Criminal Court to uphold the status of that party as established by the Civil Court—Krishna Alhadini v Radha Syam, 7 C.W.N. 118.

Where a dispute between the parties had been terminated by an order under the provisions of secs. 40 and 41 of the Bengal Survey Act, and there had also been an entry in the Record of Rights in accordance with that order, the Magistrate should, in determining the question of possession between the parties in a proceeding under this section, presume that the possession of the land was with the person who had title as determined by the decision under the Survey Act, and which title was further to be presumed from the entry in the Record of Rights—Pratulla v. Hodding, 21 C.W.N. 1059, 26 C.L.J. 39, 18 Cr.L.J. 988; Srinath v. Pravat Chandra, 18 Cr.L.J. 301 (Cal). A summary decision under the Bengal Land Registration Act is entitled to the same respect as a Civil Court decree on the question of possession, in a proceeding under this section—Kulbans v. Ramsidh, 1 P.L.T. 501, 21 Cr.L.J. 735; Baba Lal v. Manager, Bettia Estate, 1 P.L.T. 588, 21 Cr.L.J. 785. But if in the land registration proceedings there was no adjudication of possession by the Revenue Courts, and they refused to register the name of a particular party, the Magistrate in a proceeding under this section is bound to determine as to which of the parties is in actual and physical possession of the property in dispute—Babu Lal v. Manager, Bettia Estate, 1 P.L.T. 588.

The Magistrate, in giving effect to a decree of the Civil Court is not entitled to go behind it or to put his own interpretation or construction upon it—In re Raja Leelanand, 1 C.L.R. 273; Abhoy Mondal v. Basu Rai, 27 C.W.N. 267. Thus, where in execution of a Civil Court decree in a suit in which only one of the members of a Mitakshara family was a party, the whole of the family property was delivered over to the purchaser, it was not competent to a Magistrate acting under this section to declare that the purchaser should be put into possession of a fractional share and that the shares of those persons who were not made parties to the suit ought not to have been included in the decree—Madholal v. Jaglal, 6 C.W.N. 841.

But every previous decree of a Civil Court or order of a Criminal Court is not necessarily conclusive; the evidentiary value to be attached to such a decree or order must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case—Kuloda Kinkar v. Danesh, 33 Cal 33. No hard and fast rule can be laid down to the effect that a Magistrate in a proceeding under this section must give effect to a prior decision or order of a Civil or Criminal Court. The Magistrate is not bound to maintain the decision blindly. If he finds that after the passing of the decree the possession of the party to whom possession was delivered by the Civil Court has been disturbed or that the property has changed hands, he has jurisdiction to pass orders irrespective of the Civil Court decree—Parmeswar v. Kailaspati, 1 P.L.J. 336, 17 Cr.L.J. 369; Bhulan v. Kumari, 5 P.L.T. 69, 25 Cr.L.J. 951; Kedar Nath v. Jaleswar, 4 P.L.T. 248, 24 Cr.L.J. 467; Ram Baran v. Sagina, 4 P.L.T. 333, 24 Cr.L.J. 939. So also, it is open to a Magistrate to go behind the order passed in favour of a party under the Survey and Settlement Act and the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is also open to the Magistrate to hold that on the evidence the presumption arising from an entry in the Record of Rights has been rebutted—Syed Sadek Raza v. Sachindra, 37 C.L.J. 128, 24 Cr.L.J. 569.

439. In order that the decree of the Civil Court may be binding on the Magistrate, three things are necessary, namely —

(1) First, the decree must be recent—It is the duty of the Magistrate to maintain the rights of the parties, when such rights have been declared by a competent Court within a time not remote from that of his taking proceedings under this section—Doulat v. Rameshwari, 26 Cal 625, Pratap v. Sundarbans, 24 Cr.L.J. 279, 3 P.L.T. 628, Parameswar v. Kailaspati, 1 P.L.J. 336; Kedarnath v. Jaleswar, 4 P.L.T. 248, Rambaran v. Sagina, 4 P.L.T. 333. Thus, it is the duty of the Magistrate to have found possession in accordance with the decree of the Civil Court, when a party had been put into possession by that Court eight days prior to the institution of proceedings under this section—Gulraj v. Sheikh Bhatoor, 32 Cal. 796, or within three months or so—Kunja Behari v. Khetra Lal, 29 Cal 208, 6 C.W.N. 39, Durganand v. Hiranand, 25 Cr.L.J. 88 (Pat).

But if the decree of the Civil Court is not recent but several years old, it would be unsafe to act on that documentary evidence alone—Q. v. Boohee Khan, 5 W.R. 79 A decree which is 23 years old is not conclusive as to the question of possession, because it is not absolutely impossible that the party who obtained the decree 23 years ago should have been subsequently dispossessed—Lowsen v. Kali Charan, 8 C.W.N. 719. So also, with the case of a decree 17 years old—Kuloda Kinkar v. Dancesh, 33 Cal. 33 Even a decree four years old is not sufficiently conclusive, and the Magistrate in disregarding that decree would not be acting without jurisdiction—Matangi Charan v. Lakhan, 11 C.W.N. cxx.

(2) Secondly, the decree must have been passed between the same parties. A decree passed ex parte under which only symbolical possession was delivered or one which was not inter partes is not binding on a criminal court in proceedings under this section—Promoda v. Khetra, 25 Cr.L.J. 1104 (Cal.), Atul v. Snnath, 23 C.W.N. 982, 20 Cr.L.J. 840

(3) Thirdly, the decree or order of the Court must give possession.—Possession must have been given to one of the parties either by the decree itself, or by an order of the Court in execution of the decree (e.g. to an auction-purchaser)

Where the Civil Court deals only with the question of propriety of land, the decree of such Court will not bar a Magistrate from deciding the question of possession under this section—Baldeo v. Raj Ballam, 2 A.L.J. 274, 2 Cr.L.J. 236 Under sec. 145, the Magistrate has to make an inquiry as to possession which may be quite contrary to title supported by a decree of a Civil Court—In re Anya Shidya, 29 Bom.L.R. 715, 28 Cr.L.J. 578 (579) So also, where the suit in which the decree was passed was merely one for damages, in which the determination of title was incidentally necessary, but the suit was neither for possession nor for declaration of title, the decree in such suit was not conclusive as to possession and the Magistrate was competent to take proceedings under this section, see Subbarama v. Mariya, 1914 M.W.N. 798, 1 L.W. 493, 15 Cr.L.J. 559, Shriram v. Samirnal, 24 N.L.R. 148, 29 Cr.L.J. 902 (903). So also, where the question of possession was raised by the parties, but was neither fought out between them nor decided by the Court, the decree would not bar a proceeding under this section—Annaswamy v. Mathu Kumara, 15 Cr.L.J. 663 (Mad.)

There must be actual delivery of possession under the decree or order of the Civil Court. Where merely the sale was confirmed and the sale certificate issued, but there was no delivery of possession, actual or symbolical, to the petitioners, their rights were not protected from proceedings under this section—Ragava v. Krishnasami, 31 Mad. 416 Symbolical possession given to the purchaser would raise the presumption that the purchaser had possession, although it may be that slight evidence would suffice to rebut that presumption—Raja Babu v. Muddu Mohan, 14 Cal. 169. So, where it was found that in spite of symbolical possession being given to one party the other party continued in possession, the Magistrate had to determine who was in actual possession and it was no part of his duty to protect the symbolical possession given by the Civil Court—Ambar Ali v. Piran Ali, 55 Cal. 826, 32 C.W.N. 275, 29 Cr.L.J. 503. See note 418 ante.

Where an order (of a Criminal Court) under section 522 of this Code was passed, directing restoration of immoveable property, but possession as a fact was never delivered to the petitioners, such infructuous order would not bar the jurisdiction of the Magistrate in taking proceedings under this section in respect of the same property—Probhat v. Prosanna, 18 C.W.N. 1088, 15 Cr.L.J. 700.

Effect of previous decree on third party—Where in a proceeding under this section, it appeared that the first party had previously brought a suit for rent against some persons (tenants) not parties to the proceeding and purchased the disputed properties at a sale held in execution of an ex parte decree obtained therein, and had been put in possession without the knowledge of the second party, and the Magistrate found that the rent suit brought by the landlord against the tenants in possession was not a bona fide one and declared the second party to be in possession of the disputed land, it was held that under the circumstances of the case the order of the Magistrate was not erroneous and was not liable to be set aside. A previous decree of the Civil Court relating to the proceedings in dispute may throw light upon the evidence on the matter, but the evidentiary value to be attached to such a piece of evidence must depend upon the particular circumstances of the individual case. Decrees of Courts so far as third parties are concerned may have different value in different cases. Where for instance, there has been a real contest between the parties to a suit, and upon an adjudication regarding title or possession a party has been awarded a decree and has been put in possession in execution of such a decree, it would be conclusive upon any person even though he was not a party to the decree. But cases of money decrees followed by sale of property would stand on a different footing. In these cases, the sale in execution only passes the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor; consequently there is no adjudication regarding title to property, and therefore it is not conclusive upon a third person as regards possession or title—Atul v. Srinath, 23 C.W.N. 982 (1985), 30 C.L.J. 123, 20 Cr.L.J. 840.

In estimating the value of delivery of possession against third parties, it is also material to see what is the true nature of the possession said to have been delivered—Atul v. Srinath, 23 C.W.N. 982 (1985).

440. Effect of previous decision of criminal courts as to possession :—In proceedings under sec 145, the Magistrates have always upheld the possession given by Civil Courts. But possession given by Criminal Courts cannot be treated in the same manner as possession given by the Civil Courts is treated in cases under this section. Kedar v. Lalit, 2 C.L.J. 147. A Magistrate does not act without jurisdiction merely because he does not accept the decision in a previous case of rioting as to possession—Bhulan v. Kumari, 5 P.L.T. 69, 25 Cr.L.J. 951. A judgment of a Criminal Court in which a person was acquitted, and in which it was incidentally found that he was in possession can only be evidence of the fact that there was such a case and that it ended in such acquittal, but the finding on the question of possession which is a ground of such acquittal can hardly be any evidence in subsequent proceedings between the parties with regard to the property in dispute—Shashimukhi v. Sarat Chandra, 31 C.W.N. 310, 28 Cr.L.J. 329 (331).

But when proceedings had once been taken under sec. 145, in which the Magistrate had decided the second party to be in possession of the property until the decision of a Civil Court was obtained, but the parties instead of going to the Civil Court continued to dispute among themselves, whereupon fresh proceedings were taken under sec. 145, held that the Magistrate in deciding the second case was concluded by the previous decision of the Criminal Court as to possession, and was not entitled to take any action contrary to that decision, unless he found that there had been a change of possession since the decision of the first case—Jagat Singh v. Sunder Singh, 27 P.L.R. 630, 27 Cr.L.J. 815.

441. Suit for damages for improper proceedings:—Where proceedings are initiated under this section by a party who is eventually unsuccessful, it is open to the successful party to sue for damages. The damages in such a case are remote and are sufficiently compensated by any order for costs that might be made in the proceedings—Ram Das v. Md. Faqir, 20 A.L.J. 205, A.I.R. 1922 All. 143.

442. Effect of order under this section on a subsequent civil suit:—An order under this section does not decide any question of title. Therefore where a case under section 145 was compromised by the parties, and the Magistrate passed an order in terms of that compromise, it was held that the order simply settled the question of possession but did not determine the question of title, and the parties were not therefore precluded by the order from having recourse to the Civil Court for the determination of that question—Gopi Das v. Madho Lal, 45 All. 162, 20 A.L.J. 932.

Effect of order on a subsequent criminal case.—Although the Magistrate may declare a certain party to be in possession of a certain field, the other party on being subsequently charged under sec. 379 I. P. Code for carrying away the crops of the field may show by adducing evidence that he was in actual possession of the field in spite of the order under sec. 145 declaring the first party in possession—Rakhal v. Makham, 31 C.W.N. 964, 28 Cr.L.J. 827.

Limitation for subsequent civil suit:—See Art. 47 of the Indian Limitation Act.

443. Striking off proceedings:—Where proceedings under this section have once been started, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to strike them off. He must pass an order under sub-section (5) or (6) of sec. 145 or under sec. 146—Trilochan v. Joggeswar, 20 Cr.L.J. 464 (Pat.); Sastee v. Nathani, 6 P.L.T. 258, 26 Cr.L.J. 105.

444. Fresh proceedings :—When an order under clause (6) has been passed, the proceedings terminate and a Magistrate cannot institute fresh proceedings so long as such order is in force—Sadhu v. Mahammad Ali, 15 C.W.N. 569, 12 Cr.L.J. 32. When a final order has been passed and one of the parties has been declared to be in possession, the order of the Magistrate is binding on all the parties, and the unsuccessful party cannot be allowed to disturb the possession of the other party without having recourse to a civil suit. It is not proper for a Magistrate to initiate fresh proceedings at his instance—Aran Sardar v. Hara Sundar, 27 C.W.N. 171, 24 Cr.L.J. 97. But where the parties compromised and filed a petition of compromise and according to the terms thereof the Magistrate ordered the land to be in the possession of both sides as stated in the petition of compromise, such an order was one falling under clause (5) showing that no dispute existed, and not an order under clause (6), and the Magistrate could therefore institute fresh proceedings—Sadhu v. Mahammad Ali, 15 C.W.N. 569, 12 Cr.L.J. 32.

When a party has been declared to be in possession as a result of proceedings under section 145, fresh proceedings under the same section cannot be started against him unless it is shown that the previous order has been duly vacated or possession has been amicably surrendered. But subsequent proceeding can be started and fresh order made in respect of properties other than the one comprised in the first order—Bajit Lal v. Harakh Singh, 1 P.L.T. 557, 21 Cr.L.J. 753.

During pendency of High Court rule :—During the pendency of a rule issued upon the District Magistrate to show cause why his order under sec 145 should not be set aside, it is irregular and highly improper for a Subordinate Magistrate to institute fresh proceedings, as the proceedings in the Lower Court with reference to the matter in dispute must be considered to have been stayed. When a rule is issued by the High Court on the District Magistrate staying further proceedings, all Subordinate Magistrates are bound by it, and would not be justified in instituting fresh proceedings during the pendency of the rule—Pran Ballabh v. Rash Behari, 4 C.L.J. 418, 4 Cr.L.J. 397.

Fresh Materials :—When an order striking off proceedings under this section is passed, its effect is to destroy the proceedings, and anything done thereafter under this section must start afresh upon fresh materials, and not stand upon the basis of the earlier proceedings—Tarini v. Amulya, 20 Cal. 867, Manik v. Azimuddin, 6 C.W.N. 923, Khubi v. Darbarti, 2 P.L.T. 267, 22 Cr.L.J. 481; Ghulam Md v. Crown, 3 Lah. 401.

Power of High Court :—The High Court cannot direct the revival of proceedings under sec 145, when they have been stayed by the Magistrate—Manindra v. Barada Kanta, 30 Cal. 112.

445. Further Inquiry :—Sec 437 (now 436) allows a further inquiry into a complaint, which means under sec 4 (h) a complaint of an 'offence'; and since sec 145 is not directed to any offence at all, sec 436 does not authorise a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to order a further inquiry into a case under sec. 145—Chathu v. Niranjan, 20 Cal 729.

446. Review:—There is no authority for holding that a Magistrate can review a final order passed by himself under this section—Parbutty v Sajjad Ahmad, 35 Cal. 350; Ram Dulare v. Ajodhya, 16 O.C. 192, 14 Cr L J. 605. Narayan v. Chandrabhaga, 26 Cr.L.J. 1289 (Nag); Lallan v. Ram Richcha, 43 All 258, 24 A.L.J. 227, 27 Cr.L.J. 466. The remedy of the person aggrieved is to go to the Civil Court—Lallan v Ram Richcha (supra)

447. Revision—Under sub-section (3) of section 435, before it was omitted by the Amendment Act of 1923, proceedings under this Chapter were not liable to revision by any Court, whether by the High Court or by the Sessions Judge or by the District Magistrate; so that the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under section 439 of this Code was not competent to revise an order passed under this Chapter—Laldhari v Sukdeo, 27 Cal 892; In re Pandurang, 25 Bom. 179; Kamal Kutty v Udayvarma, 36 Mad. 275; Pulani v. Rathna, 26 M L J 208; Maharaj Tewari v Har Charan, 26 All. 144; Jhingai v Ram Partap, 31 All 150, Syeda v Lal Singh, 36 All 233, Babban v. Baldeo, 4 A.L.J. 91, Nathu Ram v. Emp., 15 A L J. 270; Har Hari v. Natha Lal, 18 A.L.J. 1140, Idadulla v. Rahatulla, 18 O.C. 69, 16 Cr.L.J. 541; Balmukund v Crown, 1 S L R 50; Farid v. Piru, 8 S L R.207

In order to exercise its revisional power in respect of orders passed under this Chapter, the High Court had to invoke the aid of sec. 15 of the Charter Act—Murballabh v Luchmeswar, 26 Cal. 188; Laldhari v. Sukdeo, 27 Cal. 892; Sakhlai v Tarachand, 33 Cal. 68; Sri Mohan v Narasingh, 27 Cal 259, Jagamahan v Ram Kumar, 28 Cal. 416; In re Nathu Lal, 24 All. 315, or sec 107 of the Government of India Act—Nathu Ram v Emp., 15 A L J 270; Parameswari v. Kailashpati, 1 P.L.J. 336; Thylae v Srirangaraya, 43 M.L.J. 624; Moiram v. Brijan, 47 Cal 438; Ali Md v. Piggott, 48 Cal 522. But this power could be exercised only by the Chartered High Courts, and not by the non-chartered High Courts, e.g., the Chief Courts and the Judicial Commissioner's Courts

And the only cases in which the High Court could exercise its powers of revision were those in which the proceedings, though purporting to be proceedings under this Chapter, were not really so; as for instance where there was an initial want of jurisdiction by reason of there being no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, or by reason of the Magistrate not being a first class Magistrate, or where the Magistrate exceeded his jurisdiction by exercising powers not conferred by this section—In re Pandurang, 24 Bom. 527; Nga Shit v. Nga Ya, U.B.R. (1917) 33, 19 Cr.L.J. 389; Nga Hpay v. Nga Aung, 19 Cr.L.J. 381; In re Pandurang, 25 Bom 179; Mahadeo v. Basu, 25 All. 537; Thylae v. Srirangaraya, 43 M.L.J. 624; Wajid Ali v. Abdul, 5 O C 1; Udai Bhan v. Ram Samujh, 19 O.C. 136, 18 Cr.L.J. 100. And unless there was want of jurisdiction on the part of the Magistrate, the High Court could not exercise its power of revision even though the decision of the Magistrate was wrong—

Chintamani v. Jagannath, 19 C.W.N. 123 (124); Iklas v. Raghuraj, 12 O.C. 400, 11 Cr.L.J. 69.

Now, by the Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, sub-section (3) of section 435 has been omitted, and the effect of this amendment is to confer on the High Court the power of revision under this Code in respect of orders under this Chapter. These orders can now be revised by the High Court not only on the question of jurisdiction but also on the question of illegality—Chhakauri v. Isher Singh, 6 P.L.T. 799, 27 Cr.L.J. 142, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 196.

But though the High Court is invested with powers of revision, still orders passed by a competent Magistrate are not to be lightly interfered with by the High Court except in exceptional cases, first because the object of such orders is to preserve peace, and secondly because the aggrieved party has his remedy by a civil suit—Krishnappier v. Alamelu, 5 L.W. 165, 18 Cr.L.J. 23, In re Lingaraja, 17 Cr.L.J. 143 (Mad.); Hardeo v. Ram Charitar, 17 Cr.L.J. 286 (Pat). Proceedings under this chapter are of a special nature, and are such that the Magistrates may be allowed greater liberty in carrying out those provisions than they are allowed in trying ordinary crime, because upon the Magistrate and the police is thrown the burden of maintaining the public peace. In this view, it is undesirable that such orders should be interfered with in revision, unless they are made without jurisdiction and are obviously unreasonable or unjust—Sudalaimuthu v. Enan, 16 Cr.L.J. 767 (Mad). Where a Magistrate duly empowered to act under this Chapter takes proper proceedings and passes an order, the High Court has no power to revise the proceedings either under this Code or under section 15 of the Charter Act—Jhingai v. Ram Pratap, 31 All. 150, or under section 107 of the Government of India Act—Matukdhar v. Jaisari, 39 All. 612, 15 A.L.J. 576; Sundar Nath v. Emp., 40 All. 364; Sakhawat v. Emp., 17 A.L.J. 321, 41 All. 302. Thus, the High Court as a Court of Revision cannot interfere with the decision of a trial Court on the fact of possession so long as there is evidence in support of the finding—Abdul Satar v. Udha Lal, 8 Lah.L.J. 47, 27 P.L.R. 102, 27 Cr.L.J. 471. Where the evidence had been fully discussed by the Trial Court, any attempt on the part of the High Court to review the evidence and interfere with the decision of the Magistrate would be to convert an application for revision into an appeal—Abdul Satar v. Udha Lal, (supra).

The District Magistrate cannot himself set aside the decision of the lower Court passed under sec. 145; he must refer the case to the High Court under sec. 438—Eseruddi v. Otaruddi, 26 Cr.L.J. 1166, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 1234; Hiralal v. Emp., 11 O.L.J. 59, 25 Cr.L.J. 440, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 331.

448. Grounds of interference :—The High Court has the power to interfere where in a proceeding under this section necessary parties were left out or wrong persons were made parties—Laldhari v. Sukdeo, 27 Cal 892, or where the Magistrate refused to receive the evidence tendered to him—Tirumalraja v. Lodd Gobind Doss, 29 Mad.

561; Jhengar v. Baijnath, 11 A.L.J. 586; Kolha Koer v. Muneswar, 34 Cal 840, Patali v. Ganapati, 19 Cr.L.J. 529 (Pat); or where the Magistrate's finding of fact as regards possession was perverse and contrary to a mass of un rebutted evidence—Emp. v. Sarju Prosad, 27 O.C. 290, 25 Cr.L.J. 1066, or where no order in writing such as is required by sub-section (1) was recorded by the Magistrate—Hakam v. Ralia Ram, 4 Lah. 66, Kaku v. Harnaman, 1917 P.W.R. 28; Md. Hasham v. Md. Jhami, 20 Cr.L.J. 124, Bihari v. Chajju, 1907 A.W.N. 49, Budhan v. Ram Rakha, 1915 P.L.R. 169, 16 Cr.L.J. 628; or where the Magistrate adopted none of the procedure required under this section and passed an order without any reference thereto—Dewan Chand v. Emp., 1899 P.R. 2; Dhani Ram v. Bhola Nath, 1902 P.R. 23, Abdulla v. Gunda, 1907 P.R. 7, Budhan v. Ram Rakha, 1915 P.L.R. 169, 16 Cr.L.J. 628; Tara Chand v. Behari, 1916 P.R. 22, 18 Cr.L.J. 36, or where the Magistrate refused to issue process for the attendance of material witnesses—Surya Kanta v. Hem Chunder, 30 Cal 508 Madhab Chandra v. Martin, 30 Cal 508 (Note), or where no opportunity was given by the Magistrate to the applicant to produce his evidence—2 C.L.J. 286n; or where the Magistrate discarded the evidence altogether and based his decision merely upon his local inquiry—Lal Behari v. Bejoy Sankar, 10 C.W.N. 181; or where the proceedings were initiated by the Magistrate on a vague Police report—Suryakanta v. Jagadindra, 11 C.W.N. 198, or where the Magistrate declared possession with a party who had long been out of possession—Shankar v. Bhayaji, 20 Cr.L.J. 445 (Nag); or where the Magistrate passed an order in respect of a property which was not in dispute and declared the property to be in the possession of a person who was not a party to the proceedings—Radhamohan v. Naimuddi, 19 Cr.L.J. 653 (Cal)

449. What the High Court can do in revision :—The High Court, in the exercise of its power of revision, is competent to consider the whole evidence—Reid v. Richardson, 14 Cal 361; and to find out whether there was evidence on which the Magistrate could come to the conclusion which he arrived at—Raja Babu v. Muddun Mohun, 14 Cal 169; and can pass the proper order which the Lower Court ought to have made. Thus, where it is difficult to come to a conclusion as to the fact of possession, the wise and proper course is to pass an order of attachment under section 146, and if in such a case the Magistrate has passed an order under sec. 145, the High Court in revision can alter the order under sec. 145 into one under sec. 146—Reid v. Richardson, 14 Cal 361, Katras Jheria Coal Co v. Sibkristo, 22 Cal. 297; Satyendra v. Krishnodhone, 20 C.W.N. 1014, 18 Cr.L.J. 80. The High Court in revision can alter an order of the Magistrate under sec. 145 into an order under sec. 147—In re Amarsang, 48 Bom. 512 (515). The High Court has inherent power to give directions as to the disposal of property which was attached and has been dealt with by a subordinate Magistrate in the course of proceedings instituted without jurisdiction under this section—Ali Muhammad v. Piggott, 48 Cal. 522 (F.B.), 32 C.L.J. 270, 22 Cr.L.J. 213

Costs in revision :—See note 478 under sec. 148.

146. (1) If the Magistrate decides that none of the parties was then in such possession, or is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was then in such possession of the subject of dispute, he may attach it until a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties thereto, or the person entitled to possession thereof;

Power to attach subject of dispute.

Provided that the District Magistrate or the Magistrate who has attached the subject of dispute may withdraw the attachment at any time if he is satisfied that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace in regard to the subject of dispute.

(2) When the Magistrate attaches the subject of dispute, he may, if he thinks fit, and if no receiver of the property, the subject-matter in dispute, has been appointed by any Civil Court, appoint a receiver thereof, who, subject to the control of the Magistrate, shall have all the powers of a receiver appointed under the Code of Civil Procedure:

Provided that, in the event of a receiver of the property, the subject-matter in dispute, being subsequently appointed by any Civil Court, possession shall be made over to him by the receiver appointed by the Magistrate, who shall thereupon be discharged.

Change :—The two provisos and the italicised words in sub-section (2) have been added by sec. 29 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). For reasons see below.

450. Conditions precedent .—In order to give jurisdiction for an order under sec. 146, it is necessary that there should be jurisdiction over the proceedings under sec. 145, which again pre-suppose a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. If there was no dispute concerning any land, there would be no jurisdiction of a Magistrate to proceed under secs 145 and 146—Ballam v. Lal Babu, 19 Cr L J. 105 (Pat). Sec 146 is a continuation of sec 145, and therefore the initiation of proceedings under sec 145 is preliminary to an order under sec 146. Where the record showed that the Magistrate made an order under this section without following the procedure prescribed by sec 145 and without making an order in writing and that there was nothing to show that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed, the attachment was set aside by the High Court—Azizuddin v. Emp, 2 A L J 149.

The legality of an order under sec 146 depends upon its having been preceded by legal proceedings under sec. 145, and where the whole proceedings under sec 145 are illegal (e.g. by reason of the Magistrate's failure to comply with the requirements of clause 4 of sec. 145), an order made in the case under sec 146 cannot stand on a better footing—Subbarama v. Mariya Pillai, 1 L.W. 493, 15 Cr.L.J. 559

451. Magistrate's duty to make inquiry and take evidence—It is the duty of the Magistrate, before taking proceedings under this section, to take evidence and make inquiry (see clause 4 of sec. 145) in order to ascertain, if possible, who was in possession—Parsuram v. Shivajalan, 3 P.L.T. 434, 23 Cr.L.J. 277; In re Ram Soondaree, 1 C.L.R. 86. An order passed under this section without examining any witnesses, although a number of them were present in Court, is invalid—Siba Nath v. Ramkishore, 35 C.L.J. 291, 23 Cr.L.J. 688. Unless and until a Magistrate has made the inquiry contemplated by sec 145, that is to say, unless he has received and considered the evidence produced by the parties, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to proceed under sec 146—Inayatulla v. Amanat, 1 O.L.J. 242, 15 Cr.L.J. 470; Daulatali v. Hedait, 32 C.W.N. 843; Khedan v. Hussaini, 2 P.L.T. 15, 22 Cr.L.J. 323, Ambika v. Wazedall, 23 C.W.N. 910. Where a Magistrate in a proceeding under sec. 145 made an order under sec. 146 on the ground that it was doubtful which of the parties was in actual possession, without judicially considering the important documentary evidence of possession placed before him, it was held that the order must be set aside and the case re-heard by another Magistrate—Ambika v. Wazedall, 23 C.W.N. 910, 20 Cr.L.J. 342.

Where the Magistrate did not make the slightest attempt to satisfy himself as to the factum of possession, and attached the land without taking any evidence and making any local inquiry—Sheo Balak v. Bhagnat, 40 Cal. 105, 16 C.W.N. 1052, or where the order of attachment was passed without examining the witnesses cited by the petitioner—Neelamegam v. Muragappa, 2 Weir 110; or where the Magistrate discarded and rejected practically every piece of evidence that might have led to a correct finding as to possession—Prafulla v. Hodding, 21 C.W.N. 1059, 26 C.L.J. 39; or where the Magistrate omitted to receive the evidence produced by a party and passed his order merely on a consideration of the written statements of the parties—Kolha v. Muneswar, 34 Cal. 840, his order was without jurisdiction. So also, where in a proceeding under sec. 145, the parties appeared on the day of hearing but did not file any written statement nor produced any evidence, and the Magistrate without granting time to the parties for the production of evidence or for filing written statements, said that it was impossible to come to a conclusion as to the fact of possession and passed an order under this section, the order was without jurisdiction and therefore invalid—Sk. Mansar Ali v. Matiulla, 12 C.W.N. 896. But where the parties failed to adduce evidence, even though sufficient time was allowed to them to do so, the Magistrate could proceed under this section—Ronendra v. Kishori Lal, 14 C.W.N. 80, 11 Cr.L.J. 26.

But it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to make a local investigation as contemplated by sec. 148. A Magistrate who attaches the property without such an investigation does not commit an error in procedure—Upendra v. Prasanna, 20 Cr.L.J. 17 (Cal.).

Effect of prior decree of Civil Court:—If the matter which is in dispute under sec. 147 has already been adjudicated upon by a Civil Court, the Magistrate will have no jurisdiction to enquire into a claim which is entirely contrary to that Court's decree—In re Anya Shidya, 29 Bom. L.R. 715 Where the petitioner had been put into possession of certain lands in execution of a decree obtained by him in a Civil Court establishing his right to them, the Magistrate was not competent to attach the lands under section 146 It was his duty to have found possession in accordance with the decree—Gulraj v. Sk. Bhatoo, 32 Cal. 796. Even though the petitioner has not obtained possession of the property in accordance with the Civil Court decree, still when the Civil Court has determined the rights of the parties and has also determined the possession so far as it was in its power to do so, it is not competent for the Magistrate to say that he is unable to determine the question of possession, and to attach the property under sec. 146. The order of attachment is unjustifiable—Parabhans v. Sheodarshan, 48 All. 307, 24 A.L.J. 399, 27 Cr.L.J. 559. See Note 438 under section 145

452. Inability to decide the fact of possession:—The doubt upon which a Magistrate can act under this section must be the result of his inability to determine the question of possession upon the evidence offered by both parties, and not a doubt in his mind entertained without receiving evidence and without inquiry—Khedan v. Hussani, 2 P.L.T. 15; Sheobalak v. Bhagwat, 40 Cal. 105; Ambica v. Wazedali, 23 C.W.N. 910 The Magistrate would not be justified in saying that it was not possible to ascertain who was in possession, and in attaching the property, merely because the parties did not appear He ought to have made some inquiry into the question of possession—Parasuram v. Shubjatan, 3 P.L.T. 434, 23 Cr.L.J. 277 In order to show the Magistrate's inability to decide the question of possession, he ought to discuss the evidence in the case, and give reasons for his inability—Khedan v. Hussani, 2 P.L.T. 15, 22 Cr.L.J. 323 Where the order under this section did not show that it was not possible on the evidence to decide as to the fact of possession, but would rather seem to indicate that the Magistrate could not or would not decide whether the witnesses on either side were to be believed, the order was set aside. This section is not meant to relieve the Magistrate from the duty of deciding the case on the merits, but allows an order of attachment to be made only when it is not possible to decide which party is in possession—Neelamegan v. Mooroguppa, 2 Weir 110 A Magistrate should be extremely reluctant to attach the property in dispute. In cases where the land is jungle or waste, it is quite possible that the Magistrate may be unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of the parties But where the land is admittedly subject to cultivation year by year and season by season, the Magistrate will be only admitting his own weakness if he states that he cannot come to a decision It is his duty to collect information and sift it, and decide the fact of possession—Ram Bahal v. Rang Bahadur, 5 P.L.T. 589, 25 Cr.L.J. 1295, A.L.R. 1924

Pat. 804. The Magistrate ought to make a reasonable effort to decide the question as to possession, and ought not to attach the property so long as it is possible for him to decide which of the contesting parties was really in possession of the property, and if he can decide that question in favour of one of the parties, he should give effect to that decision by passing an order under section 145 (6)—Wayezul v. Shobrati, 4 P.L.T. 441, 24 Cr.L.J. 754.

Nature of possession —In a dispute between the wife of a lunatic and the manager of his estate as to the possession of certain property, there was no doubt that the wife was in actual possession of the property, but the only doubt existed as to the nature of the possession, that is whether her possession was on her own behalf or on behalf of her lunatic husband; it was held that such a doubt as to the nature of the possession would not justify a Magistrate in taking action under this section—In re Juggodeshary, 3 C.L.R. 94.

Portion of subject of dispute —Where there is a dispute as regards the possession of a fishery extending over several miles in length, and the Magistrate is unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of the whole length in question, he should ascertain so far as he can the possession of some portion or portions thereof. As regards the portion as to which he is able to say that so and so is in possession he should proceed under section 145, and only as to the remainder should he proceed under section 146—Upendra v. Prasanna, 20 Cr.L.J. 17 (Cal.)

Rights of parties —The Magistrate can attach the property only when he decides that none of the parties is in possession, or when he cannot satisfy himself as to which of the parties is in possession; but he cannot take action under this section merely because he is unable to satisfy himself as to which of the parties is entitled to possession or has a right to the property. Inability to decide the right to the property cannot justify an order of attachment of the property—In re Somnath, 6 Bom. L.R. 723.

'Then':—i.e., at the date of the preliminary order passed under section 145 (1). See notes under section 145 (4).

453. When attachment can be made:—When it is difficult for a Magistrate trying a case under section 145 to come to a conclusion as to the fact of possession, the wise and proper course to be adopted is to pass an order of attachment under this section and not to pass any order under sec. 145—Reid v. Richardson, 14 Cal. 361. To entitle a Magistrate to make an order of attachment, he must either decide that none of the parties are in actual possession, or that he is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them is in possession—Nathu Ram v. Emperor, 15 A.L.J. 270, 18 Cr.L.J. 557. This section was intended to apply to a case in which on the evidence before him a Magistrate could not find possession with either of the parties—Jayanti v. Middleton, 27 Cal. 785.

Where the Magistrate finds neither the first party nor the second party in possession, but finds that actual possession is with a stranger who does not claim a right to be in possession, the Magistrate should proceed to attach the property—Bhagjogin v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 215 (Cal).

When both parties are in possession of the disputed property, no order under this section can be made—Md. Koolayappa v. Shaik Abdul Khadir, 27 M.L.J. 169, 15 Cr.L.J. 572. Where the Magistrate found that both parties were at the time of the order collecting rents from the raiyats, this amounted to a finding that both parties were in possession, and consequently the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to order attachment under this section—Rajendra v. Mahomed Arzumand, 9 C.W.N. 887.

454. Order of attachment:—An order under this section cannot be made in the absence of the parties or ex parte; the proper course is to pass the order in the presence of both parties—Luchmee v. Bhusi, 19 Cr.L.J. 225 (Pat.).

A Magistrate in passing an order under this section must give reasons for making the order—Khedan v. Hussaini, 2 P.L.T. 15, 22 Cr.L.J. 323. But the High Court will not interfere with the judgment of a Magistrate under this section merely on the ground that the order is brief and does not state reasons at length. If the High Court is satisfied that the Magistrate has given full consideration to the evidence on the record, it will not interfere—Kanai v. Hyder Ali, 37 C.L.J. 127, 24 Cr.L.J. 575.

Signature of Magistrate—Where in a proceeding under this section, the Magistrate initialled the order, instead of signing it, it was held to be a mere irregularity, not affecting the order—Deo Sarun, 12 C.L.R. 221.

455. What property can be attached:—In order that an order might be passed under sec. 145 or 146, the subject matter of the dispute must be clearly determined—Suryakanta v. Jagadindra, 11 C.W.N. 198.

The 'subject of dispute' referred to in secs. 145 and 146 must be read as referring to the whole or to any component part or parts of the property in dispute. If the component part in respect of which the dispute exists is distinct and separable from the rest, the Magistrate is not bound to attach the whole property but may attach that part only. If, however, the subject matter in dispute is indivisible and must be dealt with as a whole, it must be dealt with in such a way as to make in regard to it one order under this section—Sadar Ali v. Abdul, 5 C.W.N. 710; see also Katras Jheria Coal Co. v. Shikisto, 22 Cal. 297 cited in Note 427 under sec. 145.

Temple—To attach a temple does not necessarily mean that the temple must be closed altogether. When third parties or the general community are interested in it, it is the duty of the Magistrate, when assuming charge of it in order to preserve the public peace, to make the best arrangements possible to preserve the rights of such third parties or the public, and to have the pūja of the temple performed—Sundara v. Vallinayaka, 2 Weir 110, In re Mattusami, 2 Weir 112.

Crops—The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to attach crops cut and stored, the word 'crops' occurring in sec. 145 refers to standing crops alone—Ramzan v. Janardhan, 30 Cal. 110.

In a dispute between the rival landlords as to the possession of land, the Magistrate is not competent to attach the crops on the land belonging to the tenants—Denomoni v. Mazafar Ali, 5 C.W.N. 105.

Moveables.—The Magistrate ordering attachment of immoveable property can take charge of all moveables found inside the immoveable property, although he cannot attach the moveable property by itself under this section. Therefore, where the Magistrate attached a muth and took charge of all the moveables (e.g. cattle, jewellery) that were found by him in the muth at the time of attachment, it was held that the Magistrate acted legally—Bharat Das v. Ram Charitar, 1 P.L.J. 356, 18 Cr.L.J. 287; Gokul Nath v. Baram Nath, 24 A.L.J. 383, 27 Cr.L.J. 429.

Cultivation of attached land:—A person who cultivates immoveable property which has been attached by a Magistrate under this section commits the offence of criminal trespass, and he is liable to be punished under sec 447 I.P.C.—Nagoji v. Q. E., 8 M.L.J. 253. No suit for damages for the loss of profits resulting from the non-cultivation of land owing to an attachment under this section lies against any party—Ammani v. Sellayi Ammal, 6 Mad 426.

456. Powers of Magistrate:—A Magistrate attaching a property under this section has the power to make any order regarding the management of the property. The High Court will not interfere with such order—Lokenath v. Nedu, 29 Cal 382. He can lease the land attached—Greesh Chunder, 17 W.R. 38, or after cancelling a lease already granted, can grant a fresh lease—Lokenath v. Nedu, 29 Cal. 382.

A Magistrate passing an order under this section is entitled to refuse to hand over the value of the produce of the property to any of the parties to the dispute, but he has no power to treat the profits as derelict and as the property of the Government—Mohar Singh v. Crown, 1911 P.L.R. 123, 12 Cr.L.J. 403.

A Magistrate attaching a property under this section cannot hand over possession of the property to one of the contending parties on failure of the other to institute a suit for possession in the Civil Court—Ram Kumar v. Thakur Ojha, 3 P.L.T. 648, 23 Cr.L.J. 562.

457. Possession by Magistrate:—When a Magistrate attaches lands under this section, the possession of the Magistrate must be taken to be a possession on behalf of such of the rival parties as might establish a right to possession by a civil suit—Beni Prasad v. Shahzada, 32 Cal 856. That is, the Magistrate's possession is not adverse to the true owner. The legal possession of the property is said to be in the true owner during the period of attachment—Raja of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli, 26 Mad. 410; Panna Lal v. Panchu, 49 Cal. 544; Brojendra v. Sarojini, 20 C.W.N. 481; Sarat Chandra v. Bibhabati, 34 C.L.J. 302.

458. Decision of a competent Court:—The attachment is to continue until a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties; and therefore it is the duty of a Magistrate to withdraw the attachment and release the property as soon as it is brought to his notice that—a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties or of the person entitled to possession—Maharaja of Venkatagiri v. Srinivasa, 17 M.L.T. 392, 16 Cr.L.J. 481. The Magistrate is bound to abide by the subsequent decision of a competent Civil Court and to withdraw the attachment, even though the suit in the Civil Court was not inter partes, (as for instance where the suit was instituted by a third party, and the first party and some members of the second party were not made parties to it)—Asesh Kumar v. Kishori Mohan, 39 C.L.J. 353, 25 Cr.L.J. 937. The fact that an appeal has been preferred against the decision of the Civil Court and is pending is no good reason for the Magistrate to keep the property any longer in attachment—Crown v. Abdul Aziz, 1917 P.W.R. 46, 19 Cr.L.J. 261; Ramsri v. Sri Krishan, 46 All. 879, 22 A.L.J. 803; Maung Tha Zan v. Maung Ba Gale, 7 Bur.L.T. 293, 15 Cr.L.J. 500.

It is not necessary that there should be a decree in favour of all of the parties to enable the Magistrate to withdraw an attachment made under this section; and if there is an adjudication by a Civil Court in favour of some at least of the parties, that is sufficient for the purpose of enabling the Magistrate to walk out of the property—Vithoba v. Narasinga, 20 M.L.T. 247, 4 L.W. 55, 17 Cr.L.J. 331.

The expression 'competent Court' means not only a Civil Court, but includes a Survey Court—Ambler v. Sami Ahmed, 37 Cal 331, 11 Cr.L.J. 372.

Under the Code of 1882, the words were 'Civil Court' and therefore it was held in Ganga Prasad v. Narain, 15 All 394, that this section did not authorise a Magistrate to pass an order of attachment in a dispute between parties, whose rights would have to be determined by a Revenue Court. But this ruling is no longer good law, and the Magistrate can release the property attached and hand it over to one of the parties, as soon as the Revenue Court has given a decision in favour of that party—Ram Sri v. Sri Krishan, 46 All. 879 (881), 22 A.L.J. 803, 25 Cr.L.J. 1242; Surendra Bikram v. K. E., 25 O.C. 242.

But an entry in the Record of Rights cannot be regarded as constituting an adjudication by a competent Court of the rights of parties—Kutiswar v. Jitendra, 30 C.W.N. 646, 26 Cr.L.J. 1055.

459. Persons bound by order of attachment :—Judicial proceedings cannot bind a person who is not a party to them. A final order under this section cannot be made against persons who were neither made parties to the proceedings under sec 145, nor were regarded as such by the Magistrate (though notices had been issued upon them to file written statements and they entered appearance but did nothing else)—Janoki Nath v. Q. E., 3 C.W.N. 329

460. Proviso—withdrawal of attachment :—"We have introduced a new clause which by an amendment of section 146 will enable a District Magistrate to withdraw the attachment of property at any time when he is satisfied that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

Once an order under sec. 146 has been passed, it can come to an end only under one of two circumstances, the first being that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace, in which case the Magistrate is competent to withdraw the order of attachment, and he can do so at any time at which it he is satisfied that there is no further any likelihood; and secondly, it is competent for a Magistrate to release the subject matter of the dispute from attachment if a competent Court has determined the right of the parties to the proceedings or the person entitled to possession—Kutiswar v Jitendra, 26 Cr.L.J. 1055, 30 C.W.N. 646.

Where the petitioner presented an application to the Magistrate praying for the release of the attached house on the ground that the other claimant had died and that he (the petitioner) was his heir, and the Magistrate refused the application as no judgment of a competent Court declaring the rights of parties was produced, held that the Magistrate ought to have granted the application and released the property from attachment, because by the death of the other claimant all likelihood of a breach of the peace had disappeared—Khushi Ram v. Crown, 1 Lah. 451. This proviso now expressly provides for the case.

But the Magistrate can cancel the order of attachment under the proviso only on the ground that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace. He cannot cancel the attachment on any other ground e.g. on the ground that the attachment is not practicable—Ram Dulare v. Ajudhya, 16 O.C. 192, 14 Cr.L.J. 605.

Where the property attached under sec. 146 is released by the Magistrate on being satisfied that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate should not simply direct the Receiver to abandon the property without making over the possession or the books of account to anybody, and leave the parties to scramble for the estate. This is not the intention of the Legislature. Under this proviso, it is open to the Magistrate to make over the possession to any person he thinks fit, and he must of course exercise a judicial discretion in deciding to whom the possession is to be given. There may also be cases in which it is sufficient for him to make an order withdrawing the attachment and leave some person to take possession, without handing over the possession of the property to anybody—Ali Bahadur v. Emp., 2 O.W.N. 868, 26 Cr.L.J. 1629.

461. Sub-section (2)—Appointment of Receiver :—A Magistrate is entitled to appoint a receiver under this sub-section only after the termination of the inquiry as to possession conducted under sec. 145 (4). The appointment of a receiver before the completion of the inquiry is without jurisdiction—Lakshminarayana v. Gnanaprakasa, 13 Cr.L.J. 536 (Mad.).

The passing of an order of attachment does not by itself justify the appointment of a receiver, unless on a subsequent inquiry the appointment of a receiver is found necessary—Raza Hussain v. Mehdi Hasan, 25 O.C. 148, 23 Cr.L.J. 684.

A receiver appointed under this section is entitled, unless some special circumstance is established, not only to the subject matter of the proceedings but also to all accretions to the property, and can give good title to a tenant under him—Madhu v. Sabar Ali, 14 C.W.N. 681, 11 Cr.L.J. 288

Proviso :—"We recommend the addition of a proviso to section 146 (2) to meet the case of an overlapping appointment of a receiver by the Civil Court"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

462. Revision :—By reason of the omission of sub-section (3) of section 435 by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act of 1923, orders passed under this section are now liable to revision under this Code. See Note 447 under sec. 145

463. Review :—An order under this section is in the nature of a judgment and cannot be reviewed by the same Court—Luchmi v. Bhusi, 19 Cr.L.J. 225 (Pat.); Raj Kumar v. Thakur Ojha, 3 P.L.T. 648, Ram Dulare v. Ajudhya, 16 O.C. 192; see section 369 When a property is attached under this section, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to release it from attachment, but he has no jurisdiction to review his own order releasing the attached property—Ballam v. Lal Babu, 19 Cr.L.J. 105 (Pat.).

147. Whenever any such Magistrate is satisfied as to the dispute concerning the right of use of any land or water (including any right of way or other easement over the same) within the local limits of his jurisdiction, he may inquire into the matter in manner provided by section 145, and may, if it appears to him that such right exists, make an order permitting such thing to be done, or directing that such thing shall not be done, as the case may be, until the person object-

147. (1) Whenever any District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class is satisfied from a police-report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists regarding any alleged right of user of any land or water as explained in section 145, sub-section (2) (whether such right be claimed as an easement or otherwise) within the local limits of his jurisdiction, he may make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied and re-

ing to such thing being done, or claiming that such thing may be done obtains the decision of a competent Court adjudging him to be entitled to prevent the doing of, or to do such thing, as the case may be :

Provided that no order shall be passed under this section permitting the doing of anything where the right to do such thing is exerciseable at all times of the year, unless such right has been exercised within three months next before the institution of the inquiry ; or, where the right is exerciseable only at particular seasons or on particular occasions, unless the right has been exercised during the last of such seasons or occasions before such institution.

requiring the parties concerned in such dispute to attend the Court in person or by pleader within a time to be fixed by such Magistrate, and to put in written statements of their respective claims, and shall thereafter inquire into the matter in the manner provided in section 145 and the provisions of that section shall, as far as may be, be applicable in the case of such inquiry.

(2) If it appears to such Magistrate that such right exists, he may make an order prohibiting any interference with the exercise of such right :

Provided that no such order shall be made where the right is exerciseable at all times of the year, unless such right has been exercised within three months next before the institution of the inquiry ; or, where the right is exerciseable only at particular seasons or on particular occasions, unless the right has been exercised during the last of such seasons or on the last of such occasions before such institution.

(3) If it appears to such Magistrate that such right does not exist, he may make an order prohibiting any exercise of the alleged right.

(4) An order under this section shall be subject to any subsequent decision of a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction.

Change :—This section has been redrafted by sec. 30 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923); the substantial changes effected by this redrafting have been shown by the italicised passages.

The principal changes are :—“(1) The definition of the subject matter in dispute has been modified so as to avoid the difficulties which have been created by decisions raising doubts as to the applicability of the section to rights not resembling easements or to rights acquired by contract; (2) the specific reference to rights of way has been omitted, as it has been questioned whether it might not by implication exclude negative easements from the scope of this section, (3) the nature of the orders which a Magistrate may pass (see sub-sections 2 and 3) and their continuance pending the order of a competent Civil Court to the contrary (see sub-section 4) have been clearly defined”—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) (4) The words “make an order in writing . . . respective claims” have been added in order to bring this section into a line with sec. 145. “Doubts have been expressed as to the procedure to be followed in cases under section 147, and we have introduced amendments here to make it clear that the procedure is to be that laid down by section 145”—Report of the Joint Committee 1922)

464. Dispute :—The dispute contemplated by this section must at any rate be some substantial dispute necessitating the interference, in some way or other, of the criminal authorities. It would not be sufficient that there should be a mere discussion or verbal altercation between persons claiming rights of the kind described. There must be an actual dispute—Maharaja of Burdwan v. Chairman, Darjeeling Municipality, 5 Cal 194. See Note 393 under section 145.

If on entering on an inquiry a Magistrate finds that the rights of parties have been judicially ascertained by a previous decision, he should not enter into any investigation, as he cannot assume that a dispute would be continued on a question which has been set at rest by a judicial decision on the rights of parties—In re Bulkrishna, 11 Cr. 584 (587).

465. Likelihood of breach of peace :—An order may be passed under this section unless the Magistrate is of opinion that a dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace—Kolandai v. Gopal, 6 M. L. J. 193, Parashram v. Gopal, 25 Cr. L. J. 353 (Nag.). To give jurisdiction to a Magistrate under this section, he must be satisfied from Police reports or other materials that there is an actual dispute.

a breach of the peace resulting from a dispute between the parties concerned. Where the materials before the Magistrate did not disclose the fact that there was an imminent danger of a breach of the peace, any evidence that he might have taken later on, in the course of the trial, could not give him a jurisdiction which he did not otherwise possess—Kali Kissen v. Anund, 23 Cal 557. But see Kuloda Kinkar v. Danesh, 33 Cal. 33 cited in Note 394 under sec. 145.

466. Right to use land or water :—This section applies to disputes as to the right to use any land or water, as distinct from disputes as to title to or possession of the land itself, for which provision is made by sec. 145—Ram Dulare v. Ajudhya, 16 O.C. 192, 14 Cr.L.J. 605.

In a Madras case it was held that the words "land or water" used in this section should be taken in their ordinary significance without the extended meaning given to them by section 145—Palaniyandi v. Palaniappa, 17 Cr.L.J. 325 (Mad.). In a Calcutta case also it was held that the word 'land' in this section did not include crop or produce as in sec. 145—Ali Mohammad v. Fakiruddin, 24 C.W.N. 1039, 22 Cr.L.J. 131. The present amendment, however, expressly lays down that those words are to have the same meaning as in sec. 145.

Since this section as now amended includes rights claimed as an easement, it therefore applies to rights to the use of land or water belonging to others. See also Emp v. Ganpat, 4 C.W.N. 779. The contrary view taken in Arunachalam v. Chidambaram, 29 Mad. 97 is no longer correct.

Right to tola from a 'hat' :—A dispute as regards the right to collect 'tolas' (small perquisites) from a hat on one day every year, is one concerning the right of use of any land within the meaning of this section—Sarat v. Mobarak, 21 C.W.N. 439, 24 C.L.J. 437, 18 Cr.L.J. 113.

Rights arising out of contract :—Prior to the present amendment of this section, it was held that a dispute between a landlord and his tenant regarding the right of the latter to reconstruct a gola which had fallen down was not a matter properly coming within the operation of sec. 147. The settlement of such a dispute involved issues of right which could properly be determined by a Civil Court. The right of use of land contemplated by sec. 147 was one of an entirely different description resembling a right of easement, and not one arising from the terms of a contract between landlord and tenant. Emp v. Ganpat, 4 C.W.N. 779. See also Arunachalam v. Chidambaram, 29 Mad. 97. But this is no longer the law. By reason of the present amendment, the rights arising out of a contract will also fall under this section. See notes under "Change" above. Before the present amendment, the words of the section were "the right of use of any land and water (including any right of way or other easement over the same)". The words of the present section are more general.

Right to use of water :—A Magistrate can take action under this section if he is satisfied that a dispute regarding the right to irrigate from a tank is likely to cause a breach of the peace—Q. E. v. Bechan, O.S.C.

64 Where it was found that the plaintiff had a right to the flow of water for purposes of irrigation from a certain channel passing through a village of the defendant who obstructed such flow by erecting bunds, the Magistrate was competent, under this section, to direct the removal of the obstruction—Pasupati v. Nandalal, 5 C.W.N. 67; Dalmir v. Khodadad, 36 Cal. 923, 14 C.W.N. 179; Q v. Madho Churn, 13 W.R. 51.

Where Christians were prevented by Hindus from the lawful exercise of their right to take water from a well, it was held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction under this section to pass an order prohibiting the Hindus from interfering with the exercise of that right—Hindus v Christians, 21 M.L.J. 486, 11 Cr.L.J. 721.

Right to let off water:—The right to let off water by the natural course in which it has always flowed and would always flow, so as to prevent inundation of one's own land, is a natural right of every landholder to the use and enjoyment of his own land. Where the second party erected a bund on the boundary of the first party's village to prevent the flow of such water, the Magistrate had jurisdiction to direct the removal of the bund—Dowlat v. Siva Pershad, 15 C L J 267, 12 Cr L J. 319.

Right to fish:—There is nothing in this section which limits its operation only to easements. This section relates also to rights in the nature of easements, for instance, the right to fish in a bhi—Dukhi Molla v. Halway, 23 Cal. 55; Kall Kissen v. Anund Chunder, 23 Cal. 557.

Right to ferry:—A dispute regarding right to use a ferry comes within the scope of this section—Harbullabh v Bajrang, 3 C.W.N. 148.

Right to take sandal paste from idol.—A right to take sandalwood paste removed from the person of the idol is not a right to the use of any land or water within the meaning of this section, and therefore this section does not apply to a dispute regarding such right—In re Pandurang, 4 Bom. L.R. 438.

Right to bury the dead is a right contemplated by this section, and the Magistrate has to see whether the right which is exercisable only on particular occasions or particular seasons was exercised during the last of such seasons or occasions—Mad Abdul v Mad. Ashroff, 51 Mad. 522, 29 Cr L.J. 644 (645) -

Right to worship —A right to perform the duties of a Pujari in a temple is not a right to the use of any land. It is the worship which is disputed and not the use of land. Therefore, a dispute regarding such a right cannot be the basis of a proceeding under this section—Guram v. Lal Behary, 37 Cal. 578, Surendra v Sashi Bhusan, 52 Cal. 959, 42 C L J. 127, 27 Cr L.J. 239. Where the matters in dispute cannot be adjudicated by a Civil Court (e.g. disputes relating to performance of worship and other religious ceremonies), Magistrates have no jurisdiction to deal with those matters under sec 147. In such matters, if the Magistrate apprehends that there will be a breach of the peace, he is to adopt the procedure prescribed by Chapter VIII, and to take security—

469. Inquiry as under Sec. 145:—A case under this section is to be decided by the same procedure and on the same principles as a case under sec. 145—Ram Saran v. Raghunandan, 38 Cal. 387. Section 147 clearly says that the procedure under this section must be as under sec. 145, which includes the filing of written statements, taking of evidence, and if necessary, local investigation. Therefore, an order under section 147 passed on proceedings taken under sec. 133, without any action in accordance with sec. 145, is without jurisdiction—Abdool v. Safar Ali, 15 C.W.N. 667, 12 Cr.L.J. 43. Where the petitioners set up a right of easement over a road which the opposite party attempted to close, and the Magistrate, instead of following the procedure laid down in this section, went over to the office of the opposite party, examined certain documents and correspondences in respect of the road, and then passed an order declaring the road to belong to the opposite party and forbidding the petitioners to enter upon the road, held that the procedure was wholly unjustifiable, as he made inquiries in the absence of the petitioners, and without giving them an opportunity of adducing their own evidence and examining witnesses, and passed the order without coming to a distinct finding as to the alleged right of easement set up by the petitioners—Narendra v. E. I. Ry., 5 P.L.T. 419, 25 Cr.L.J. 455, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 717.

When proceedings are started under sec. 145 on the basis of a police report, but during the trial the Court finds it is a matter falling under sec. 147, he can convert the proceedings into one under that section—Anath Bandhu v. Wahid Ali, 26 Cr.L.J. 558 (Cal); In re Amarsang, 48 Bom 512 (515), 26 Bom L.R. 436.

Long and protracted inquiry—Question of title:—Where a case under this section is likely to involve a long and complicated inquiry and the presence of a large number of people, the proper course for the Magistrate to follow is to bind down under sec. 107 such of the persons as are likely to disturb the peace—Kali Kissen v. Anund, 23 Cal. 557. So also, where the settlement of a dispute involves issues of right which can only be determined by a Civil Court, the proper course for the Magistrate is to proceed under sec. 107—Emp v. Ganpat 4 C.W.N. 779; Arunachalam v. Chidambaram, 29 Mad 97, Dalmir v. Khodadad, 36 Cal 923, 10 Cr.L.J. 579. This section does not convert the Magistrate into a Civil Court, which is to determine the rights between the parties or to discuss and consider any proprietary damage done to individuals—Rosik Lal v. Kartik, 22 W.R. 48.

Inquiry by subordinate Magistrate:—Where a District Magistrate, on being satisfied that there exists a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace as regards the right to perform a religious ceremony, refers the case to a Magistrate for inquiry, the latter is bound under this section to inquire into the matter in the manner provided by sec. 145—In re Dhyaneswar, 3 Bom L.R. 416. But see Note 408 under Section 145.

470. Notice to parties:—The inquiry contemplated by this section is a judicial inquiry and the opinion to be formed must be a judicial one formed upon evidence legally before the Magistrate. The evidence before the Magistrate would not be legal, if it were taken behind the back of persons who claimed or denied the right, i.e., if they had not been represented at the inquiry and had no notice of it—Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, 21 Cal. 727. Where an order was passed under this section without giving notice to the party concerned, the order was without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside—Crown v. Bhana, 1909 P.R. 12, 11 Cr.L.J. 61. Where the proceedings were originally started in respect of a portion of a pathway, but subsequently the Court amended the proceedings by making them applicable to the whole pathway without notice to the party affected, held that the final order was not binding on the party affected—Janaki v. Monmohan, 25 Cr.L.J. 674, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 263.

Actual notice should be given to all the persons claiming or denying the right, notice to servants of such persons is not equivalent to notice to them—Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, 21 Cal. 727. The inquiry presumes not that one party only, but that both parties to the dispute, will be afforded an opportunity of appearing and adducing evidence on all the material facts—In re Alfred Lindsay, 4 Mad. 121.

471. Parties :—In an inquiry under this section, it is sufficient if persons who claim for themselves the right, though that right be derived from others (e.g., right to fish in a bhil), are made parties. It is not necessary that the proprietors (of the bhil) should be added as parties—Dukhi v. Halway, 23 Cal. 55.

A Magistrate is not competent to add parties to a proceeding under sec. 147, after making a preliminary order. An order made after the addition of parties is null and void only as against the added party, but is binding on those to whom it is properly directed—Pasupati v. Nando Lal, 5 C.W.N. 67. The Nagpur J. C. Court holds that the addition of parties after making the preliminary order is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the proceedings—Parashram v. Gopal, 25 Cr.L.J. 353.

472. Evidence :—The inquiry contemplated by the section is a judicial inquiry and the opinion of the Magistrate must be a judicial one formed upon evidence legally before him—Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, 21 Cal. 727. A party against whom proceedings are instituted is entitled to produce evidence to prove that the case does not fall within this section—Crown v. Bhana, 1909 P.R. 12, 11 Cr.L.J. 61.

An order passed merely on a written statement, without taking any evidence in proof of the allegation contained in the written statement, is bad in law—Md. Noor v. Bikkam, 30 Cal. 918. So also, an order passed without giving the parties an opportunity of calling evidence is one without jurisdiction—Pilaji v. Darya, 20 Cr.L.J. 110 (Nag). See also Narendra v. E. I. Ry., 5 P.L.T. 419 cited in Note 469 above.

But where the allegation of one party is admitted by the other, no evidence is necessary in addition to the written statement—Haromohan v. Gobind, 7 C.W.N. 351.

Local inspection :—In a matter under this section, the Magistrate is bound to hear the evidence tendered by the parties. He cannot summarily deal with the case after local inspection—Emp. v. Ganpat, 4 C.W.N. 779.

469. Inquiry as under Sec. 145:—A case under this section is to be decided by the same procedure and on the same principles as a case under sec. 145—Ram Saran v. Raghunandan, 38 Cal. 387. Section 147 clearly says that the procedure under this section must be as under sec. 145, which includes the filing of written statements, taking of evidence, and if necessary, local investigation. Therefore, an order under section 147 passed on proceedings taken under sec. 133, without any action in accordance with sec. 145, is without jurisdiction—Abdool v. Safar Ali, 15 C.W.N. 667, 12 Cr.L.J. 43. Where the petitioners set up a right of easement over a road which the opposite party attempted to close, and the Magistrate, instead of following the procedure laid down in this section, went over to the office of the opposite party, examined certain documents and correspondences in respect of the road, and then passed an order declaring the road to belong to the opposite party and forbidding the petitioners to enter upon the road, held that the procedure was wholly unjustifiable, as he made inquiries in the absence of the petitioners, and without giving them an opportunity of adducing their own evidence and examining witnesses, and passed the order without coming to a distinct finding as to the alleged right of easement set up by the petitioners—Narendra v. E. I. Ry., 5 P.L.T. 419, 25 Cr.L.J. 455, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 717.

When proceedings are started under sec. 145 on the basis of a police report, but during the trial the Court finds it is a matter falling under sec. 147, he can convert the proceedings into one under that section—Anath Bandhu v. Wahid Ali, 26 Cr.L.J. 558 (Cal.); In re Amarsang, 48 Bom. 512 (515), 26 Bom.L.R. 436.

Long and protracted inquiry—Question of title—Where a case under this section is likely to involve a long and complicated inquiry and the presence of a large number of people, the proper course for the Magistrate to follow is to bind down under sec. 107 such of the persons as are likely to disturb the peace—Kali Kissen v. Anund, 23 Cal. 557. So also, where the settlement of a dispute involves issues of right which can only be determined by a Civil Court, the proper course for the Magistrate is to proceed under sec. 107—*Emp v. This section does not convert the Magistrate into a Civil Court, which is to determine the rights between the parties or to discuss and consider any proprietary damage done to individuals—Rosik Lal v. Kartik, 22 W.R. 48.

Inquiry by subordinate Magistrate—Where a District Magistrate, on being satisfied that there exists a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace as regards the right to perform a religious ceremony, refers the case to a Magistrate for inquiry, the latter is bound under this section to inquire into the matter in the manner provided by sec. 145—In re Dhyaneshwar, 3 Bom.L.R. 416. But see Note 408 under Section 145.

470. Notice to parties—The inquiry contemplated by this section is a judicial inquiry and the opinion to be formed must be a judicial one formed upon evidence legally before the Magistrate. The evidence before the Magistrate would not be legal, if it were taken behind the back of persons who claimed or denied the right, i.e., if they had not been represented at the inquiry and had no notice of it—Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, 21 Cal. 727. Where an order was passed under this section without giving notice to the party concerned, the order was without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside—Crown v. Bhana, 1909 P.R. 12, 11 Cr.L.J. 61. Where the proceedings were originally started in respect of a portion of a pathway, but subsequently the Court amended the proceedings by making them applicable to the whole pathway without notice to the party affected, held that the final order was not binding on the party affected—Janaki v. Monmohan, 25 Cr.L.J. 674, A I R. 1925 Cal 263.

Actual notice should be given to all the persons claiming or denying the right; notice to servants of such persons is not equivalent to notice to them—Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, 21 Cal 727. The inquiry presumes not that one party only, but that both parties to the dispute, will be afforded an opportunity of appearing and adducing evidence on all the material facts—In re Alfred Lindsay, 4 Mad. 121.

471. Parties :—In an inquiry under this section, it is sufficient if persons who claim for themselves the right, though that right be derived from others (e.g., right to fish in a bhil), are made parties. It is not necessary that the proprietors (of the bhil) should be added as parties—Dukhi v. Halway, 23 Cal 55.

A Magistrate is not competent to add parties to a proceeding under sec. 147, after making a preliminary order. An order made after the addition of parties is null and void only as against the added party, but is binding on those to whom it is properly directed—Pasupati v. Nando Lal, 5 C.W.N. 67. The Nagpur J. C. Court holds that the addition of parties after making the preliminary order is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the proceedings—Parashram v. Gopal, 25 Cr.L.J. 353.

472. Evidence :—The inquiry contemplated by the section is a judicial inquiry and the opinion of the Magistrate must be a judicial one formed upon evidence legally before him—Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, 21 Cal. 727. A party against whom proceedings are instituted is entitled to produce evidence to prove that the case does not fall within this section—Crown v. Bhana, 1909 P.R. 12, 11 Cr.L.J. 61.

An order passed merely on a written statement, without taking any evidence in proof of the allegation contained in the written statement, is bad in law—Md. Noor v. Bikkam, 30 Cal. 918. So also, an order passed without giving the parties an opportunity of calling evidence is one without jurisdiction—Pilaji v. Darya, 20 Cr.L.J. 110 (Nag). See also Narendra v. E. I. Ry., 5 P L T. 419 cited in Note 469 above.

But where the allegation of one party is admitted by the other, no evidence is necessary in addition to the written statement—Haromohan v. Gobind, 7 C.W.N. 351.

Local inspection :—In a matter under this section, the Magistrate is bound to hear the evidence tendered by the parties. He cannot summarily deal with the case after local inspection—Emp. v. Ganpat, 4 C.W.N 779.

A decision of the Magistrate based substantially upon impressions obtained as a result of his local inspection is bad and liable to be set aside. But a decision based on the evidence as well as local inspection (the one corroborating the other) is not illegal—Muhammad Musa v. Shyam Sundar, 2 P.L.T. 681, 22 Cr.L.J. 739. The Magistrate can make a local inspection even prior to taking evidence in the case. But the finding must be based on evidence duly recorded and not merely upon the impressions formed on local inspection—Abdul Hamid v. Hasan Raza, 4 P.L.T. 297, 24 Cr.L.J. 487.

473. Proviso—User of right :—In the absence of a finding that the right has been exercised within the periods specified by the proviso to sub-section (2), the final order under this section cannot be maintained—Sirkawal v. Bhuja Singh, 5 P.L.T. 457, 25 Cr.L.J. 996. Where the right is exerciseable at all times of the year, there must be a finding that the right was exercised within three months—Guru Prasad v. Lachman, 14 Cr.L.J. 303 (Cal.); Crown v. Bhana, 1909 P.R. 12; Grant v. Padarath, 2 P.L.T. 364, 22 Cr.L.J. 463. Where it is proved that the first party have had an uninterrupted use of water of a nala for a period of 20 years, which they have enjoyed as an easement and as of right, and the erection of a bund has led to a dispute, there is then a sufficient finding that the right in dispute has been exercised within either of the periods mentioned in the proviso—Pasupati v. Nanda Lal, 5 C.W.N. 67. Where it is found that the Hindus had used a public street and had taken a procession along that street on a previous season, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to pass an order allowing the Hindus to take the procession on the present season and prohibiting the Muhammadans from interfering with the use by the Hindus of that street—Amir Khan v. Mahalingam, 51 Mad. 174, 53 M.L.J. 523, 28 Cr.L.J. 948 (1949). Where the non-exercise of the right within the period specified in the proviso was due to circumstances beyond the control of the party claiming the right, e.g. where the non-exercise was due to obstructions caused by the opponents of such party, the proviso to subsection (2) does not apply. The proviso obviously contemplates a non-exercise for reasons within the control of the persons claiming the right—In re Basappa, 27 Bom.L.R. 1058, 26 Cr.L.J. 1422.

Burden of proof —The right to restrain another from exercising the ordinary proprietary rights over his own land, e.g. the right to restrain another from cutting a bund on his own land and thus getting a liberal supply of water on his own land, is of the nature of an easement different from the ordinary rights of owners of land. The burden of proof that such a right exists lies on the party alleging it—Harī Mohan v. Kissen Sundari, 11 Cal. 52.

"Institution of the inquiry" :—The date of the institution of the inquiry within the meaning of the proviso does not refer to the date when the formal proceedings are drawn up under this section. An inquiry is instituted within three months of the obstruction complained of, within the meaning of the proviso, where the Magistrate hears the pleaders of the parties, and directs a local inquiry within three months of the date of the obstruction, even though the formal order is drawn up after three months—Rama Nath v. Saroda, 44 C.L.J. 214, 28 Cr.L.J. 1.

The 'inquiry' that is contemplated by the proviso is the inquiry by the Magistrate into the rights of parties, and not an inquiry by the Police into the existence of the likelihood of a breach of the peace. Where in the case of an alleged obstruction of a pathway, proceedings under sec. 147 are drawn up by the Magistrate more than three months after the date of the obstruction complained of, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to proceed under this section. The fact that he ordered a police inquiry within three months of the obstruction cannot give him jurisdiction—Ram Chandra v. Aditya, 53 Cal 851, 30 C.W.N. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 1089.

474. Nature of order :—The order under this section is one permitting a thing to be done or directing that a thing shall not be done. This section does not enable the Magistrate to make a purely declaratory order. It only enables him to prevent arbitrary interruption by any person of rights actually enjoyed which have been exercised by the public or by a person or class or persons—Maharaja of Burdwan v. Chairman, Darjeeling Municipality, 5 Cal 194. This section is not intended to provide a substitute for a civil suit to declare the rights of parties, but only empowers the Magistrate to order that possession shall not be taken by any party to the exclusion of the public until that party establishes his right in a Civil Court—Moonshee Hurukh Lal, 6 W.R. 74.

The words of subsection (2) do not give the Magistrate any power of directing one of the parties to do a positive act by way of mandatory injunction. The power given by this clause is analogous to the power of a Civil Court to grant a temporary injunction by issuing a prohibitory order restraining any person from doing any act which interferes with the right of another. Therefore, where the second party raised a wall on his own land blocking the windows in the house of the first party and thereby shut out light and air from a room in that house, the Magistrate had no power to order the second party to demolish the wall—Hari Mali v. Hari Dasi, 41 C.L.J. 568, 26 Cr.L.J. 1265, 30 C.W.N. 238. But prior to the amendment of this section, a Magistrate was competent to make an order for the removal of an obstruction to a right of way, if there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace in consequence of such obstruction—Lalit Chandra v. Tarini, 5 C.W.N. 335; or an order for the removal of an obstruction to the right to the flow of water caused by the erection of bunds—Pasupati v. Nandalal, 5 C.W.N. 67; Dalmir v. Khodadad, 36 Cal 923; Manzur Hussain v. Gouri Lal, 20 Cr.L.J. 209 (Pat.). If the obstruction is caused to a public way or thoroughfare, the Magistrate has no power to order the removal of such obstruction under this section, but should proceed under Chapter X (Sec. 133)—In re Lutchniah, 1 Weir 143; Baroda Persad v. Mudoo Soodun, 5 W.R. 5; In re Alfred Lindsay, 4 Mad 121. In Karuppanna v. Kandasami, 26 M.L.J. 233, 15 Cr.L.J. 362, and Sudalaimuthu v. Enan, 16 Cr.L.J. 767 (Mad), however, it has been held that Sec. 147 can be applied whether the right of way claimed is a right to a public path or a private path;

of persons who claimed or denied the right, i.e., if they had not been represented at the inquiry and had no notice of it—Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, 21 Cal. 727. Where an order was passed under this section without giving notice to the party concerned, the order was without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside—Crown v. Bhana, 1909 P.R. 12, 11 Cr.L.J. 61. Where the proceedings were originally started in respect of a portion of a pathway, but subsequently the Court amended the proceedings by making them applicable to the whole pathway without notice to the party affected, held that the final order was not binding on the party affected—Janaki v. Monmohan, 25 Cr.L.J. 674, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 263.

Actual notice should be given to all the persons claiming or denying the right; notice to servants of such persons is not equivalent to notice to them—Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, 21 Cal. 727. The inquiry presumes not that one party only, but that both parties to the dispute, will be afforded an opportunity of appearing and adducing evidence on all the material facts—In re Alfred Lindsay, 4 Mad. 121.

471. Parties.—In an inquiry under this section, it is sufficient if persons who claim for themselves the right, though that right be derived from others (e.g., right to fish in a bhul), are made parties. It is not necessary that the proprietors (of the bhul) should be added as parties—Dukhi v. Halway, 23 Cal. 55.

A Magistrate is not competent to add parties to a proceeding under sec. 147, after making a preliminary order. An order made after the addition of parties is null and void only as against the added party, but is binding on those to whom it is properly directed—Pasupati v. Nando Lal, 5 C.W.N. 67. The Nagpur J. C. Court holds that the addition of parties after making the preliminary order is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the proceedings—Parashram v. Gopal, 25 Cr.L.J. 353.

472. Evidence.—The inquiry contemplated by the section is a judicial inquiry and the opinion of the Magistrate must be a judicial one formed upon evidence legally before him—Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, 21 Cal. 727. A party against whom proceedings are instituted is entitled to produce evidence to prove that the case does not fall within this section—Crown v. Bhana, 1909 P.R. 12, 11 Cr.L.J. 61.

An order passed merely on a written statement, without taking any evidence in proof of the allegation contained in the written statement, is bad in law—Md. Noor v. Bikkari, 30 Cal. 918. So also, an order passed without giving the parties an opportunity of calling evidence is one without jurisdiction—Pilafi v. Darya, 20 Cr.L.J. 110 (Nag.). See also Narendra v. E. I. Ry., 5 P.L.T. 419 cited in Note 469 above.

But where the allegation of one party is admitted by the other, no evidence is necessary in addition to the written statement—Harmohan v. Gobind, 7 C.W.N. 351.

Local inspection.—In a matter under this section, the Magistrate is bound to hear the evidence tendered by the parties. He cannot summarily deal with the case after local inspection—Emp v. Ganpat, 4 C.W.N. 779:

the terms of the section are wide enough to cover both cases, and the fact that Sec. 133 expressly provides for an order by the Magistrate directing the removal of obstruction to public pathways does not necessarily imply that a similar order cannot be passed in proceedings under Sec. 147.

This section does not enable the Magistrate to order the Police to remove the obstruction. There is no indication in the Code that the Legislature intended the Magistrate to carry out an order under this section through the agency of the Police. This section clearly contemplates orders directed to persons who are parties to the dispute—Dalmir v. Khodadad, 36 Cal. 923, contra—Dowlat v. Siva Prasad, 15 C.L.J. 267, 12 Cr.L.J. 319 where it was held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to direct the complaining party to remove the obstruction with the assistance of the Police.

Under sub-section (3) a Magistrate has jurisdiction to make a prohibitive order ("order directing that such thing shall not be done,") against a party who is found not to have the right which he claims. Where the 1st. party claimed a right of passage over certain land which the other party denied, and the Magistrate found that the right of easement did not exist, the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass an order directing that the first party should not use the right of passage until he obtained the decision of a competent Court adjudging his right—Pyari Mohan v. Harish Chandra 23 C.W.N. 956, 20 Cr.L.J. 251.

Order must affect parties only—This section contemplates an order to be passed between parties to the proceedings only. An order affecting persons who are not parties to the proceedings is not within the purview of this section and is therefore liable to be set aside as affecting jurisdiction—Pillai v. Darya, 20 Cr.L.J. 110 (Nag).

Order contrary to Civil Court's decree—If the matter which is in dispute under this section (e.g. a disputed fishery right) has already been adjudicated upon by a Civil Court, a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to enquire into a claim which is entirely contrary to that Court's decree—In re Anya Shidya, 29 Bom. L.R. 715, 28 Cr.L.J. 578 (579).

Duration of order—An order under this section is bad in form, if it contains no restriction of time for which it is to operate—In re Almaran, 14 Bom. 25.

475. Revival of proceedings—Where during the pendency of proceedings under sec. 147, the parties referred the dispute to arbitration, whereupon the Magistrate made an order to the effect that further proceedings were unnecessary, and they were therefore stayed, but after the arbitration proceedings (which remained pending for one year) became ineffectual, the Magistrate continued the proceedings under sec. 147, held that the Magistrate's order staying further proceedings ousted his jurisdiction to continue the proceedings. Moreover, the Magistrate could not revive the proceedings unless he had drawn up fresh proceedings—and unless he was satisfied that there was a fresh dispute likely to cause a fresh breach of the peace after the arbitration proceedings ceased; and he was not justified in assuming that the causes which originally existed instance, in cases in which it is necessary to ascertain by measurement the disputed areas of land or to ascertain whether particular lands are identical with the lands detailed in documents, and in such cases only. When, however, any fact can be elicited by evidence, that evidence should be heard by the Court itself"—Cal H C Cir. No 41 of 1866. The scope of local inquiry is extremely limited. It should be restricted solely to some question relating to the feature of the property about which the dispute has arisen, and should not be directed to any matter which can be proved before the Magistrate by oral evidence, such as the question of actual possession—In re Baikunt, 3 C.L.R. 134; Lachmi Narain v. Mukhram, 24 Cr L J 507 (Pat). The object of local inspection is to understand and appreciate the topography of the land in dispute in order to aid the Magistrate in appreciating the evidence offered by the Court, but the local inspection cannot take the place of legal evidence, much less the result thereof can be used as a basis for the decision—Ram Ratan v. Tarak Nath, 25 Cr L J 412, A.L.R. 1922 Pat. 249. Thus, in a case where the levels and the falls of water are concerned, local inspection is imminently necessary—Dowlat v. Siva Prasad, 15 C.L.J. 267, 12 Cr L.J. 319. So also, where rights of irrigation and rights of taking water through particular reservoirs are concerned, a local inspection is immediately necessary—Abdul Hamid v. Hasan, 4 P.L.T. 297, 24 Cr L J 487.

There is no hard and fast rule that in every case under this chapter a local investigation must be held whether the parties desire it or not—Upendra v. Prasanno, 20 Cr L J 17 (Cal). For instance, it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to hold such an investigation whenever he is unable to ascertain as to which party is in possession—Ibid.

The term "local inquiry" in this section contemplates delegation of judicial functions, the mere making a survey of the disputed land preparing a map thereof do not amount to a local inquiry under this section, because they are not judicial but purely ministerial acts; and such acts can be entrusted to a person other than a Magistrate e.g. to a pleader Commissioner (or even an amil). The report of such a person cannot be read as evidence under subsection (2) but he must be called as a witness and examined and cross-examined as to his report—Chulal Mahto v. Surendra, 1 Pat 75, 3 P.L.T. 17, 23 Cr L J 152.

Who can make the inquiry —The trying Magistrate can himself make the local inquiry. Though as a rule it is better to have the local investigation carried out by some other person, there is nothing in law to prevent the presiding Magistrate from conducting the inquiry himself, provided he records what he saw and does not act upon hearsay evidence—Dowlat v. Siva Prasad, 15 C.L.J. 267; Abdul Hamid v. Hasan, 4 P.L.T. 297, 24 Cr.L.J. 487.

This section empowers the presiding Magistrate to depute a subordinate Magistrate to make the inquiry, but the person deputed must be a Magistrate, not a Kanungoe—In re Uma Churn, 7 C.L.R. 352. If, however, the trying Magistrate deposes a Kanungoe to make an inquiry, his report cannot be taken as evidence in the case, like the report of a sub-Magistrate, but the Kanungoe (like any other private person who has seen the place) must come into the witness-box and depose on oath as to what he saw—Achambit v. Sarada, 12 Cr.L.J. 480 (Cal.)

The deputed Magistrate must make the inquiry himself; he cannot delegate it to some body else—Jaiwant v. Rama Rao, 20 Cr.L.J. 107 (Nag.).

Recording evidence by the deputed Magistrate—The local inquiry authorised by this section is not merely a local inspection by the sub-Magistrate, but includes the act of recording evidence by such Magistrate in the course of the inquiry. But the recording of evidence by the sub-Magistrate does not absolve the trying Magistrate from the duty imposed upon him by sec. 145 (4) of receiving the evidence produced before him by the parties and taking any further evidence he may think necessary. Where a first class Magistrate recorded no evidence himself but acted solely upon the evidence taken by a sub-Magistrate at a local inquiry, the former must be deemed to have acted without jurisdiction, but this defect or irregularity would be cured by sec 537 and the High Court would not interfere—Muthusamy v. Kalinga, 33 M.L.J. 78, 18 Cr.L.J. 715.

477. Report of the deputed Magistrate :—Subsection (2) provides that the report of the deputed Magistrate may be read as evidence in the case, but it is not necessary to examine such Magistrate on oath as a witness—Achambit v. Sarada, 12 Cr.L.J. 480 (Cal.).

When a local inquiry is instituted, and the result reported, such report becomes a part of the proceedings in the case, and the party affected by it is entitled to be acquainted with the result of it and to have an opportunity of rebutting the report, if he thinks necessary so to do—Jaiwant v. Rama Rao, 20 Cr.L.J. 107 (Nag.); Mir Dhunoo v. Brown, 21 W.R. 25. If a Magistrate makes a local inquiry he must make a note of what he saw and must place it on the record so that the parties may be in a position to know what impression the Magistrate has got by the local inquiry. It is possible that the Magistrate may have formed a wrong impression, and if the results of his inspection are recorded, the parties would be in a position to know if there has been an error, and to remove the wrong impression formed by the Magistrate Abdul Hamid v. Hasan, 4 P.L.T. 297, 24 Cr.L.J. 487.

Decision based on report.—A Magistrate cannot base his decision merely on the report of the subordinate Magistrate, without examining any witness—Pitambar v. Saroda, 10 A.L.J. 465, 13 Cr.L.J. 777; Ramratan v. Taraknath, 25 Cr.L.J. 412 (Pat.). In Muthusami v. Kalinga, 17 Cr.L.J. 478 (Mad.) and Piziruddin v. Totajennissa, 14 Cr.L.J. 302 (Cal.) however, the Magistrate deciding the case on the basis of the report of the inquiry was held to have acted within his jurisdiction. Where the trying Magistrate based his order on the report of the sub-Magistrate and on the evidence recorded by him during the local inquiry, and both parties were quite content to abide by the result of the sub-Magistrate's inquiry, and no objections were advanced before the trying Magistrate against the sub-Magistrate's finding, it was held that the order of the trying Magistrate was not without jurisdiction and should not be interfered with in revision—Muthusami v. Kalinga, 33 M.L.J. 78, 18 Cr.L.J. 715

478. Costs :—Before this section was amended by the 1923 Amendment Act, it was held that the only costs which a Magistrate could award under this section were those incurred for witnesses or pleaders' fees or both. He could not make an order for any other costs, e.g. costs on account of damage to crops—Prayag v. Gobind, 32 Cal. 602. So also, he could not include in the costs the penalty paid by one party on behalf of the other under section 44 (3), Stamp Act in respect of an improperly stamped document produced in evidence in a proceeding under sec. 145 of this Code—Popuri v. Tummalagunta, 13 M.L.T. 224, 13 Cr.L.J. 297.

Under the present section as amended, the word "include" shows that the Magistrate is able to award costs other than those incurred for witnesses or pleaders' fees

In awarding costs for witnesses and pleaders' fees, the Magistrate should not include additional costs incurred for extra fees and for travelling and other expenses of a like nature incurred for bringing pleaders or counsels from a distance—Rajendra v. Md. Arzumund, 9 C.W.N. 887.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to award only the actual costs incurred; and the order must give particulars as to how the Magistrate arrived at the figure, otherwise the order is bad—Uday Narain v. Satish, 14 C.W.N. 1xxiii. The order awarding costs is a judicial order and therefore must be based on proper materials, there must be materials on the record to show that the Magistrate arrived at the figure as the result of a calculation of the costs incurred by the party. An order arbitrarily awarding a round sum of Rs 50 or Rs 100 as costs, without there being anything on the record to show that the said amount was actually incurred, is bad in law and must be set aside—Jhama v. Thakuri, 1 P.L.T. 369, 21 Cr.L.J. 625; Hira Mahton v. Raj Kumar, 3 P.L.T. 484, 23 Cr.L.J. 508, Khubi v. Darbari, 2 P.L.T. 267, Manglu v. Ramdhani, 9 P.L.T. 835, 30 Cr.L.J. 252. So, before making an order as to costs, it is necessary and proper that the Magistrate should hold an inquiry as to what expenditure in costs was actually incurred—Nemdhari v. Ram Tahal, 17 Cr.L.J. 348 (Pat.)

The Magistrate may direct that the costs of any party are to be paid by any other party to the proceeding, but not by persons who are not parties to the proceeding—Emp v. Chet Khan, 27 Cr.L.J. 21 (Oudh).

If the costs are such as would fall within the scope of this section, the High Court will not consider whether they are excessive or deficient—Bansi v. Syed Mohd. Akbar, 15 C.W.N. 811, 12 Cr.L.J. 376.

The costs will be recoverable as fines. See Sec. 547. The words "All costs.....fines" have been omitted as unnecessary, because a general provision to that effect has been made in sec. 547.

Costs in revision :—The costs referred to in this section are the costs incurred in the magisterial proceedings. Magistrates have power under this section to direct by whom any costs incurred by the parties in proceedings before them under this Chapter are to be paid. So also, the High Court in revision can pass any order which the Magistrate himself could have passed, i.e., the High Court can in revision direct the costs incurred before the Magistrate to be paid by one party to another. But the High Court cannot, in revision of proceedings under Ch XII, direct the costs incurred before the High Court in revision to be paid by one party to another. Even the award of costs cannot be treated as incidental or consequential to the disposal of a revision petition within the meaning of sec 423 (1) (d), for it does not necessarily follow from an order passed in revision—Veerappa v. Avudayammal, 48 Mad. 262 (F.B.), 48 M.L.J. 106, 26 Cr.L.J. 707.

But the Bombay High Court is of opinion that the High Court can award the costs incurred in the hearing of the revision petition: such power is given by sec 439 read with sec 423 (d)—Bal Jiba v. Chandulal, 27 Bom L.R. 1353, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 91, 27 Cr.L.J. 661

Who can order costs:—Only the Magistrate who passes the final order under Sec. 145, 146 or 147 can pass an order awarding costs, though the actual assessment may be made by his successor. This cannot be interpreted as authorising the successor of the Magistrate who passed the final order under sec. 145 to award costs to the successful party. Where the Magistrate making the final order declaring possession left the district, and his successor made an order granting costs, the order as to costs was set aside as made without jurisdiction—Ikias v. Raja Raghuraj, 13 O.C. 66, 11 Cr.L.J. 335.

The Magistrate passing the order as to costs must be the Magistrate passing the decision in the case—Nagar Chandra v. Siddhartha, 47 Cal. 974, 24 C.W.N. 672; Mangla v. Ramdhani, 9 P.L.T. 835, 30 Cr.L.J. 252. But he may or may not be the Magistrate who initiated the proceedings under this chapter. Where the proceedings under this chapter are initiated by one Magistrate, and the final order is passed by another, it is the latter Magistrate who can award costs—Vythinadha v. Mayandi, 29 Mad. 373

Time of awarding costs—An order for costs should ordinarily be made at the time of the original order and in the presence of parties—Q. E. v. Tomijuddi, 24 Cal. 757; Ikias v. Raja Raghuraj, 13 O.C. 66, 11 Cr.L.J. 335. The award of costs under this section should be made by the Magistrate at the time of giving his decision, unless for any reason the consideration of the matter is reserved for any future stage of the proceedings—Binoda Sundari v. Kali Krishna, 22 Cal. 387. There is no hard and fast rule which lays down that an order for costs must necessarily be made at the time the judgment is delivered—Dowlat v. Siva Prasad, 15 C.L.J. 267. The order for costs may be made within a reasonable time after the passing of the judgment—Nagar v. Siddhartha, 47 Cal. 974, 24 C.W.N. 672; Mangla v. Ramdhani, supra. In the usual course an award should almost invariably be contemporaneous with the decision of the main question and the order passed thereon. But the fact that the award of costs has not been made at the very time of the decision of the case, does not necessarily render the award invalid; and when the circumstances of a case really require it, the disposal of the question of costs may be postponed—Vythinaatha v. Mayandi, 29 Mad. 373.

If the order awarding costs is not passed at the time of passing the decision in the case, it must be passed within a reasonable time after the disposal of the case and in the presence of both parties—Vythinaatha v. Mayandi, 29 Mad. 373; Najar v. Siddhartha, 47 Cal. 974; Dowlat v. Siva Pershad, 15 C.L.J. 267. What is reasonable time must depend upon the circumstances of each case—Najar v. Siddhartha, 47 Cal. 974. An order awarding costs made long (three months) after the original order and without giving notice to the parties affected and without allowing them an opportunity to appear and show cause is bad—Q. E. v. Tomijuddi, 24 Cal. 757; Palaniandi v. Sammandi, 16 L.W. 613; Manglu v. Ramdhani, supra. But an order awarding costs made ten days after the passing of the order under sec. 145 (6) is not illegal by reason of the delay—Chadhar v. Ramsingh, 19 Cr.L.J. 390 (Pat.).

478A. Assessment of costs.—Who can assess costs.—Where the Magistrate who passed the decision under Sec 145 had already awarded the costs, it is not necessary that the costs should be assessed by the same officer who decided the case—Giridhar v. Ebadulla, 22 Cal. 384. Another Magistrate (e.g. his successor) has jurisdiction to assess the amount of costs—Ma Ershad Ali v. Saroda, 23 Cal. 37 (dissenting from Bhojal v. Nirban, 21 Cal 609); Giridhar, 22 Cal. 384; Bansi v. Syed Mohd., 15 C.W.N 811, Subbiah v. Chokkalunga, 27 M.L.J 613, 15 Cr.L.J 676. Though a Magistrate did not himself pass the order under sec. 145, still he has jurisdiction to assess costs—Dilbas v. Desrati, 10 C.W.N 1030.

Time of assessing costs.—An order awarding and assessing costs should be made at the time of the original order—Q. E. v. Tomijuddi, 24 Cal. 757. This shows that the assessment of costs should be contemporaneous with the order awarding costs. But there is no inflexible rule that the costs must be assessed at the time of passing the decision in the case—Giridhar v. Ebadulla, 22 Cal 384. Once an order as to costs is made, the amount of costs may be subsequently assessed—Emp. v. Medapati, 14 M.L.T. 195, 14 Cr.L.J 570. But the assessment must be made within a reasonable time after the award of costs. An assessment of costs more than two years after the date of the order awarding the costs is bad in law—Bhojal v. Nirban, 21 Cal 609.

Application by legal representative for assessment of costs.—Where through the negligence of the Court's officers, the amount of costs was not included in the final order directing payment of costs to the petitioner, and nearly three years after, the legal representative of the petitioner (the petitioner having died in the interval) applied to the Magistrate's successor in office for the costs being assessed, held that the application was sustainable and the applicant was entitled to have the costs assessed, although this Code contains no special provision for bringing on record the representatives of the deceased parties—Subbia v. Chockalinga, 27 M.L.J. 613, 15 Cr L.J. 676.

Notice to parties :—An order awarding costs should be made in the presence of parties—Vythinatha v. Mayandi, 29 Mad 373. An order awarding and assessing costs without allowing all the parties affected an opportunity to appear and show cause is bad—Q. E. v. Tomijuddi, 24 Cal. 757. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order under this section making the party liable for a certain sum as costs without notice to him so that he may have an opportunity of contesting the same—Prokash v. Ram Prasad, 28 Cal 302, Bansi v. Syed Mohd., 15 C.W.N. 811; Divarka v. Nathuni, 19 Cr.L.J. 764 (Pat).

Even an order setting aside a previous order as to costs cannot be passed without giving notice to the opposite party—Dilbasi v. Deoraff, 10 C.W.N. 1030.

Revision :—Orders under this section are now open to revision. See Note 447 under sec. 145. The ruling in Rajendra v. Md. Arzumand, 8 C.W.N. 887 is no longer correct.

CHAPTER XIII.

PREVENTIVE ACTION OF THE POLICE.

149. Every police-officer may interpose for the purpose of preventing, and shall, to the best of his ability, prevent, the commission of any cognizable offence.

Police to prevent cognizable offences

478B. Scope :—This section provides for the prevention of cognizable offences only. Section 23 of the Police Act (V of 1861) appears to give wider powers for the prevention of offences in general—K. E. v. Nga Kala, 8 L.B.R. 329, 17 Cr L.J. 347.

The words 'interpose' in this section connotes the idea of actively intervening and not merely a prohibition by word of mouth. The word is not wide enough to cover all orders given by police-officers. It was not intended by the Legislature that the police officer would be empowered to pass all sorts of sweeping orders, with the consequence of the disobedience being punishable under sec. 188 I. P. Code. Such wide powers vested in a police officer would interfere unreasonably with the ordinary liberty of private citizens and could not have been contemplated by this section—Emp. v. Raghunath, 47 All. 205, 26 Cr.L.J. 599, A.I.R. 1925 All 165.

150. Every police-officer receiving information of a design to commit any cognizable offence shall communicate such information to the police-officer to whom he is subordinate, and to any other officer whose duty it is to prevent or take cognizance of the commission of any such offence.

As to the powers and duties of a police-officer, see secs. 82-85.

151. A police-officer knowing of a design to commit any cognizable offence may arrest, without orders from a Magistrate and without a warrant, the person so designing, if it appears to such officer that the commission of the offence cannot be otherwise prevented.

By sec. 151, a Police officer may arrest without warrant, if it appears to him that the commission of an offence cannot otherwise be prevented. Should he do so, his subsequent procedure must be regulated by sec 60—Bengal Police Manual, 2nd Edition, p. 374.

152. A police-officer may, of his own authority, interpose to prevent any injury attempted to be committed in his view to any public property, moveable or immoveable, or the removal or injury of any public landmark or buoy or other mark used for navigation.

153. (1) Any officer in charge of a police-station may, without a warrant, enter any place within the limits of such station for the purpose of inspecting or searching for any weights or measures or instruments for weighing, used or kept therein, whenever he has reason to believe that there are in such place any weights, measures or instruments for weighing which are false.

(2) If he finds in such place any weights, measures or instruments for weighing which are false, he may seize the same and may cause the same to be taken to a Magistrate having jurisdiction.

478C. This section expressly authorises an inspection of the weights and measures by an officer-in-charge of a Police station. In comparing the weights used in the bazar, some reasonable allowance should be made for wear and tear and of the rough and ready methods of bazar shop-keepers—Crown v. Nanak Chand, 1913 P.R. 20, 15 Cr L J 11.

This section does not apply to the Police in the towns of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, because similar provisions have been made in Calcutta by secs. 55 and 56 of the Calcutta Police Act (Bengal Act IV of 1886), in Bombay by sec. 4 of the Bombay City Police Act IV of 1902, and in Madras by sec. 32 of the Madras City Police Act III of 1888

See Act XXXI of 1871 relating to weights and measures of capacity, and the rules framed under sec. 11 of that Act. As to offences relating to weights and measures, see Chapter XIII, I. P. Code

PART V.

INFORMATION TO THE POLICE AND THEIR POWERS TO INVESTIGATE.

CHAPTER XIV.

This Chapter, except secs. 155, does not apply to the Police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay. Sec. 155 only applies to the Police of Calcutta and Bombay.—Q. E. v. Nilmadhab, 15 Cal. 595; Q. E. v. Visram Babaji, 21 Bom. 495 (499). For Section 164, see Note 509 under that section

154. Every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence, if given orally to an officer in charge of a police station, shall be reduced to writing by him or under his direction, and be read over to the informant; and every such information, whether given in writing or reduced to writing as aforesaid, shall be signed by the person giving it and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf.

Information in cognizable cases.

479. Scope—This section enables a Station House Officer to receive and record the information of the commission of a cognizable offence outside his station limits, though he has no power under Sec. 157 to conduct an investigation in respect of such offence—Nandamuri v. Emp., 1914 M.W.N. 382, 15 Cr L J. 622.

480. First Information :—The word "information" in this section means something in the nature of a complaint or accusation, or at least information of a crime, given with the object of putting the police in motion in order to investigate, as distinguished from information obtained by the Police when already investigating a crime. When the information which is first given to the police is of such a vague and indefinite character that it cannot be treated as coming under section 154, so as to make it incumbent upon the officer in charge of the police station to start an investigation, and he may reasonably require more information before doing so, any further information given to him in such circumstances may fall within section 154. In such a case such further information will not fall within section 162. The information referred to in section 154 may come from more than one source, and more than one such information may be recorded at or about the same time under the section; but once the police have taken active steps to investigate, any written statements taken by them fall within section 162 and are inadmissible in evidence—Gansa Oraon v K E, 2 Pat. 517, 4 P.L.T. 462, 24 Cr.L.J. 641.

The information referred to in this section is the first information of the offence by whomsoever given. The first information is that information which is given to the police first in point of time and not that which the police may select and record as first information—K. E. v. Bhutnath, 7 C.W.N. 345. Thus, where upon information given by the Chowkidar of an offence, which was duly recorded in the station diary, the Sub-Inspector went to the Hospital to see the dying man and took down his dying statement and filed it as the first information, it was held that the statement of the Chowkidar, and not that of the dying man, was the first information of the offence—K E v. Daulat, 6 C.W.N. 921. Where a person reported to a police officer that he had seen a certain woman with her throat cut, and the officer did not make a record of the fact but subsequently treated an information lodged by the woman's father as the first information in the case, held that the unrecorded information, and not the information given by the woman's father, was in fact the first information—Chandrika v. K. E., 1 Pat. 401, 3 P.L.T. 771, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 535. The information given by a Chowkidar to the effect that the mother of the accused had told him that the latter had assaulted his younger brother whilst under the influence of drink and that he (the Chowkidar) had seen blood-stains on the younger brother's head, was entered in the station-diary but not signed by the Chowkidar, and the police officer proceeded to the scene of occurrence and there took down the statement of the wife of the accused and took her thumb impression thereon; held that the Chowkidar's information was the first information in the case and that the statement made by the wife of the accused to the investigating officer was not admissible in evidence (sec 162)—Gansa Oraon v. K. E, 2 Pat. 517.

A statement made by a witness during investigation after the police officer has actually arrived at the scene and himself seen what has happened is not first information—Chittar Singh v. Emp, 47 All. 280, 23 A.L.J. 14, 20 Cr.L.J. 554. A statement by a witness to the police officer in the course of an investigation under the chapter and recorded under sec. 161 cannot be treated as first information given to the Police under sec. 154—Sultan v. Wellbourne, 3 Rang. 577, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 364, 26 Cr.L.J. 1532. The first information is the information given out immediately after the occurrence and reported to the Police and not the information which has been elicited in the course of the investigation. The first information is the basis upon which an investigation under this chapter commences. It is erroneously thought that the information on which an investigation is commenced is not the first information of the offence, and that when in the course of investigation something has been elicited which shows that an offence has been committed a first information can be recorded. This is certainly not what the law contemplates. In nearly every trial it is important that it should be known to the judicial officer what were the facts given out immediately after the occurrence and reported to the police, and the object of a first information is to render him so acquainted—K. E. v. Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345; Peary Mohan v. Weston, 16 C.W.N. 145, 13 Cr.L.J. 65; Autor Singh v. Emp., 17 C.W.N. 1213, 14 Cr.L.J. 642. The first information is the basis of the case, and whether it be true or false, it at any rate usually represents what was intended by the informant to be the case set up by him at the time. All Criminal Courts should bear in mind the importance of examining, when there appears to be any necessity to do so, the first information of an offence reduced to writing in accordance with this section. In view of the notorious tendency in this country to improve upon the original statement of facts to strengthen the case as it proceeds and sometimes to add to the persons originally named as the offenders, it is of great importance to know what was said at first.—C. P. Cr. Cir., Part II, No. 9.

Where the first information was recorded by a police-officer some hours after he had begun investigation of the case, but there was no previous information recorded and reduced to writing by him, the report falls under this section—Dargahi v. Emp., 52 Cal 499, 26 Cr.L.J. 1213, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 831. But a statement recorded several days after the commencement of the investigation, and after there has been some development is not only not the first information but has very little or no value at all as the original story, because it can be made to fit into the case as then developed—Emp v. Kampu, 11 C.W.N. 554; Peary Mohan v. Weston, 16 C.W.N. 145, 13 Cr.L.J. 65 (Midnapur Damage Suit).

An information given to a village Magistrate which it was his bounden duty to pass on to a Police Station House officer who recorded it, must be considered as having been given to the latter and recorded as first information under this section, and cannot be regarded as a statement recorded during the course of an investigation under sec. 162—Emp. v. Venkatarayudu, 28 Mad 565. A statement which is merely the reproduction by the person making it of the statement said to have been made by another person is not first information and not admissible in evidence as such; and although the evidence given by that person who furnished the information to the informant could be contradicted by the evidence of the latter, it could not under Sec. 155 (3) Evidence Act, be contradicted by what the police recorded as the first information—Emp v. Dina Bandhu, 8 C.W.N. 218. Where a person who was assaulted sent a telegram to the Police complaining of the offence, and the Police Sub-Inspector turned up on the spot and recorded a statement from the complainant, held that the telegram was not a first information as it was not reduced to writing on an oral statement nor a writing given to the police signed by the person making the statement. It was the statement subsequently recorded by the Police Sub-Inspector that was the first information—Chidambaram, 55 M.L.J. 231, 29 Cr.L.J. 717 (718).

481. Evidentiary value :—The first information recorded by the police is of considerable value at the trial, because it shows on what materials the investigation commenced and what was the story then told —Emp. v. Kampu Kuki, 11 C.W.N. 554. In every trial it is important that it should be known to the judicial officer what are the facts given out immediately after the occurrence and reported to the police, and the object of the first information is to render him so acquainted. For that purpose the diary in which the first information was recorded as well as the memorandum, if any, made by the police of what the informant said, is admissible in evidence—K. E. v. Bhutnath, 7 C.W.N. 345.

But although the first information is a document of considerable importance which is in practice always and very rightly produced and proved in criminal trials, yet it is not a piece of substantive evidence and can be used only as a previous statement admissible to corroborate or contradict a statement made subsequently in Court—Choghatta v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 121 (Lah.), Autor Singh v. Emp., 17 C.W.N. 1213, 14 Cr.L.J. 642; Chittar v. Emp., 47 All. 280, 23 A.L.J. 14, 26 Cr.L.J. 554, Ibrahim, 8 Lah. 605, 28 Cr.L.J. 983 (985). A report of the commission of an offence made at a thana may be used in a criminal trial to corroborate or cross-examine a witness, though such reports are no evidence of the existence of facts therein mentioned—Q. E. v. Ram Sukh, 1897 A.W.N. 47.

As the first information report can only be used by the prosecution for the purpose of corroborating in the witness-box the person who supplied the information contained in the document, it follows that if the informant himself can only speak from hearsay, the report cannot be used to corroborate such inadmissible evidence of the witness—Sajjan Singh v. Emp., 6 Lah. 437, 26 Cr.L.J. 1489, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 418.

"Officer in charge of a police station":—As to the powers of superior Police officers under this section, see sec. 551. In the absence of the Sub-Inspector or Head constable, a constable left in charge of a Police station cannot accept any complaint or prepare and submit the first information report of any crime reported to him, unless the Local Government shall have given him powers under section 4 (p).

482. "Shall be reduced to writing":—The object of a first information being to show what was the manner in which the occurrence was related when the case was first started, it should always be carefully and accurately recorded—Peary Mohan v. Weston, 16 C.W.N. 145. The first information must be recorded at once, and it is not proper to wait until it is certain that an offence has been committed; See K. E. v. Bhutnath, 7 C.W.N. 345; Emp. v. Kampu Kuki, 11 C.W.N. 554. If the information be given orally, it must be recorded in plain and simple language, as nearly as possible in the informant's own words. The use of technical or legal expressions or high flown language or of lengthy and involved sentences is forbidden—Ben. Pol. Code, p. 372. It is of the utmost importance in recording the first information, that the actual words of the complainant should be used and not an Urdu translation of them. The recorder should take down the complaint as it is made and not merely his own impression of what the complainant meant to say—Reg. and Ord. N.W.P., p. 268.

Power to question the informant:—If the information, whether given orally or presented in writing, be not complete in itself,

Police officer should elicit by interrogation such further information as may be necessary—Beng. Pol. Code, p. 372. See also C. P. Pol. Man., p. 147.

483. "Shall be signed" :—The informant's statement when complete should be read over to him and he must sign it. The report should show that this has been done. In "heinous cases" the statement should be read over to the informant in the presence of one or more respectable and uninterested witnesses, who should also be asked to sign it—Beng. Pol. Code, p. 372.

*Procedure in the case of written informations :—*If the information be tendered in writing, it will be endorsed with the date of presentation, and the person tendering should be required to sign it (if he has not already done so) If the written information relates to facts with which the person tendering it is acquainted, and which he is able and willing to state orally, the mere incident that a written report is presented does not make it unnecessary to take down the information from the reporter's own lips. If the person who brings the written information knows nothing of the facts to which it refers, he should be required to state the circumstances under which he brought it—C P Pol. Man., p. 147.

Diary :—The substance of the information shall be entered in a book, which is called the Station or General Diary, in which are recorded the substance of the information, the names of the complainants and of persons arrested, offences charged, property taken into possession and witnesses examined See sec 44 of the Police Act (V of 1861). This Diary is different from the Special Diary mentioned in sec. 172.

484. Punishment :—As to punishment for giving false information to the Police, see secs 182, 203, 211 I.P.C. Even if the information is not reduced to writing under this section, the person giving the false information may be convicted for preferring a false charge under sec. 211 I.P.C.—Mallappa v Emp, 27 Mad 127.

A police officer refusing to enter in the Diary a report made to him concerning the commission of an offence, and making instead an entry totally different from the information given, is punishable under sec. 177 I.P.C.—Q. E. v. Md Ismail Khan, 20 All. 151.

As to punishment for refusal by the person giving information to sign the statement made by him, see sec. 180 I.P.C.

155. (1) When information is given to an officer in charge of a police-station of the commission, within the limits of such station, of a non-cognizable offence, he shall enter in a book to be kept as aforesaid the substance of such information and refer the informant to the Magistrate.

Information in non-cognizable cases.

(2) No police-officer shall investigate a non-cognizable case without the order of a Magistrate of the first or second class having power to try such case or commit the same for trial, or of a Presidency Magistrate.

(3) Any police-officer receiving such order may exercise the same powers in respect of the investigation (except the power to arrest without warrant) as an officer in charge of a police-station may exercise in a cognizable case.

484A. Scope :—This section applies to the Police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay; see Queen Emp v. Nilmadhab, 15 Cal. 595; Q. E. v. Visram Babaji, 21 Bom. 495.

485. Investigation into non-cognizable cases :—Under this section, a Police-officer cannot investigate a non-cognizable case and cannot submit a report with reference to it, without the order of a Magistrate. If he receives information relating to the commission of a non-cognizable offence, he should enter the substance of it in the diary and refer the informant to a Magistrate. If a Police-officer of his own motion, as where he has seen the alleged offence committed, makes a formal report or complaint in respect of a non-cognizable offence, it will amount to a complaint within the meaning of sec. 4 (h), for there is no provision by which he can in such a case make a Police report—K. E. v. Sada, 26 Bom. 150.

A police officer is not competent to make an investigation into a non-cognizable offence, but the investigation of a non-cognizable offence would not be illegal if it is made during the investigation of a cognizable offence—Emp. v. Shivaswami, 51 Bom. 498, 29 Bom.L.R. 742, 28 Cr.L.J. 939.

A Police-officer who has been ordered by a Magistrate to investigate a non-cognizable offence, cannot legally delegate the duty of making the investigation to a chief constable—Q. E. v. Kalidas, Ratanlal 488.

It is incumbent upon a police-officer, who investigates a non-cognizable case under the orders of a Magistrate, to keep the diary, for which provision is made in sec. 172—Hira Lal v Crown, 1918 P.R. 16, 1918 P.L.R. 63, 19 Cr.L.J. 517.

The power to arrest without warrant is expressly taken away by this section from the Police in the investigation of a non-cognizable offence—Nga Po v Q E, U.B.R (1897-1901) 31.

After the investigation is over, it is the duty of the Police to submit a report to the Magistrate under sec 173. Where information was given to the Police of the commission of a non-cognizable offence, and the Magistrate ordered the Police to investigate the case and report, and the Police officer should elicit by interrogation such further information as may be necessary—Beng. Pol. Code, p. 372. See also C. P. Pol. Man., p. 147.

483. "Shall be signed" :—The informant's statement when complete should be read over to him and he must sign it. The report should show that this has been done. In "heinous cases" the statement should be read over to the informant in the presence of one or more respectable and uninterested witnesses, who should also be asked to sign it—Beng. Pol. Code, p. 372.

*Procedure in the case of written informations :—*If the information be tendered in writing, it will be endorsed with the date of presentation, and the person tendering should be required to sign it (if he has not already done so). If the written information relates to facts with which the person tendering it is acquainted, and which he is able and willing to state orally, the mere incident that a written report is presented does not make it unnecessary to take down the information from the reporter's own lips. If the person who brings the written information knows nothing of the facts to which it refers, he should be required to state the circumstances under which he brought it—C. P. Pol. Man., p. 147.

Diary :—The substance of the information shall be entered in a book, which is called the Station or General Diary, in which are recorded the substance of the information, the names of the complainants and of persons arrested, offences charged, property taken into possession and witnesses examined. See sec 44 of the Police Act (V of 1861). This Diary is different from the Special Diary mentioned in sec. 172.

484. Punishment :—As to punishment for giving false information to the Police, see secs 182, 203, 211 I.P.C. Even if the information is not reduced to writing under this section, the person giving the false information may be convicted for preferring a false charge under sec. 211 I.P.C.—Mallappa v. Emp., 27 Mad. 127.

A police officer refusing to enter in the Diary a report made to him concerning the commission of an offence, and making instead an entry totally different from the information given, is punishable under sec. 177 I.P.C.—Q. E. v. Md. Ismail Khan, 20 All. 151.

As to punishment for refusal by the person giving information to sign the statement made by him, see sec 180 I.P.C.

155. (1) When information is given to an officer in charge of a police-station of the commission, within the limits of such station, of a non-cognizable offence, he shall enter in a book to be kept as aforesaid the substance of such information and refer the informant to the Magistrate.

Information in non-cognizable cases.

(2) No police-officer shall investigate a non-cognizable case without the order of a Magistrate of the first or second class having power to try such case or commit the same for trial, or of a Presidency Magistrate.

(3) Any police-officer receiving such order may exercise the same powers in respect of the investigation (except the power to arrest without warrant) as an officer in charge of a police-station may exercise in a cognizable case.

484A. Scope :—This section applies to the Police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay, see Queen Emp v Nilmadhab, 15 Cal. 595; Q. E v. Visram Babaji, 21 Bom. 495.

485. Investigation into non-cognizable cases :—Under this section, a Police-officer cannot investigate a non-cognizable case and cannot submit a report with reference to it, without the order of a Magistrate. If he receives information relating to the commission of a non-cognizable offence, he should enter the substance of it in the diary and refer the informant to a Magistrate. If a Police-officer of his own motion, as where he has seen the alleged offence committed, makes a formal report or complaint in respect of a non-cognizable offence, it will amount to a complaint within the meaning of sec. 4 (h), for there is no provision by which he can in such a case make a Police report—K. E. v. Sada, 26 Bom 150.

A police officer is not competent to make an investigation into a non-cognizable offence, but the investigation of a non-cognizable offence would not be illegal if it is made during the investigation of a cognizable offence—Emp. v. Shivaswami, 51 Bom. 498, 29 Bom.L.R. 742, 28 Cr.L.J. 939.

A Police-officer who has been ordered by a Magistrate to investigate a non-cognizable offence, cannot legally delegate the duty of making the investigation to a chief constable—Q. E. v. Kalidas, Ratanlal 488.

It is incumbent upon a police-officer, who investigates a non-cognizable case under the orders of a Magistrate, to keep the diary, for which provision is made in sec. 172—Hira Lal v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 16, 1918 P.L.R. 63, 19 Cr.L.J. 517.

The power to arrest without warrant is expressly taken away by this section from the Police in the investigation of a non-cognizable offence—Nga Po v. Q. E, U.B.R. (1897-1901) 31.

After the investigation is over, it is the duty of the Police to submit a report to the Magistrate under sec. 173. Where information was given to the Police of the commission of a non-cognizable offence, and the Magistrate ordered the Police to investigate the case and report, and Police without submitting any report instituted proceedings against the informants under sec. 211 of the I.P.C. for giving false information, and the accused were convicted, it was held that the conviction was illegal; the Police should not be allowed to prosecute without submitting the report of the original case to the Magistrate and without having that case disposed of by the Magistrate—Emp. v. Appa Ragho, 17 Bom.L.R. 69, 16 Cr.L.J. 161.

486. Magistrate's power to direct investigation:—In In re Jankidas, 12 Bom. 161, it is laid down that this section is conversant only with the powers of Police-officers, but it confers no power or authority on Magistrates to direct a local investigation by the Police or to call for a Police report; Magistrates can do so only under sec. 202 after taking cognizance of the case. But this view is quite unintelligible and renders sub-section (2) meaningless. In Emp. v. Vishwanath, 8 Bom.L.R. 589, 4 Cr.L.J. 183, it has been correctly held that a Magistrate has jurisdiction under sub-section (2) of this section to refer a matter to the police for investigation and report, even without a complaint, and without examining the complainant. So also in In re Asadulla, 6 M.L.T. 259, 11 Cr.L.J. 156, the Magistrate was held competent to order an investigation without first taking cognizance of the offence under sec. 190.

156. (1) Any officer in charge of a police-station may, without the order of a Magistrate, investigate any cognizable case which a Court having jurisdiction over the local area within the limits of such station would have power to inquire into or try under the provisions of Chapter XV relating to the place of inquiry or trial.

(2) No proceeding of a police officer in any such case shall at any stage be called in question on the ground that the case was one which such officer was not empowered under this section to investigate.

(3) Any Magistrate empowered under Section 190 may order such an investigation as above mentioned.

487. Scope:—The reference to Chap. XV in this section does not limit the application of this section to offences only, but the investigation may extend to cases within the scope of section 55—Emp. v. Bhajan, 1893 A.W.N. 124.

This section only empowers the Magistrate to direct investigation, and a Court of Session has no power to do so—K. E. v. All, 1910 P.R. 11.

If there is a delay in the investigation by the Police, it is the duty of the committing Magistrate, and failing him, of the Sessions Judge, to inquire fully into the circumstances of the delay to consider its bearing on the prosecution story—Q. E. v. Majesty, 2 Bom.L.R. 1092.

Subsection (3) of this section does not empower a Magistrate, after he has taken cognizance of a case, to order a police investigation under sec. 156 and to direct the police to submit a report. Sec. 156 (3) only empowers the Magistrate to order a police inquiry in a case where the Magistrate does not himself issue process at once. When a Magistrate takes cognizance of a complaint under sec. 200, and refers the case to the police for inquiry under sec. 202, it is for him to pass the necessary order on the police report either under sec. 203 or under sec. 204. He cannot direct the police, if they find the case to be established, to submit a charge-sheet. In other words, the Magistrate, after he had acted under Ch. XVI cannot proceed under Ch. XIV—Isaf Nasya v. Emp., 54 Cal 303, 28 Cr.L.J 577.

157. (1) If, from information received or otherwise, an officer in charge of a police-station has reason to suspect the commission of an offence which he is empowered under Section 156 to investigate, he shall forthwith send a report of the same to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of such offence upon a police-report, and shall proceed in person, or shall depute one of his subordinate officers not being below such rank as the Local Government may by general or special order prescribe in this behalf to proceed to the spot, to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case and, if necessary, to take measures for the discovery and arrest of the offender :

Provided as follows :—

any such offence is given against any person by name and the case is not of a serious nature, the officer in charge of a police-station need not proceed in person or depute a subordinate officer to make an investigation on the spot ;

(b) if it appear to the officer in charge of a police-station that there is no sufficient ground for entering on an investigation, he shall not investigate the case.

(2) In each of the cases mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of the proviso to sub-section (1), the officer in charge of the police-station shall state in his said report his reasons for not fully complying with the requirements of that sub-section, and in the case mentioned in clause (b) such officer shall also forthwith notify to the informant, if any, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Local Government, the fact that he will not investigate the case or cause it to be investigated.

Change :—The italicised words have been added by sec. 32 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

"Not below suchbehalf" :—This provision did not exist in the Bill of 1914, but the Select Committee which sat on the Bill in 1916 added the words "not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector." The amendment, however, did not meet with the approval of the Joint Committee and they made the present amendment. "In view of the general objection to the amendment which confines investigations to officers not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector, we have made an amendment which enables Local Governments to specify a lower rank. We recognise that police work in some provinces might be severely hampered by the above restriction"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

"And if necessary to take measures" :—These words have been substituted for the words "and to take such measures as may be necessary." Under the old law the taking of measures necessary for the discovery and arrest of the offender was incumbent on the police officer; under the present law, the police officer has an option to take measures for the arrest of the offender 'if necessary' "This amendment makes it clear that the Police have a discretion in arresting a person accused in a cognizable case"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

"And in the caseinvestigated" :—"This amendment provides that if the Police do not investigate a complaint, the complainant shall be informed to that effect"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). The words "in such manner as may be prescribed by the Local Government" have been added by the Select Committee of 1916.

Secs. 154 and 157 :—Whereas every information covered by the former section (154) must be reduced to writing as provided in that section, it is only that information which raises a reasonable suspicion of the commission of a cognizable offence within the jurisdiction of the Police officer to whom it is given, which compels action under the latter section (157) although of course a report would be sent to the Magistrate—Punjab Cir., Chap. XLV., page 171.

488. Investigation of offence outside jurisdiction :—There is nothing in this section to prevent the police of one police-station from conducting an investigation within the jurisdiction of another police circle. Therefore where the police Inspector of T circle during the investigation of a burglary sent some constables to the house of the accused situated in another police circle and the constables locked the house in question and kept guard of the house, it was held that the Inspector of T circle did not act ultra vires—Natha Singh v. Crown, 1915 P.R. 12, 16 Cr.L.J. 551.

489. Report:—The report required by this section is the first report of the offence which an officer in charge of a Police station is required to make to a Magistrate as soon as he receives information of an offence and before entering on its investigation. It is to be made direct to the Magistrate in order that he may have an early information and be in a position to act, if necessary, under Sec. 159—Bombay Police Manual, page 91.

A report under this section is necessary for taking proceedings under sec 159—Mouli v. Naurangi, 4 C.W.N. 351. The Police report under this section would give the Magistrate jurisdiction to enter upon an inquiry. But he may determine as he thinks fit, either to take no further steps or to take cognizance of the offence under Sec 190 (b) or to proceed under Sec. 203—Anonymous, 2 Weir 119.

Failure to send a report as required by this section is a serious breach of duty which may lead to failure of justice. Such conduct on the part of the police would lead to a grave suspicion that the police were collecting false evidence—Crown v. Balogh Khan, 4 S.L.R. 38, 11 Cr.L.J. 498.

Report, whether a complaint—A report submitted in the usual way under secs. 157 and 173 is not intended to be and could not be a complaint within the meaning of Sec. 195—Mokham v. K E., 6 O.C. 1.

Report, whether public document—Right of accused to get copies before trial:—The report made by a Police officer in compliance with this section is not a public document within the meaning of sec. 74 of the Evidence Act, and consequently an accused person is not entitled before trial to have a copy of such report—Arumugam v. Karuppayi, 20 Mad. 189.

158. (1) Every report sent to a Magistrate under S. 157 shall, if the Local Government so directs, be submitted through such superior officer of police as the Local Government, by general or special order, appoints in that behalf.

(2) Such superior officer may give such instructions to the officer in charge of the Police station as he thinks fit, and shall, after recording such instructions on such report, transmit the same without delay to the Magistrate.

159. Such Magistrate, on receiving such report,

Power to hold investigation or preliminary inquiry.

may direct an investigation or, if he thinks fit, at once proceed, or depute any Magistrate subordinate to him to proceed, to hold a preliminary inquiry into, or otherwise to dispose of, the case in manner provided in this Code.

490. Magistrate's power to hold investigation or inquiry :—An inquiry can be made under this section only on a police report submitted within the terms of section 157, i.e. on a preliminary report made before the completion of the police investigation or inquiry; but if the report is submitted after investigation, the Magistrate is not empowered to act under this section. Thus, where information was laid before the police charging a person with criminal trespass into a house with intent to have improper intercourse with a female therein, and the police reported that they did not believe that the object was to commit the offence stated but that they were not disinclined to believe the charge of trespass, it was held that as the report was made after investigation into the offence, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to act under this section—Mauli v. Naurangi, 4 C.W.N. 351.

The inquiry which a Magistrate is competent to hold under this section is a preliminary inquiry. Therefore where a report of the commission of an offence has been made by the police after full inquiry into the truth of the information given them as to the commission of the offence, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make any further inquiry into the same offence—In re Kandhiya Lal, 1899 A.W.N. 87.

An inquiry under this section can be made only on the submission of a police report, if, however, a complaint is made to the Magistrate, he is bound to proceed under sec. 200—Loke Nath v. Sanyasi, 30 Cal. 923.

Where a case comes before a first class Magistrate under the provisions of secs. 157 and 159, he can depute a Sub-Deputy Magistrate to hold an investigation or a preliminary inquiry. The latter can also, under sec. 164 (1), record a statement of a witness made before him in the course of the police investigation—Harendra v. Emp., 40 C.L.J. 313, 26 Cr.L.J. 307.

The expression "preliminary inquiry" in this section appears to be used in a different sense from its use in section 288, where it refers to inquiries under ch. XVIII, prior to commitment to the sessions, which are held after the police investigation is complete, after the chargesheet is drawn up, and after the accused is forwarded under custody under sec. 170 to the Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the case—Pedda v. K. E., 45 Mad. 230 (233).

491. When Magistrate cannot try the case :—Where a Magistrate took an active part in the capture of parties charged with the commission of an offence, and then tried them himself on that charge, it was held that he was bound to state to the accused, so far as he could, what were the facts he himself observed and to which he himself could bear testimony; and the prisoner in such a situation had a right to cross-examine the Magistrate whose evidence should be recorded and form part of the record in the case. The proper course, however, for the

Magistrate to have taken in such a case would have been to decline to try the case, and to ask that it should be taken up by some other Magistrate—In re Hurro Chunder, 20 W.R. 76

160. Any police-officer making an investigation under this Chapter may, by order to require attendance in writing, require the attendance of witnesses. before himself of any person being within the limits of his own or any adjoining station, who, from the information given or otherwise, appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case; and such person shall attend as so required.

492. Order in writing :—The order to attend under this section must be in writing. In the absence of an order in writing, a person required orally to appear before a police officer as a witness cannot be convicted under section 174 I.P.C. for disobedience of such order—In re Veerasamy, 1 Weir 86. So also, where a Police Inspector sent a constable to bring two persons for inquiring of them about an offence, and the order was not in writing, the persons need not accompany the constable. If the persons accompanied the constable, they could not be said to have been in lawful custody of the constable, and any person inducing those persons not to accompany the constable could not be held guilty of rescuing them from lawful custody—Q. E. v. Purshotam, Ratanlal 850.

493. "Require the attendance" :—An officer in charge of a police station may require the attendance of persons whose evidence is necessary, and the persons summoned are bound to obey the order; but in no case can the police compel a witness by force to attend before him—Q. v. Tarinee, 7 W.R. 3; Q. E. v. Purshotam, Ratanlal 850. See also Bengal Police Manual, 2nd Ed., p. 378

Detention :—A police officer has no power to arrest or to detain even for a single moment any person whose evidence is required for the purpose of investigation—Q. v. Tarinee, 7 W.R. 3

Security bond to appear :—There is no provision in this Code authorising a police-officer to take security-bond for the production of any person before the police, and the Magistrate has therefore no power to alter it and impose fresh conditions under it—In re Chandra Sekhar, 11 Cal 77. But see Crown v. Kanshi Ram, 1913 P.R. 22, 14 Cr.L.J. 631, cited under secs 497 and 499.

494. Who may be required to attend :—Accused :—This section applies only to the case of persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case, i.e., witnesses or possible witnesses only, an order under this section cannot be made requiring the attendance of an accused person, with a view to his answering the charge made against him. The intention of the legislature seems to have been only to provide a facility for obtaining evidence and not for procuring the attendance of the accused, who may be arrested at any time if necessary

—Q. E. v. Saminada, 7 Mad. 274, Emp. v. Ratan, 4 Bom. L.R. 644; Emp. v. Nga Tha, 4 Rang. 72, 27 Cr.L.J. 881; Q. E. v. Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295. Therefore where the accused person refused to obey an order under this section, and was therefore taken into custody by the police, it was held that the Police was guilty of wrongful confinement, although the police was justified in arresting without warrant upon the original charge made against the accused—Lakshimigadu, 2 Weir 121.

Woman —It is an unusual course for the Police to take a number of women away from their village to the police-station on the pretext that they wished to examine them. The examination should be properly conducted at the women's own houses—Haladhar, 9 C.W.N. 199.

"Shall attend" :—If a person fails to attend before a police officer making an investigation under this chapter, he is liable to be prosecuted for an offence under section 174 I.P.C.—Q. E. v. Jogendra, 24 Cal. 320.

495. Magistrate's power to interfere or issue warrant :
—A Magistrate has no power to issue a warrant for the arrest and production of a person in order that such person may give evidence before the Police during an investigation under this chapter—Q. E. v. Jogendra, 24 Cal. 320. He cannot interfere with the exercise of discretion given to a police officer to summon witnesses, though he might offer his suggestion or advise the Police officer as to a particular course of action—In re Sankatchand, Ratanlal 133.

161. (1) Any police-officer making an investigation under this Chapter or any police officer not below such rank as the local Government may, by general or special order, prescribe in this behalf, acting on the requisition of such officer, may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case.

(2) Such person shall be bound to answer all questions relating to such case put to him by such officer, other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge or to a penalty or forfeiture.

Change :—The italicised words have been added by sec. 33 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). This amendment is similar to that made in section 157 (1).

Scope —The provisions of this section should not be utilised in any but "heinous cases." Heinous cases include cases triable exclusively by a Court of Session and those cases in which special diaries are submitted through the Magistrate either to the Commissioner only or both to the Commissioner and to the Deputy Inspector-General or Inspector-General of Police—Beng. Pol. Code, p. 432.

496. Examination of accused before arrest :—When a police officer has evidence before him, upon which he is bound to arrest a person, he should not, preliminary to his arrest, obtain a statement from that person professedly under this section and reduce it to writing—Q. E. v. Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295.

497. Statements of witnesses .—*Not privileged under sec. 172 :—*Where a Police officer making an investigation under this section took statements from the persons who were afterwards called as witnesses, the accused person would be entitled to call for and inspect such documents and cross-examine the witnesses thereon, as such statements would not amount to a portion of the diary referred to in sec 172—Bikas v. Q. E., 16 Cal 610; Shera Sha v. Q. E., 20 Cal. 642, Emp. v. Rudra Singh, 1896 A.W.N 193 Contra—Q. E. v. Mannu, 19 All 390, Q. E. v. Nasiruddin, 16 All 207. But under the amended section 162, these statements, whether included in the diary or not, can be used only under the circumstances mentioned in sec. 162.

*Statements not the property of Police .—*There is no prohibition against any person present at the time when depositions are being taken or confessions made, to take down in writing what either a prisoner or a witness says—In re Kristo Lal Nag, 10 Cal. 256.

498. Recording of statements :—Statements made by a witness to a police officer under this section during an investigation may be reduced to writing. But it is not obligatory on the Police officer to reduce to writing any statement made to him. He may do so only if he likes—Reg v. Uttamchand, 11 B.H.C.R. 120. The words "and may reduce into writing any statement made by the person so examined" which occurred in the Code of 1882 at the end of the first para have been omitted from the Code in 1898.

It was held that the statements of witnesses should not be recorded in the special diary mentioned in sec. 172—Dadan Gazi v. Emp., 33 Cal. 1023 But it does not now matter whether these statements are recorded in the special diary or not, their use being controlled solely by sec. 162 (Woodroffe, p. 178). Cf. the words "whether in a Police diary or otherwise" occurring in sec. 162

It is not necessary that the statements of witnesses recorded under this section should be in the form of alternative question and answer. It is enough if the statement so recorded is substantially an answer to the questions put to the witnesses—Q. E. v. Bhagwantia, 15 All. 11; Q. E. v. Abdur Rahaman, 1896 P R 7.

The statements need not be signed by the witnesses. It is not illegal for a police officer obtaining the signature of witnesses to a statement under this section to authenticate his record of such statement, but there is nothing to compel them to sign it—Q. E. v. Bhagwantia, 15 All 11.

499. Privilege of witnesses :—A statement made by a witness in answer to a question put to him by a police officer in the course of an investigation under this section is privileged, and cannot be made the foundation of a charge of defamation—Q. E. v. Govinda, 16 Mad. 235; nor can he be made liable in an action for damages for any words spoken during such investigation—Methuram v. Jagannath, 28 Cal. 794

*Witness not bound to speak the truth :—*Under the Code of 1882 a witness was bound to answer truly all questions put to him under this section, but the effect of the omission of the word 'truly' from the Code of 1898 has been to do away with the legal obligation to speak the truth—Nga Pyn v. Emp. 10 Bur L.T. 259, 18 Cr.L.J. 844. Therefore witnesses cannot be prosecuted for giving false evidence under this section—Q. E. v. Sankaralinga, 23 Mad. 544, Nga Po v. K. E., 9 Bur.L.T. 203, 18 Cr L J 98 The Select Committee (1898) observed :—"It seems to us unfair that a man should be liable to be convicted of giving false evidence on the strength or by the aid of a statement supposed to have been given to a Police officer, but which is not given on oath, which he has not signed, and which he has had no opportunity of verifying; such statement may be hurriedly taken down as rough notes; the police officer is not trained in taking evidence, and the notes are often fairred out by another officer. They bear no resemblance to depositions and ought to have no weight as such attached to them. The provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the Penal Code appear to us to afford a sufficient safeguard against false information "

This change in the law supersedes the following cases decided under the Code of 1882 and earlier Codes—10 Cal. 405; 8 C.L.R. 236; 20 W.R. 41, 8 Bom. 216, 11 Bom. 659, 15 All. 11; 1896 P.R. 7.

Since a person making a statement under this section cannot be said to "give information" within the meaning of sec. 182 I. P. C., he cannot be prosecuted under that section for giving false information if the statement made by him be false—Mangu v. Crown, 1914 P.L.R. 227, 15 Cr.L.J. 650, nor under section 211 I. P. C.—Chinna v. Emp., 31 Mad. 506.

500. Refusal to answer questions :—Under this section, a person answering questions put by a police officer is not bound to answer truly. Therefore a refusal to answer such questions is not punishable under sec. 179 I. P. C.—In re Savani, 1 Weir 111; Q. E. v. Sankarlinga, 23 Mad. 544; Gul Hasan v. K. E., 1903 P.R. 27; Crown v. Mahmud, 6 S.L.R. 277, 14 Cr L.J. 302.

*Incriminating questions :—*Under subsection (2), a witness is not bound to answer any question put to him by a police officer, the answer to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge—Q. E. v. Annia, Ratanlal 518; Q. E. v. Kalidas, Ratanlal 488. A person examined under this section by the police with respect to an offence with which he may himself be charged and convicted is not bound to speak the truth, and in such a case a conviction for giving false evidence would be illegal—Q. E. v. Usaphkhan, Ratanlal 619.

162. (1) No statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall, if taken down in writing, be signed by the person making it; nor shall such writing be used as evidence: Provided that, when any witness is called for the prosecution whose statement has been taken down in writing as aforesaid, the Court shall, on the request of the accused, refer to such writing and may then, if the Court thinks it expedient in the interests of justice, direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof: and such statement may be used to impeach the credit of such witness in the manner provided by the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

162. (1) No statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall, if reduced into writing, be signed by the person making it; nor shall any such statement or any record thereof, whether in a police diary or otherwise, or any part of such statement or record, be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided) at an inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made:

Provided that, when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid, the Court shall, on the request of the accused, refer to such writing and * * * direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, in order that any part of such statement, if duly proved, may be used to contradict such witness in the manner provided by section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. When any part of such statement is so used, any was provided that no statement made by a witness if reduced to writing should be used as evidence against the accused, thus making it clear that the provision in question was intended for the benefit of the accused.

"The new section did not lay down in terms that the accused might not use the written record of a witness' statement for the purpose of his defence, and indeed it rather suggested that he was entitled to do so. Accordingly cases occurred in which the accused demanded to see the statements which the police had taken down, in order that he might use, for the purpose of his defence, anything that appeared therein to his advantage, and the Calcutta High Court ruled that he was entitled to do so. The Allahabad High Court, on the other hand, held that the writings in effect formed part of the police-diary and were therefore privileged from inspection, and this was the position which stood to be dealt with when the Amending Act of 1893 was under consideration. There was evidently a good deal to be said on both sides as will appear from the report of the Select Committee (1893) on the Bill which is quoted in extenso below :—

'The question involved (namely, whether the accused is entitled to inspect statements taken down by the police under section 161) is full of difficulty. In the first place, it is essential in the interests of public justice that the sources of police information should be kept secret. If the names of informers or detectives and the nature of their information be disclosed, the detection of crime would be seriously crippled. In the second place, it is unfair to a witness that his evidence should be discredited on the strength of an alleged statement made to a policeman, which he may have had no opportunity of verifying or correcting. Such statements must necessarily be often taken down hurriedly and may be incorrectly copied out. They are not taken down as depositions, or with regard to the rules of evidence, but merely to aid the police in the course of their investigation. But in the third place, it may be most important for the accused to show that a witness called for the prosecution is telling a story substantially different from that which he told when first questioned by the police. We have endeavoured to reconcile these conflicting interests by reverting to the language of the Codes of 1861 and 1872, and adding a proviso compelling the Court, on the application of the accused, to refer to such statements, and then empowering it in its discretion to allow him to have copies of them. We then provide for the mode in which these statements are to be used. It is clear that a witness ought not to have his credit impeached on the strength of a statement alleged to have been made to a policeman, unless and until it is shown that he has made that statement.'

"The result was not altogether a happy one. It will be noticed that the section deals mainly with the writing and enacts that it shall not be used in evidence, with a proviso that the Court may in its discretion direct the accused to be furnished with a copy of it—presumably only in order that the accused may know that there is something in the writing which may help his defence—and goes on to say that the statement (i.e., what the witness said to the Police officer) may be used in the ordinary course to impeach the credit of the witness, obviously implying that for this purpose it must be duly proved.

"It seems clear that all that the amendment of 1893 intended to effect was to make it clear that the accused had no right to call for or see the record of any statements taken down by the police under section 161, unless the Court thought that in the interests of justice he should be allowed to do so. It did not purport to deal with, and has left untouched, the further question whether or not a statement made by a witness under section 161, as apart from the written record of the statement, might be used by the prosecution for the purpose of corroborating one of their witnesses under section 157 of the Evidence Act, and this is at all events one of the principal difficulties with which we have to deal now.

"The re-draft of the section which we propose will make it clear that the statements taken under section 161 (and not merely the written records of such statements) are not to be used in any way or for any purposes except as allowed by the proviso. Having regard to the fact that the making of such statements is compulsory under section 161, and to the way in which, and the circumstances under which, they are usually recorded, we do not think that they are of any corroborative value where the witness merely repeats the same statement in Court, and that they ought not therefore to be allowed to be used for the purpose of corroboration under section 157 of the Evidence Act. If the really material fact to the prosecution is that a statement was made to the police on a particular date or at a particular place, this fact will of course still be provable in the ordinary course, and it will be open to the Courts or to a jury to make any proper deduction from this fact and the action which was taken on it. The amendment will also, we think, make it clear that if the accused wishes to rely on anything in the previous statement of a witness to the police, of which he has been allowed by the Court to have a copy, he will have to prove it in the ordinary way. If the witness admits this in cross-examination, it will of course be sufficient; if he denies the contradiction and the police officer who took it down is called by the prosecution, the previous statement of the witness on the point may be proved by him; if he is not called by the prosecution, the Court would no doubt itself in most cases call him, or if the accused is calling evidence in support of his defence, it may be worth his while to call the Police officer himself. But it is clear that unless the previous contradictory statement is proved in some way in accordance with law, it ought not to depreciate the witness's statement on oath. It will be observed that under our amendment, if any part of the previous statement of the witness is used for the purpose of cross-examination by the accused, any other part of it may be used by the prosecution within the proper limits of re-examination. This is, we think, the only way in which the previous statement ought to be allowed to be used by the prosecution"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

500A. Scope of section :—The ban of sec. 162 applies only to statements made to a police-officer making an investigation under Chap. XIV. If the investigation contemplated by that Chapter is finished, then this section cannot be invoked to prohibit any statement made to a police-officer at some time subsequent to the investigation. If, on the other hand, statements made to police-officers when preparing a map or holding an identification parade are statements made in the course of an investigation under Ch. XIV, then they fall within the scope of the prohibition embodied in sec. 162—Emp v. Nga Than, 4 Rang. 72, 5 Bur. L.J. 30, 27 Cr.L.J. 881.

The first information report (sec. 154) against an accused is not a statement within the contemplation of sec. 162, in as much as it is not made in the course of an investigation. Again, section 154 requires it to be signed, whereas statements under sec. 162 are forbidden to be signed, even when recorded in writing—Azimaddy v. Emp., 54 Cal. 237, 44 C.L.J. 253, 28 Cr.L.J. 99 (101). Where a person who was assaulted sent a telegram to the Police, and the Police Inspector went to the place and recorded a statement from the complainant, held that this statement did not fall under sec. 162 as it was not made to a police officer in the course of investigation. The Inspector went to the place not to make investigation and collect evidence but to see whether his suspicion that an offence had been committed was justified—Chidambaram, 53 M.L.J. 231, 29 Cr.L.J. 717 (718).

Section 162 is clear enough to exclude from evidence any statement made by any person, and therefore a statement by the investigating officer that he examined witnesses for the defence in the course of the investigation is not admissible in evidence—Bhagurath v. Emp., 30 C.W.N. 142, 27 Cr.L.J. 222.

Statements made to a police officer in the course of an investigation under sec. 174, even though it is conducted in the presence of two or more respectable men are none-the-less statements made to a police officer "in the course of an investigation" under this Chapter, within the meaning of sec. 162—In re Maruthamuthu Kudamban, 50 Mad 750, 52 M.L.J. 601, 28 Cr.L.J. 463 (464).

This section may be thus explained. The first paragraph provides that no statement made to the police in the course of an investigation shall be admissible at the inquiry or trial. In consequence, no witness may be asked what he said to the Police during the investigation, nor may any Police-officer be asked what a witness said to him during the investigation, nor may any bystander be questioned as to what he heard another person say to the Police-officer during the investigation. The second paragraph (proviso) loosens the rigidity of the first paragraph to a certain extent. In consequence of this paragraph, when a witness for the prosecution is being examined, if an accused has reason to believe that the statement which the witness is making in Court differs from the statement which he made to the Police, then the accused or his advocate may ask the Court to refer to the record of any statement made by the witness to the police, and if it be found that there is any variation between the two statements the defence are entitled to a copy of the record of the statement made to the Police. That copy must then be proved, and the witness may cross-examined on that statement under sec 145 Evidence Act, and his attention must be drawn to the particular points in which his statement in Court differs from the record of his statement to the Police—Bana Singh v. Emp., 6 Rang. 137, 29 Cr.L.J. 701 (702).

501. Statement.—A statement made by a witness to the Police that he knew nothing about the occurrence, or a statement that he did not say anything to the police about the occurrence is not a 'statement' within the meaning of sec. 162, otherwise the absence of a statement would be equivalent to a statement—Aseruddin v. Emp., 53 Cal. 980, 28 Cr.L.J. 273 (274). (But it is doubtful if such a statement would not be a statement under sec. 161—Ibid.).

The 'statement' contemplated by sec 162 is not a complete statement recording every word uttered by the witness. It is immaterial whether the statement as recorded is the actual record of the words used by the witness. It is sufficient, even if the statement is recorded in the form of a memorandum of what the witness had said to the police-officer; such a statement is available for the purpose of contradicting the witness—Mafzaddy v. Emp., 31 C.W.N 940, 28 Cr.L.J. 805 (806).

A statement can be made by other means than by words. Therefore, the gesture of the accused (which is to all intents and purposes a statement) in pointing out to the Police where the revolver was, is inadmissible in evidence—Emp v Nga Kyng, 3 Rang. 656, 27 Cr.L.J. 658.

Oral statement.—The language of the old section was: "nor shall such writing be used as evidence" And so a distinction was drawn between an oral statement and a written statement, and it was laid down that only written statements were excluded from evidence, but the admission of oral statements was not forbidden—Emp. v. Nilakanta, 35 Mad. 247, 13 Cr.L.J. 305, Muthu Kumarasami v. Emp., 35 Mad. 397, 13 Cr.L.J. 352. The amended section uses the words "nor shall any such statement or any record thereof be used" That is, the language of the present section is much wider than that of the old section, and excludes any statement (oral statement as well as written statement) from being used for any purpose. And the expression "if reduced into writing" is intended only to qualify the verb "shall be signed" and is not a clause descriptive of the word "statement"—Thimmappa v. Timappa, 51 Mad. 967 (F.B.), 29 Cr.L.J. 1098 (1101), overruling In re Venkatasubbiah, 48 Mad. 640. This is also the view of the Rangoon High Court—Emp. v. Nga Tha, 4 Rang. 72 (F.B.), 27 Cr.L.J. 881, 5 Bur.L.J. 30. See also Bahadur Singh v. Emp., 7 Lah. 264, 27 Cr.L.J. 803 (805); Azumaddy v. Emp., 54 Cal 237, 29 Cr.L.J. 99 (102).

Statement of approver.—This section covers a statement made by an approver to the police before he was tendered pardon. But even if it does not, such a statement can be used to corroborate or contradict the approver as a previous statement of a witness, under the ordinary provisions of the Evidence Act—Hazara v. Emp, 9 Lah. 389, 29 Cr.L.J. 348 (349).

Statement must not be signed :—Statements of witnesses taken in the course of police investigation must not be signed; even if they are signed contrary to the provisions of this section, they do not thereby become statements taken under sec 154 and do not become admissible as first information. The police by violating the provisions of section 162 and thus committing an illegality cannot make admissible statements which are inadmissible under the law—In re Narayana Menon, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 106, 25 Cr.L.J. 401.

501A. Statement of accused :—This section refers only to statements of persons examined as witnesses by the police in the course of investigation and not to statements made by accused persons as such—Rannun v. K. E., 7 Lah 84, 27 Cr.L.J. 709; Hussain v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 74, 27 Cr.L.J. 456, Ganpati v. Emp., 6 N.L.R. 180, 12 Cr.L.J. 60; Newaz Ali, 33 C.W.N. 257, 30 Cr.L.J. 916, Azimaddy v. Emp., 54 Cal. 237, 28 Cr.L.J. 99. A statement made by an accused person to the police which is not in the nature of a confession, is not inadmissible in evidence—Sikander v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 36, 20 Cr.L.J. 83; Jogwa Dhanup v. Emp., 5 Pat. 63, 27 Cr.L.J. 484; Emp. v. Nga Tha, 4 Rang 72, 27 Cr.L.J. 881; Sheobalak, 29 Cr.L.J. 400, 11 N.L.J. 7. The Sind Court holds that the words 'statement of any person' refer to the statement of a person examined as a witness in the course of police investigation and do not include the statement of an accused person in respect of 'whom such investigation is being held—Adho v. Emp., 19 S.L.R. 6, 26 Cr.L.J. 897, Umer Daraz v. Emp., 19 S.L.R. 142, 26 Cr.L.J. 778.

502. Use of statement :—See the first proviso Under sec. 162, as recently amended by the Amendment Act of 1923, statements made by any person to a Police-officer in the course of an investigation under Ch XIV shall not be used for any purpose except to contradict a witness at the request of the accused in the manner provided in the first proviso of the section—Gahur Howladar v. Emp., 30 C.W.N. 503, 27 Cr.L.J. 641.

Under the old section the police officer who recorded the statement could use it to refresh his memory—Q. E. v. Mannu, 19 All. 390; Q. E. v. Zakir Husain, 21 All. 159, Q. E. v. Setaram, 11 Bom. 657; Emp. v. Narayan Raghunath, 32 Bom. 111 (per Batty J.); Imp. v. Jijibhai, 22 Bom. 596; Roghuni v. Emp., 9 Cal. 455, Q. E. v. Wardhan, Ratanlal 503; {Contra—Dadan Gazi v. Emp., 33 Cal. 1023} Under the present law, such use of the statement is not permitted.

A statement made by a witness to the police can be used only by the accused, and that also only to contradict the witness, it cannot be used by the prosecution to corroborate the statements of its own witnesses before the Court, such a procedure is distinctly opposed to the provision of the law in this behalf—Emp. v. Jijibhai, 22 Bom. 596, K. E. v. Kumaramuthu, 25 M.L.T. 379, 20 Cr.L.J. 354, Jhari Gope v. Emp., 8 Pat. 279, 30 Cr.L.J. 858; Bhulai v. K. E., 13 O.C. 7, 11 Cr.L.J. 117. Section 157 of the Evidence Act lays down that in order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact is admissible in evidence; but this general rule is controlled by the special provisions of sec. 162 Cr P.Code. Under this section not only is the record of the statement of a witness taken under sec. 161 excluded from evidence, but also the proof of such statement by oral evidence for the purpose of corroborating the testimony of the witness for the prosecution—Rakha v. Crown, 6 Lah. 171, 26 P.L.R. 304, 27 Cr.L.J. 438 (439).

The only way a witness can be contradicted by statements made to the police under the provisions of this section is to prove his written statement and put it to the witness under sec. 145 Evidence Act to permit him to explain the contradictions if any. Statements made to the police cannot be used at a trial in any other way—Emp. v. Ibrahim, 8 Lah. 605, 28 Cr.L.J. 983 (986).

This section does not prevent the prosecution, after a witness has made a statement, from asking him simply whether he made that statement to the police, or when a witness has made a statement in his evidence, from asking the Sub-Inspector whether in fact the witness had made that statement to him. In doing this, there is no use of the statement recorded by the police during their investigation; the witnesses or the sub-Inspector are merely asked as to a certain fact—Gulji Mian v. Emp., 4 Pat. 204, A I.R. 1925 Pat 450, 27 Cr.L.J. 524.

Where a Magistrate used the statements made before the chief constable during the police inquiry, without conforming to the provisions of this section, and without affording the accused an opportunity of cross-examining the constable, and considered those statements as corroborative of the evidence given by the witnesses at the trial, and convicted those whose names were mentioned both in Court and in those statements, and acquitted those whose names were not mentioned therein, held that such use of the statements was grossly irregular and the whole trial was bad, and that the irregularity was not cured by sec. 537—Emp. v. Babaji, 9 Bom L R 368, 5 Cr L J. 353

It is also illegal for a Magistrate to use as evidence against the accused the statements made by prosecution witnesses before the police by comparing them with their depositions, and, as a result of that comparison, to convict him—Emp v Laxman, 9 Bom.L.R. 895; Emp. v. Narayan, 32 Bom. 111; Bahawala v. Emp., 1886 P.R. 17.

The statement cannot be used to make up for the deficiency in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses—Q. E. v. Haribai, Ratanlal 935; Isab Mandal v. Q. E., 28 Cal. 348.

This section does not prohibit the use of statements made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under Ch. XIV, in proceedings under sec. 476, in cases where the alleged offence which is under consideration in the proceedings under sec. 476 was not under investigation at the time when the statement was made. But a statement made to the police in an investigation under Ch XIV in respect of one alleged offence cannot be used at an inquiry or trial in respect of a different offence which happened to be separately under investigation at the time when the statement was made—U Hlin Gyaw v. Emp, 5 Rang-26, 29 Cr.L.J. 433

Whether in a Police Diary or otherwise :—These words have been added by the Amendment Act of 1923. The object of making this amendment is that the police should no longer claim any privilege in respect of any statement on the ground that it is a statement recorded under sec. 172. There is now no distinction between a statement recorded under sec. 162 and a statement recorded under sec. 172, if a police officer purports to record a statement under the latter section. Whether a statement is recorded under sec. 162 or 172, an accused person is entitled to a copy of it for cross-examination—Mafizaddi v Emp, 31 C.W.N. 940, 28 Cr.L.J. 805. Statements made to the investigating Police officer, even though they are part of the Investigating officer's diary, can be used for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses who made the statements, in cross-examination—Jadunandan v. Emp., 2 Luck. 605, 28 Cr.L.J. 802 (804). The accused is not entitled to see the Police diary, but when the statement of a prosecution witness has been reduced into writing in a Police diary, the accused is entitled to ask the Court to refer to it and to be entitled to a copy of it—Sulaiman v. Emp., 6 Rang 672, 30 Cr L.J. 538.

502A. First Proviso—Scope .—The proviso deals with one case and one case only, the case of witnesses called for the prosecution, whose statements have been taken down in writing as aforesaid. And the only concession it makes to the accused is to allow him, upon his request, and subject to the Court's discretion (under the second proviso) to have access to a copy of the recorded statement, and thereupon to use it for one purpose and one purpose only, viz., to break down the evidence of the prosecution witnesses already standing against him. On the face of it, the proviso does not cover the case of a witness for the defence, whose statements may have been recorded by a policeman, nor allows the prosecution to impeach the credit of such a witness by examining him upon any written statement he may have made to the police—Emp. v. Narayan, 32 Bom. 111, Q. E. v. Madho, 15 All. 25; Nga Yon v. Emp., U.B.R. (1918) 84, 19 Cr L J 726; K. E. v. Vithu, 26 Bom.L.R. 965, 26 Cr L.J. 223, A I.R. 1924 Bom. 510. According to the recently amended provisions of section 162, statements of witnesses recorded by the investigating officer can only be used to assist the accused in particular by showing that a witness who in Court deposes to certain facts has in such a statement at an earlier stage given an account or made statements which are contradictory to the testimony which he gives in Court. They cannot be used in cross-examining the witnesses not merely to show contradictions but at large for the purposes of showing that the statements did not corroborate or assist the story as put forward in the first information report—Badri Chowdhuri v. K. E., 6 P.L.T. 620, 27 Cr.L.J. 362.

The first proviso to this section makes an exception in favour of the accused, but it is an exception most jealously circumscribed under the proviso itself "Any part of such statement" which has been reduced to writing may in certain limited circumstances be used to contradict the witnesses who made it. The limitations are strict: (1) only the statement of a prosecution witness can be used, and (2) only if it has been reduced to writing; (3) only a part of the statement recorded can be used; (4) such part must be duly proved: (5) it must be contradiction of the evidence of the witness in Court; (6) it must be used as provided in section 145 of the Evidence Act, that is, it can be used only after the attention of the witness has been drawn to it or to those parts of it which it is intended to use for the purpose of contradiction, and there are others. Such a statement which does not contradict the testimony of the witness cannot be proved in any circumstances, and it is not permissible to use the recorded statement as a whole to show that the witness did not say something to the investigating officer—Badri Chowdhury v. K. E., supra (per Macpherson J). But in a later case, the same High Court has taken a different view. "To construe section 162 as meaning that, while, any part of the statement of a witness to the Police may be used to contradict him, yet if the contradiction consists in this that a statement made at the trial was not made in any part of the statement to the Police, such a contradiction cannot be proved, seems to be an artificial construction. I am unable to adopt it and, with respect, I must dissent from that view"—per Ross J in Ilaf Khan v. Emp., 5 Pat. 346, 7 P. L. T. 364, 27 Cr. L. J. 796 (dissenting from Badri Chowdhury v. Emp., cited above).

The words 'if duly proved' in the proviso clearly show that the record of the statement cannot be admitted in evidence straightway, but that the officer before whom the statement was made should ordinarily be examined as to any alleged statement or omitted statement that is relied upon by the accused for the purpose of contradicting the witness—K. E. v. Vithu, 26 Bom. L. R. 965, A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 510, 26 Cr. L. J. 223.

There is no presumption as to the genuineness of the statements of witnesses entered in the police diaries, and unless they are duly proved, the evidence given in Court cannot be contradicted by them—Labh Singh v. Emp., 5 Lah. 24, 26 Cr. L. J. 1153 (1154).

'On the request of the accused'—The procedure prescribed by sec. 162 must be strictly followed. A court is not justified in admitting a statement made by a person to a police officer, unless the accused or his pleader asks the court to refer to such record. Sec. 162 is in this point explicit—Nga Po v. Emp., 4 Rang. 356, 27 Cr. L. J. 1371.

503. Right of accused to get copy of statement:—Under the first proviso as it stood before the present amendment, the words 'may if the Court thinks it expedient' (see the old section cited parallel) show that the accused was not entitled, as a matter of right, to obtain access to a copy of the written statement. His right to obtain such copy was left to the discretion of the Court—Emp. v. Narayan, 32 Bom. 111; Q. E. v. Nasiruddin, 16 All. 207. The accused could get a copy only if the Court thought it expedient in the interests of justice to furnish him with such copy—Dadan Gazi v. Emp., 33 Cal. 1023; In re Thiruvengadu, 26 M. L. J. 182, 15 Cr. L. J. 289.

Under the present law, the words "shall direct" would seem to give the accused a right to obtain the copies. See Venkatasubbiah v. Emp., 19 Mad. 640, 48 M. L. J. 195, 26 Cr. L. J. 721. (But such right has again been curtailed by the second proviso). Under the amended section 162.

it is obligatory on the part of a Judge to give the accused copies of the statements recorded under sec. 161, subject only to the exclusion of irrelevant matters which the public interest requires should not be disclosed—Madari Sikdar v Emp., 54 Cal 307, 28 Cr L J. 582. The language of this section is mandatory, and a Court has no power to refuse the application for copies. This section does not authorise the Court to look into the statement in the Police-diaries for the purpose of finding out whether it is contradictory to the statement made in Court or not, before granting the application. The accused has the right to get the copies and examine the statement for himself to find out whether there are contradictions, even though the court has formed an opinion that there are no contradictions—Jhari Gope v Emp, 8 Pat. 279, 30 Cr.L J. 858.

The application to get a copy of the recorded statement must be made at the time when the prosecution witness, whom it is desired to test by reference to his recorded statements, appears on the box. But if, after all the prosecution witnesses have been examined, the defence applies to the Court to summon the Inspector of Police to appear with his diary, the application may be refused. But even in such a case, the Court ought to send and peruse the statements recorded in the diary, and if on such perusal it thinks that it would be expedient in the ends of justice (and that otherwise a gross miscarriage of justice may result) to allow the accused to use such statements, it would be open to the Court to furnish the accused with copies of the statements even at such a late stage and recall the witnesses and permit cross-examination—Dadan Gazi v. Emp, 33 Cal. 1023.

The stage in an inquiry or trial at which an accused person is entitled to ask for a copy of a statement made by a prosecution witness to the police in the course of the investigation is the stage when the witness is called for the prosecution; that is, when he is under cross-examination and has already made a statement which the accused wishes to contradict by proof of his former statements to the police. Consequently the accused is not entitled to the copies before cross-examination is opened at all—in re Peramasami, 22 L.W. 784, 27 Cr.L.J. 100; Emp. v Shaikh Usman, 52 Bom 195, 29 Bom L.R. 1581, 29 Cr L J. 221 (223). It is only at the time of cross-examination and when the cross-examination has laid the foundation for the suggestion that the evidence given by the witness in Court is contradicted by his statement recorded under sec. 161, that the accused is entitled to ask the Judge to refer to the writing and grant him copies. Sec. 162 does not impose a duty upon the Judge of granting copies of the statement recorded under sec. 161 before the cross-examination has been opened—Madari Sikdar v. Emp., 54 Cal. 307, 28 Cr.L J. 582. Two points in particular stand out in the proviso. In the first place, the question of furnishing to the accused a copy of the statement does not at all arise until the witness who made the statement is called for the prosecution at the inquiry or trial; and secondly, the Court is not competent to direct that the accused be furnished with a copy of the statement which contains something which constitutes a contradiction of a statement by the witness in his deposition at such inquiry or trial. These two circumstances must co-exist before an accused is entitled under this proviso to such copy—Saadat Mian v. Emp., 6 Pat 329, 28 Cr.L.J. 709 (714). The Patna High Court, however, has held in another case that the accused is entitled to a copy as soon as the witness is produced in Court, and there is nothing in this section which requires that the cross-examination must be opened before the accused is entitled to a copy—Ram Gulam v. Emp., 7 Pat 205, 29 Cr.L.J. 297 (dissenting from 22 L.W. 784, 54 Cal. 307, 6 Pat. 329). The case of Madari Sdkar (supra) has been doubted in a later Calcutta case, Babarali v. Emp., 56 Cal. 840, 30 Cr.L.J. 580 (582).

This section entitles the accused to a copy of the statement made by a witness to the police in order that it might be used for contradicting the statement made by the witness in Court. But where the witness was discharged without being examined or cross-examined, so that he made no statement in Court, the accused is not entitled to get copy of that witness' statement to the police—Wajid Ali v. Emp., 7 Pat. 153, 30 Cr.L.J. 273 (275).

Where the accused was furnished with materially inaccurate copies of the statements of a prosecution witness recorded in the police diary, and on discovering the mistake he applied to have that witness recalled for the purpose of re-cross-examination in order generally to impeach his credit, but the Court refused the application, held that the accused was entitled to have the witness recalled, and the Court committed an error of law in refusing the application—Sadananda v. Ramasray, 21 Cr.L.J. 289 (Pat.).

If the accused have not availed themselves of the opportunity of asking for the copies of the statement during the committing Magistrate's inquiry, they have no further right under this section than to ask the Judge at the time of trial for such copies—Babarali v. Emp., 56 Cal. 840, 30 Cr.L.J. 580 (582).

504. Second proviso:—This proviso did not occur in the Bills of 1914 and 1921 nor in the Reports of the Committees, but was added during the Debate in the Assembly. See the Legislative Assembly Debates, February 14, 1923, pages 2224-2243

The provisions of sec. 162 are imperative that the Court shall, on the request of the accused, direct that the accused be furnished with a copy of the statement of the witnesses before the Police. But a refusal to grant copies can only be made if the requirements of the second proviso are satisfied; namely, if the Court is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the inquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice, and is inexpedient in the public interests, the Court shall record such opinion before excluding such parts from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused. The application for copies should not be rejected on the mere ground that it might help the defence or that possibly

there was no contradiction—Chedi Prosad v. Emp., 8 P.L.T. 613, 28 Cr.L.J. 597.

505. Subsection (2):—Dying declarations:—The dying statement of a deceased must be taken in the presence of the accused person; if not so taken, the writing cannot be admitted to prove the statement made. The statement may however be proved in the ordinary way by a person who heard it and the writing may be used for the purpose of refreshing the witnesses' memory—Emp v Samiruddin, 8 Cal 211; K. E v Daulat, 6 C.W.N. 921, Abdul Jahl v Emp., 1886 P.R. 13.

It is advisable, where a dying declaration is elicited by questions, to set out the questions and answers, and if possible it should be taken in the presence of the accused who should then be allowed to cross-examine if he likes—K. E v Madura, 6 C.W.N. 72.

Where the document containing the dying declaration was not signed by the deponent, and the Police-officer was not bound by law to take it down in writing, held that the proper method of proving the oral statement of a dying man was by the oral evidence of any person who heard it, that person being allowed to refresh his memory by reference to the notes he made or read at the time—Bhagwan v. Emp., 10 N.L.R. 19, 15 Cr L.J. 243

163. (1) No police-officer or other person in authority shall offer or make, or cause to be offered or made, any such inducement, threat or promise as is mentioned in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, Section 24.

No inducement to be offered.

(2) But no police-officer or other person shall prevent, by any caution or otherwise, any person from making in the course of any investigation under this Chapter any statement which he may be disposed to make of his own free will.

506. Person in authority:—This term is not defined in the Act. But it must not be used in any restricted sense, so as to mean only a person who has control over the prosecution of the accused. The test would seem to be, whether the person had authority to interfere with the matter, and any concern or interest in it would be sufficient to give him that authority—Reg v. Navroji, 9 B.H.C.R. 358.

The following are persons in authority:—Honorary Magistrate—Q. v. Ramdhun, 1 W.R. 24; a Magistrate or Sessions Judge recording a confession—Emp. v. Asghar, 2 All. 260; Q. E. v. Uzeer, 10 Cal. 715; Village Magistrate—Thandraya v. Emp., 26 Mad. 38; Police Patel—Emp. v. Rama, 3 Bom. 12; Emp. v. Fakira, 40 Bom. 220; Panchayitdar—Emp. v. Ganesh, 50 Cal. 127; Nazir v. Emp., 9 C.W.N. 474; Emp. v. Jesha

by the witness in his deposition at such inquiry or trial. These two circumstances must co-exist before an accused is entitled under this proviso to such copy—Saadat Alian v. Emp., 6 Pat. 329, 28 Cr.L.J. 709 (714). The Patna High Court, however, has held in another case that the accused is entitled to a copy as soon as the witness is produced in Court, and there is nothing in this section which requires that the cross-examination must be opened before the accused is entitled to a copy—Ram Gulam v. Emp., 7 Pat. 205, 29 Cr.L.J. 297 (dissenting from 22 L.W. 784, 54 Cal. 307, 6 Pat. 329). The case of Madari Sikdar (supra) has been doubted in a later Calcutta case, Babarali v. Emp., 56 Cal. 840, 30 Cr.L.J. 580 (582).

This section entitles the accused to a copy of the statement made by a witness to the police in order that it might be used for contradicting the statement made by the witness in Court. But where the witness was discharged without being examined or cross-examined, so that he made no statement in Court, the accused is not entitled to get copy of that witness' statement to the police—Wajid Ali v. Emp., 7 Pat. 153, 30 Cr.L.J. 273 (275).

Where the accused was furnished with materially inaccurate copies of the statements of a prosecution witness recorded in the police diary, and on discovering the mistake he applied to have that witness recalled for the purpose of re-cross-examination in order generally to impeach his credit, but the Court refused the application, held that the accused was entitled to have the witness recalled, and the Court committed an error of law in refusing the application—Sadananda v. Ramasray, 21 Cr.L.J. 289 (Pat.).

If the accused have not availed themselves of the opportunity of asking for the copies of the statement during the committing Magistrate's inquiry, they have no further right under this section than to ask the Judge at the time of trial for such copies—Babarali v. Emp., 56 Cal. 840, 30 Cr.L.J. 580 (582).

504. Second proviso:—This proviso did not occur in the Bills of 1914 and 1921 nor in the Reports of the Committees, but was added during the Debate in the Assembly. See the Legislative Assembly Debates, February 14, 1923, pages 2224-2243.

The provisions of sec. 162 are imperative that the Court shall, on the request of the accused, direct that the accused be furnished with a copy of the statement of the witnesses before the Police. But a refusal to grant copies can only be made if the requirements of the second proviso are satisfied; namely, if the Court is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the inquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice, and is inexpedient in the public interests, the Court shall record such opinion before excluding such parts from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused. The application for copies should not be rejected on the mere ground that it might help the defence or that possibly

164. (1) Any Presidency Magistrate, any Magistrate of the first class and any Magistrate of the 2nd class specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government may, if he is not a police officer, record any statement or confession made to him in the course of an investigation under this Chapter or at any time afterwards before the commencement of the inquiry or trial.

(2) Such statements shall be recorded in such of the manners hereinafter prescribed for recording evidence as is, in his opinion, best fitted for the circumstances of the case. Such confessions shall be recorded and signed in the manner provided in Section 364, and such statements or confessions shall then be forwarded to the Magistrate by whom the case is to be inquired into or tried.

(3) A Magistrate shall, before recording any such confession, explain to the person making it that he is not bound to make a confession and that if he does so it may be used as evidence against him, and no Magistrate shall record any such confession unless, upon questioning the person making it, he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily; and, when he records any he shall make a memorandum at the foot of such record to the following effect:—

"I have explained to (name) that he is not bound to make a confession and that, if he does so, any confession he may make may be used as evidence against him and I believe that this confession was voluntarily made. It was taken in my presence and hearing and was read over to the person making it and admitted by him to be correct, and it contains a full and true account of the statement made by him.

*(Signed) A. B.
Magistrate."*

Explanation.—It is not necessary that the Magistrate receiving and recording a confession or statement should be a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case.

Change.—The italicised words in sub-section (1) have been substituted for "Every Magistrate," and the italicised words in sub-section (3) have been added, by section 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1928). The reasons have been thus stated:

"We think that confessions and statements should not be recorded under the section by third class Magistrates at all, or by second class Magistrates unless specially empowered. We consider that a statutory obligation should be laid on a Magistrate acting under the section to warn an accused person about to make a confession that the same may be used against him, and we think that the certificate prescribed by sub-section (3) should record the fact that the warning had been given."—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

508. Object of section :—The object of police proceedings is to collect information as a preliminary step to the production of evidence in judicial proceedings against an accused person. For this purpose, any person may be examined and any statement may be reduced to writing by the Police. But no statement made to the Police can be used in evidence against the accused. To these provisions the present section seems to be supplementary. The Magistrate may prepare, what the Police may not, a record of any statement, be it a confession or not, which is made to him before judicial proceedings commence—Lalu v. Emp., 1893 P.R. 2.

This section does not enable a police-officer, who has obtained a statement incriminating the accused, made by some person, to send such person to a Magistrate practically under custody, to have him examined and his statement recorded before the judicial inquiry or trial, for fixing him down to that statement in the subsequent judicial proceedings—Q. E. v. Jadub. 27 Cal. 295.

509. Scope of section :—This section under the old law did not apply to the Police in the town of Calcutta. Therefore it did not apply to a statement made by a person in custody to a Magistrate in Calcutta in the course of an investigation made by the Police in the town of Calcutta—Q. E. v. Nilmadhab, 15 Cal. 595. Nor did this section apply to the town of Bombay—Q. E. v. Visram Babaji, 21 Bom. 495.

The present section has been made applicable to confessions recorded in Presidency towns, by reason of the reference to Presidency Magistrates at the beginning of the section. But it should be noted that even in spite of this amendment, the application of this section to Presidency towns is extremely limited. Sub-section (2) (a) of sec 1 of this Code expressly lays down that nothing contained in this Code, in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, shall apply to the police in the town of Calcutta (or Bombay). The only sections in Chap. XIV which are applicable to the Police of Calcutta (or Bombay) are sec 155 and sec. 156 (3); and sec 164 so far as Presidency towns are concerned applies only to confessions recorded under those two sections. That is, section 164 applies to confessions made in the course of investigations held by the Calcutta Police only where the Police investigation is either an investigation in a non-cognizable case held under the orders of a Presidency Magistrate as contemplated by sec 155, or is an investigation into a cognizable case held under the orders of a Presidency Magistrate as contemplated by section 156 (3)—Emp. v. Panch Kari, 52 Cal. 67, 29 C.W.N. 300, 26 Cr L.J. 782. The Patna High Court, however, does not accept this narrow interpretation, and holds that a Presidency Magistrate is empowered to record a confession in Calcutta during a police-investigation there in any case. The Amendment has been made in 1923 to allow a Presidency Magistrate to record a confession in Calcutta in the course of a police-investigation; otherwise the amendment is altogether meaningless. Section 1 bars the application of the Code to the Police, it does not bar the application of the Code to a Magistrate not being a Police-officer—Nilmadhab v. Emp., 5 Pat. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 957. Where an investigation is held outside Calcutta, and a Presidency Magistrate records a confession in Calcutta, this section undoubtedly applies—Nilmadhab v. Emp., (supra).

This section applies to a confession made in the course of an investigation. Where an accused is arrested in Calcutta in pursuance of a request made by the Police at Burdwan who evidently were holding the investigation with regard to the matter under the provisions of Ch XIV, the arrest and production of the accused before a Magistrate at Calcutta for the recording of confession must be taken to have been an act done in the process of investigation that was being held, and the Magistrate is bound to comply with the provisions of sec. 164 in recording the confession—Emp. v. Garib Hari, 30 C.W.N. 454, 27 Cr.L.J. 621.

Native State —A confession made to a Magistrate of a Native State who duly recorded and certified the same according to the provisions of this Code would be admissible in evidence in a British Court—Badan v. K. E., 1909 P.R. 2; Q. E. v. Nagla, 22 Bom 235; Q. E. v. S

Singh, 12 All. 595. In Bhola v. K. E., 1907 P.R. 8 it was held, however, that a confession so recorded by a Magistrate in a Native State was not entitled to the same weight as a confession recorded by a Magistrate in British India in strict compliance with the terms of this Code, and Courts should hesitate to convict the accused upon such confession standing alone. See also In re Chinna Venkadu, 2 Weir 125, where it is held that a confession made before a Foreign Court, even if it is certified according to the provisions of this section, cannot be used in evidence, unless it is sworn to like confessions made to private individuals. See also Emp. v. Dhanka, 16 Bom L.R. 261, 15 Cr.L.J. 433, where it is held that the Magistrate of a Native State recording a confession must be examined to prove the confession, before it can be used as evidence.

A Magistrate having jurisdiction in a district in British India cannot record a confession in a place in a Native State in connection with an offence committed in his district—Mahar Singh v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 355, 22 Cr.L.J. 567.

510. Who can record statement or confession:—

The power to record statements and confessions under this section is given to Magistrates not being Police officers. Magistrates who are also police officers (e.g. patels in Bombay) are not competent to record statements or confessions—Q. E. v. Bhima, 17 Bom. 485. So also, Police officers having magisterial powers have no power to record statements—Q. v. Hurribole, 1 Cal 207.

Where a Tahsildar, having powers of a Magistrate and being invested by the Local Government with power to take cognizance of offences upon complaint or police-report, was conducting an inquiry on complaint received, held that he must be deemed to have been doing so as a Magistrate and not as a police-officer—K. E. v. Gulabu, 35 All 260, 11 A.L.J. 286.

A third class Magistrate has no power to record a statement under sec. 164. A statement so recorded by him is not evidence in a stage of judicial proceeding, and if it is contradicted afterwards before a Magistrate having jurisdiction and holding a preliminary inquiry, it will not furnish an alternative charge of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding—Emp. v. Shettappa, 14 Bom.L.R. 753, 13 Cr.L.J. 709.

An Honorary Magistrate, who is a member of an independent Bench with third class powers, cannot record a confession or statement—Emp. v. Nuri Sheikh, 29 Cal 483. The ruling in Ghinna v. Emp., 3 P.L.J. 291, 19 Cr.L.J. 135, in which it was held that an Honorary Magistrate of the third class not empowered to sit singly had nevertheless power to record a confession, is rendered obsolete by the present amendment.

Where a case comes before a first class Magistrate under secs 157 and 159, he can depute a Sub-Deputy Magistrate to hold an investigation or a preliminary inquiry. The latter can, under the provisions of this section, record a statement of a witness made before him in the course of the police investigation, and therefore this is admissible as a statement made in the course of an investigation—Harendra v. Emp., 40 C L.J. 313, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 161, 26 Cr.L.J. 307

A Magistrate who directs the police investigation is not incompetent to record a statement or confession under this section. On the other hand, it is the duty of the Magistrate who directs a police investigation or holds a preliminary inquiry under this Code to record statements under sec. 164; it is his duty to see that the accused confesses voluntarily, and to record his confessions truly—Emp v. Maisri, 5 S L.R. 31, 12 Cr.L.J. 489.

A confession or statement under this section may be recorded by a Magistrate who afterwards conducts the inquiry or trial—Barindra v. Emp., 37 Cal. 467. A Magistrate is not debarred from recording the confession of an accused person under this section merely because it may be afterwards his duty to hold a preliminary inquiry—Anon., Ratanlal 121. A confession freely made to a Magistrate and recorded under this section is not inadmissible if the Magistrate thought proper, or if it so happened that he was the only Magistrate, to take the case and commit it to the Sessions Court—Emp v Lal Sheikh, 3 C W N 387. The decision in Emp. v. Anuntram, 5 Cal. 954 is no longer good law

511. "May record" :—The Magistrate may record the statement or confession, it is not obligatory on the Magistrate to do so. There is nothing in law to support the proposition that in order to make an oral extrajudicial confession admissible in evidence it must be reduced to writing. The confession may be proved by the evidence of the Magistrate—Feroz v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 11; Emp. v. Maruti, 21 Bom.L.R. 1065, 21 Cr.L.J. 65, (per Hayward J.; Shah J. contra); Tangudupalli v. Emp., 45 Mad 230, 42 M L.J. 37, 23 Cr.L.J. 680. Contra—Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan, 49 Cal. 167 where it is held that a confession not recorded as provided by this section cannot be proved by the evidence of the Magistrate

512. Statement or Confession :—The word 'statement' means the statement of a witness and does not mean the statement of an accused person. This section does not provide for recording any statement of an accused person other than a confession; the reason is that the section relates to a stage of the case, viz. the Police-investigation stage, at which statements of the accused which are other than voluntary confessions and which are to be elicited by his examination are not intended to be obtained from him—Q. E. v. Bhairab, 2 C.W.N. 102. In other words, this section provides for the recording of two classes of things, viz. (1) the statement of a person who appears before the Magistrate as a witness, and (2) the confession of a person accused of an offence—Emp. v. Malka, 2 Bom. 643; Crown v. Andal, 5 S L.R. 174, 13 Cr.L.J. 33.

Contra—The Punjab Chief Court has held that the distinction that is made in this section is between statements that are confessions and statements that are not; and not between persons by whom statements of either character are made, and this distinction is made merely to prescribe different modes of recording (sub-sec. 2); and that it is nowhere or implied in this section that the statement of an accused person cannot be recorded unless it is a confession—Lalu v. Emp., 1893 P.R. 2. The Calcutta High Court also has recently laid down that the word 'statement' is not limited to a statement made by a witness; a statement made by an accused and not amounting to a confession is a statement within the meaning of this section—Abdul Rahim v. Emp., 41 C.L.J. 474, 26 Cr.L.J. 1279. See also Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan, 49 Cal. 167 where it is laid down that under this section there can be no distinction between a statement made by an accused and a confession made by him, and that a statement made by an accused that he had committed a murder must be recorded as provided by this section. The Patna High Court is also of opinion that this section contemplates a statement made by an accused person before a Magistrate which is not a confession but is wholly of an exculpatory nature—Golam Md. v. Emp., 4 Pat. 327, 6 P.L.T. 598, 26 Cr.L.J. 878.

513. At what stage can statement and confession be recorded.—A statement or confession must be recorded under this section in the course of an investigation under this chapter or at any time afterwards, but before the commencement of the inquiry or trial. Therefore, where the Magistrate recorded confessions of the accused before he took cognizance of the case and before the examination of the prosecution witness began, it was held that the confessions were duly recorded under this section—Barindra v. Emp., 37 Cal. 467. This section refers to a confession or statement recorded during an inquiry before the Police and not during an inquiry by the Magistrate. Therefore, where during an inquiry under section 202, the Magistrate recorded a statement made by a person against whom the complaint was filed, it was held that the statement could not be regarded as having been recorded under this section, because the statement was made during an inquiry by the Magistrate and not during an inquiry before the Police. Such a statement was not admissible against the accused without further proof—Sat Narain v. Emp., 32 Cal. 1085 (1089).

514. Procedure:—Under this section, in the course of the investigation, the Magistrate is entitled to record any voluntary statement made by the accused person, but he is not entitled to examine the accused person in respect of the facts of the case. That power is given by sec. 342—Gya Singh v. Mohamed, 5 C.W.N. 864.

A Magistrate should not, before recording a confession, look into a police report to see what the accused had stated to the Police—Jogibhai v. Emp., 13 C.W.N. 861, 10 Cr.L.J. 125.

The Magistrate should not hold out any inducement. Where after the prisoner had made a long confessional statement, he was told by the Magistrate that if he stated all that he knew, he would then be examined as an approver and witness, it was held that the conduct of the Magistrate was highly improper—In re Kosa Govindan, 2 Weir 137. See also Emp. v. Tara, 45 All. 633 cited under sec. 163. But unless this inducement was actually held out to the accused by the Magistrate or by some person in authority, the mere fact that the accused was under an impression that if he confessed he would be made an approver would not make the confession bad. The mere thought in the mind of the accused would not affect the admissibility of the confession—Nilmadhab v. Emp., 5 Pat. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 957.

The Magistrate must not put any question to the accused tending to incriminate him—In re Rajappa, 2 Weir 130.

A statement cannot be said to be properly recorded under this section if a police officer is present at the time and is allowed to put questions to the accused—Indarsain v. Emp., 21 Cr.L.J. 418 (Lah.); Jogibhai v. Emp., 13 C.W.N. 861. "It is not proper to allow the Police officer who brought the prisoner to be present while the confession is being recorded by a Muharrir and to suggest questions to be put to the confessing prisoner"—Cal. G. R. & C. O. page 8; Emp. v. Ramasand, 1895 A.W.N. 221.

There is no warrant or justification for the intervention of a third party (e.g. police officer or another Magistrate) as the questioner, directly or indirectly, of a confessing prisoner—Jogibhai v. Emperor, 13 C.W.N. 861, 10 Cr.L.J. 125.

Confessions should be recorded in open Court. A Magistrate acts improperly in recording the confession at a late hour in the night (viz. at 11-30 p.m.) after the accused had been subjected to interrogation by a police officer for 3 or 4 hours, and had broken down under the continued questioning—K. E. v. Pramatha, 30 C.L.J. 503, 21 Cr.L.J. 260. But of course the fact of the confession being recorded late at night is by itself not a sufficient proof against its voluntariness—Abdul Salim v. Emp., 49 Cal. 573 (598). The Patna High Court holds that the Code does not contain any provision that the confession must be recorded in open Court; and therefore a Magistrate does not act illegally if he brings the accused to his house and records the confession there—Nilmadhab v. Emp., 5 Pat. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 957.

If the confession is a lengthy one, and cannot be finished in one day, the Magistrate is competent to record the confession piecemeal from day to day. But in such a case the Magistrate should not, during the period of confession, return the accused to the custody of the Police at night—Nilmadhab v. Emp., 5 Pat. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 957.

Power to administer oath.—The person making a statement under this section is a witness within the meaning of sec. 5 of the Oaths Act, and therefore one to whom oath might be administered; and a charge of perjury can be framed under sec. 193 I. P. C. against the person making a false statement on oath under this section—Q. E. v. Alagu, 16 Mad. 421; Emp. v. Tasadduk, 1908 A.W.N. 73; Suppa Tevan v. Emp., 29 Mad. 89. Contra—Hari Charan v. Q. E., 27 Cal. 455; Lala v. Emp., 1893 P.R. 2 (per Plowden J.).

Mode of examination of accused.—The proper mode for a Magistrate to examine an accused person under this section is to ask him if he wishes to make any statement or confession. If he says no, the Magistrate should not proceed to interrogate him, but if such person wishes to make any statement, the Magistrate should write down the statement or confession and ask the accused such questions as may be necessary to ascertain clearly what his meaning is—Empress v. Baji, 5 C.P.L.R. 13; Kesho Singh v. K. E., 20 O.C. 136, 18 Cr.L.J. 742

It is not permissible to question the accused closely and at great length for the purpose of extracting statements to be afterwards used as evidence—Kesho Singh v. K. E., 20 O.C. 136, 18 Cr.L.J. 742.

515. Retracted confession :—A retracted confession can be acted upon if it is voluntarily made and is corroborated by other evidence. When the voluntary confession of a prisoner is corroborated by the confession of another prisoner, and the two confessions are strongly corroborated by the mass of evidence which has been recorded in the case, the confession of the former prisoner, even though subsequently retracted, can be made the basis of his conviction—Nilmadhab v. Emp., 5 Pat. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 957.

A retracted confession cannot be given any weight unless it is well corroborated by reliable evidence—Ramai v. K. E., 3 Pat. 872, A.I.R. 1925 Pat 191, 26 Cr.L.J. 314. But in some other cases it has been laid down that a retracted confession, if proved to have been voluntarily made, can be considered along with the other evidence of the case. 'No binding rule can be laid down such as that a retracted confession must be supported by independent reliable evidence corroborating it in material particulars. The Court should treat the value of a retracted confession as a matter of prudence rather than of law—Q. E. v. Gharya, 19 Bom. 728; Q. E. v. Gangia, 23 Bom. 316; Q. E. v. Raman, 21 Mad. 83; Jawan v. Crown, 1914 P.R. 30; Emp. v. Indra Chandra, 2 C.W.N. 637; Manna Lal v. K. E., 27 O.C. 40, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 1, 25 Cr.L.J. 49. It is not illegal to base a conviction upon the uncorroborated confession of an accused person (subsequently retracted) provided that the Court is satisfied that the confession was voluntary and is true in fact—Jawan v. Crown, 1914 P.R. 30, 15 Cr.L.J. 626. Experience and common sense show that in the absence of corroboration in material particulars it is not safe to convict on a confession, unless, from the peculiar circumstances on which it was made and judging from the reasons of the retraction, there remains a high degree of certainty that the confession, notwithstanding its having been resiled from, is genuine—Jawan v. Crown, 1914 P.R. 30; Q. E. v. Mahabir, 18 All. 78. If a Judge believes that a confession though subsequently withdrawn contains a true account of the prisoner's crime, the Judge is bound to act, so far as the prisoner is concerned, on the confession which he believed to be true—Emp. v. Kehri, 29 All. 434; Q. E. v. Maiku, 20 All. 133. The weight to be given to such a confession depends upon the circumstances under which it was generally given and the circumstances under which it was retracted, including the reasons given by the prisoner for his retraction—Sajjad Husain v. Emp., 1903 P.R. 16; Q. E. v. Raman, 21 Mad. 83; Manna Lal v. K. E., 27 O.C. 40, 25 Cr.L.J. 49. Thus, where a confession was made under police coercion and subsequently withdrawn, it is certainly inadmissible in evidence—Motijan v Crown 6 C.W.N. 350; Sinari v Emp. 2 A.L.J. 100, 2 Cr.L.J. 59.

Where a confession is retracted, it is the duty of the Court that is called to act upon it, especially in a case of murder, to enquire into all the material points and surrounding circumstances and satisfy itself that the confession cannot but be true K E v Durgaya, 3 Bom.L.R. 441.

Where in the course of the investigation of an offence, a witness makes a statement of a confessional nature which is recorded by the Magistrate under this section as a statement and not as a confession, and subsequently in the course of the preliminary inquiry before the committing Magistrate he retracts that statement, it is admissible in evidence against that witness on a prosecution for perjury—In re Madhola Ramamurthi 30 Mad 977

516. Sub-section (2):—Mode of recording :—The confession is to be recorded in the manner provided by sec 364, i.e., in the form of questions and answers. The Magistrate is bound to record every question that he asks. It is of great importance that this provision of the law should be obeyed, otherwise it may be impossible to tell how far a witness voluntarily deposes to a matter, and how far it was extracted from him by questioning even in the nature of cross-examination. If the confession is not recorded in this manner, the record is defective—Hasan Ali v K E, 23 A.L.J. 710, 20 Cr.L.J. 1209, A.I.R. 1020 All. 22. Where a confession is recorded not in the form of questions and answers, as required by section 364, but in a narrative form, the defect is not a fatal one, and the confession is admissible in evidence, provided that the accused is not prejudiced by the irregularity. Section 533 would cure the defect—Fekoo v. Empress, 14 Cal. 539; Emp. v. Munahl, 8 Cal. 610; Khudiram v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55; Emp. v. Deo Dat, 45 All. 100, 20 A.L.J. 915, Emp. v. Anta, 1892 A.W.N. 60

Where, however, the confession was not recorded in the manner prescribed in section 364, but there was only a gist of the confession in a narrative form, and where it moreover appeared that the confession was not voluntary, it was held to be inadmissible in evidence—Emp. v. Garib Hari, 30 C.W.N. 454, 27 Cr.L.J. 621; Nga San v. Emp., 11 Cr.L.J. 41 (Bur.).

*Language of record :—*See Note 1038 under sec. 364.

Signature —The object of requiring the signature of an accused person to the record of his confession is probably to furnish a strong test as to whether the confession was voluntary and free, and to afford him a locus penitentiae, before the completion of the record, of indicating that the confession was not voluntary or was made under improper influence—Reg v Bai Ratan, 10 B.H.C.R. 166. The signature is taken as a voucher of the authenticity of the statement and not as an admission of its correctness—Khudiram v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55.

The confession of the accused if not signed by the accused or attested by his mark, is not admissible in evidence—Reg v. Bai Ratan, 10 B.H.

C R. 166; but under sec. 533, parol evidence may be given of the terms of the confession, and those terms, if and when proved, may be admitted and used as evidence in the case, if the defect (non-signature) is such that it has not affected the merits of the defence—Q. E. v. Raghu, 23 Bom. 221. So also, if the accused subsequently signed the confession without objection as soon as the non-signature was noticed, the defect would be cured by sec. 533 by the evidence of the Magistrate as to the authenticity of the statement—Khudiram v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55.

If the accused is able to write, his thumb-impression will not be sufficient—Sadananda v. Emp. 32 Cal 550.

The Magistrate must sign the record of confession as well as the memorandum—Emp v. Lal Shaikh, 3 C.W.N. 387.

See also Note 1040 under sec. 364

517. Sub-section (3)—Confession must be voluntary :

—A confession, in order to be admissible in evidence, must be made voluntarily and without pressure—K. E. v. Gulab, 35 All. 260, 11 A.L.J. 286, In re Pisari, 2 Weir 137. No statement should be recorded under this section unless the person making it is a free agent and voluntarily agrees to have his statement taken down—Hira Lal v. Emp., 1918 P.R. 16, 19 Cr.L.J. 517. A Magistrate acting under this section must question the accused in order to be affirmatively satisfied of the voluntariness of the confession, and in case of doubt he ought not to record it or give the certificate—Q. E. v. Basvanta, 25 Bom. 168; Neki v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 116 (Lah). The Magistrate should ascertain whether the confessional statement is made voluntarily, at the beginning of the statement and not at the end—In re Rayappa 2 Weir 136. A Magistrate should not proceed to record a confession, unless he first has reason to believe that the person is about to make it voluntarily, and he should therefore begin by enquiring into the point whether the confession is voluntarily made. Where a Magistrate recorded a confession of an accused without first satisfying himself as to its being voluntary, and then at the end of it put one comprehensive question as to the nature of the confession, it was held that he had not complied with the provisions of this section—Q. E. v. Appa, 1 Bom.L.R. 357, Kandhai v. Emp., 1 O.L.J. 407, 15 Cr.L.J. 633. In Pulin Tanti v. Emp., 40 Cal 873 (876) it was held that the fact that the Magistrate instead of asking the accused about the voluntary nature of the confession at the commencement of the confessional statement asked him at the end, was merely a defect of form which did not alter the character of the confession.

"It is desirable that Magistrates should act with deliberation in examining persons brought before them for the purpose of making confession and should, as far as possible, satisfy themselves that the confession is voluntary—and this not merely from the declaration of the accused, but from an attentive observation of his demeanour."—Cal. G. R. & C. O. page 8.

When a confession made by the accused is alleged by him to have been obtained by ill-treatment or other improper inducements, the Court should carefully inquire into the truth of such allegations—Reg v Koshi 8 B H C R 126; and it will not be presumed that it was so induced—Reg v Bhattani 11 B H C R 137. and if the Court sees any ground of exclusion mentioned in sec. 24 Evidence Act (inducement, threat, promise), it may reject the confession, though at the time of record it appeared to be a voluntary confession—Umar v Emp 1487 P.R. 51, Emp v Dewan Khar 4 P L T 146. But the Court cannot, merely on surmise or conjecture, hold that the confession was produced by inducement, threat or promise. There must be in the confession itself or in the evidence or in the surrounding circumstances something to justify the inference that the confession was really not a voluntary one—Emp. v. Dewan Khar 4 P L T 146, 21 Cr L J 497, A I R 1923 Pat. 13.

When it appeared that an accused person was illegally confined in solitary confinement for about a fortnight, that the police had access to him, that pressure was brought to bear upon him through his father, mother and brother, that the desirability of a confession was pressed upon him by the District Magistrate as a means of saving himself and his relatives from threatened pains and penalties, that his father was illegally detained in hajat for a long time without any charge that he then made a confession which was recorded without legal precautions and in the immediate presence of a police officer who put incriminating questions to the accused and helped in amplifying the confession, held that such confession was not voluntary and was not admissible in evidence—Jogivan v Emp 13 C W N 861, 10 Cr L J 125.

Mere subsequent retraction of a confession duly recorded and certified is not enough to show that it was not made voluntarily—Q. E. v. Basvanti, 25 Bom. 168.

Questions to be put to accused :—Under the present Amendment, the Magistrate should not only question the accused about the voluntariness of the confession, but should also warn him that he is not bound to make any confession, and that if he makes any, it will be used as evidence against him. This Amendment supersedes the ruling in Q. E. v. Uteer, 10 Cal 775, (in which it was held that the Magistrate ought not to give any warning to the accused to the effect that what the accused was going to say would be evidence against him).

If the procedure of this section is not followed prior to the recording of a confession, the statement of the accused cannot be admitted in evidence against him or his co-accused—Balan Singh v. Emp., 7 Lah. L J 39, 26 Cr.L J. 731. Unless it is proved that the Magistrate explained to him that he need not make any confession and that it might be used against him, the confession is not admissible in evidence—Bahawala v Crown 6 Lah 183, 26 Cr.L.J. 1238, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 432.

The Magistrate should not be content with a few formal questions. The section contemplates that the Magistrate shall hear the confession first, without making any record, and shall then put questions to ascertain whether the confession is voluntary, and then if he has reason to believe that it is voluntary, he may record the confession, writing out in full every question put by him and every answer given by the accused, and following the provisions of sec. 364. The questioning of the accused before recording a confession is a matter of substance and not of mere form, and if it has been omitted, the omission is a fatal one and cannot be cured by any evidence under sec. 533—Ananda v. Parbati, 3 L.B.R. 173; Shwe Sin v. K. E., 3 L.B.R. 213, 4 Cr.L.J. 385; Farid v. Crown, 2 Lah. 325 (328). Where the only warning which the Magistrate gives to the accused is that he asks the accused whether he is willing to make a confession, and that if he makes a confession it will be used as evidence against him, but he does not put questions to the accused to find out whether the reply which the accused is about to give is a voluntary one, there is no compliance with the requirements of law for recording a confession—Emp. v. Garib Hari, 30 C.W.N. 454, 27 Cr.L.J. 621. "No Magistrate shall record any such confession, unless upon questioning the person making it, he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily. It is the invariable practice of the Deputy Magistrates in this Province to ignore entirely this provision of the Code. It is considered sufficient to make use of a stock phrase which in this instance runs: 'I am a Magistrate, if you want to make any statement of your own accord, you may do so, do not make any statement which you have been tutored by others to make' and then follows the story of the crime without any answer whatever to the Magistrate's formula. To my mind a Magistrate might just as well say to the accused 'hocus pocus' or 'abracadabra.'" Such phrases would be as much a compliance with the terms of sec. 164 (3) as any formula now in vogue. What is meant by the Code is that the Magistrate should ask the accused some such question as "Why are you confessing? Are you sorry for your crime or is it that some one has told you that you will gain something by a confession?" and refuse to proceed with the recording of the confession until he has had a satisfactory answer to his question"—per Roe J. in Ragho v. Emp., 18 Cr.L.J. 721 (Pat.) Where a Magistrate questioned the accused person thus: "It appears that you have committed murder and absconded by escaping from custody; you have now come; what have you to say?" held that the question was extremely improper—In re Pisani, 2 Weir 137.

In order to ascertain whether the confession is voluntary, the Magistrate is bound to question the accused closely as to his motive in making a confession, and if he fails to do so, he has no jurisdiction to say that he is satisfied as to the voluntary nature of the confession—Ragho v. Emp., 18 Cr.L.J. 721 (Pat.) In a more recent case of the same High Court, however, it has been held that it is not necessary that the Magistrate should have questioned the accused as to his motives in making the confession, though as a rule of prudence it is better that he should do so—Emp. v. Dewan Kahar, 4 P.L.T. 186, 24 Cr.L.J. 497.

It would be going much too far to say that a Magistrate recording a statement or a confession cannot and should not ask a single question of the deponent. He would be justified in putting questions to clear up any matter which is ambiguous on the face of the statement, but he is wholly unjustified in extracting, by questions from the deponent, any facts which the deponent has not spoken to in his Court. Everything must depend on the nature of the questioning and the object of it, and the mere fact that an answer was elicited by a question does not make the proceedings improper or the statement inadmissible as a confession—Hasan Ali v. K. E., 23 A.L.J. 719, 26 Cr.L.J. 1209, A.I.R. 1926 All. 22. It is desirable that the Magistrate in recording the confession should put various questions to the accused to enable him to decide whether the confession is a voluntary one or not, but there is nothing in law which lays down that a Magistrate cannot satisfy himself as to the voluntariness of the confession by putting a single question to the accused—Emp. v. Dewan Kahar, 4 P.L.T. 186, 24 Cr.L.J. 497.

No express form of question is prescribed, and the extent to which the Magistrate should question the accused must largely depend on the particular facts of each case. There are cases which on the face of them attract the suspicion of a Magistrate, and there are others which do not attract any suspicion at all, and it is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule on the subject. The Court must in each case satisfy itself that the Magistrate honestly believed and took steps to ascertain that the confession was a voluntary one—Thibu v. Emp., 4 P.L.T. 279, 24 Cr.L.J. 649.

518. Police custody:—A confession obtained after the accused had been in custody for some time is always open to grave suspicion—Q. E. v. Gobardhan, 9 All. 528; Motijan v. Crown, 6 C.W.N. 380. When a Magistrate records the confession of a person who has been in police custody, he should ascertain and record the period during which the accused had been in custody, to satisfy himself whether the confession is voluntary or not—Q. E. v. Narayan, 25 Bom. 543. But where an accused was actually produced before the Magistrate as soon as he was arrested, and was produced before him the next day for recording the confession, held that the confession should not be ignored on the ground that the Magistrate did not ask him how long he was in Police custody—Emp. v. Dewan Kahar, 4 P.L.T. 186, 24 Cr.L.J. 497. The fact and duration of Police custody has a material bearing on the question whether a confession is voluntary or not—Jogibai v. Emp., 13 C.W.N. 861, 10 Cr.L.J. 125. The unjustifiable violence used by the Police to the accused for his arrest, his illegal detention in police custody for more than 24 hours after his arrest, and the marks on his person—all these must be held to have vitiated the voluntary character of his confession, and it is therefore inadmissible in evidence—Q. E. v. Appa, 1 Bom. L.R. 357. But a confession cannot be rejected on the sole ground that the accused had been a long time in police custody—Q. E. v. Mahadhu, Ratanlal 720. The Punjab Chief Court holds that even if the accused is in the custody of a police officer when he makes the confession, yet the confession being made before a Magistrate is not excluded from being given in evidence by anything contained in sec. 26, Evidence Act, when proved by the evidence of the Magistrate—Feroz v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 11, 19 Cr.L.J. 651 (following Sher Singh v. Emp., 1881 P.R. 21).

A prisoner in police custody who was brought before a Magistrate to have his confession recorded, did not cease to be in police custody merely because at the time of recording the confession there was no police officer in the room, when it was found that a police officer was waiting outside the room where the confession was being recorded—Q. E. v. Lakshmya, Ratanlal 855 (856)

519. Memorandum:—A confession without a memorandum that it is voluntarily made is bad in law and cannot be admitted in evidence—Emp. v. Daji, 6 Bom 238; Reg v. Shivya, 1 Bom. 219; Emp v. Radhe Halwi, 7 C W N 220, and the want of a memorandum can be cured, if at all, only by the Sessions Judge taking evidence during the trial that the accused had made the statement—Noshai v. Emp., 5 Cal 958; Q. E. v. Anga Valayan, 22 Mad. 15.

Where the Magistrate has made a memorandum that the confession was voluntarily made, it may be presumed that it is a correct record of a voluntary confession. Nevertheless, if it is found that the confession was procured by any inducement, threat or promise, it must be treated as irrelevant—Emp v. Dewan, 4 P.L.T 186, 24 Cr L J. 497.

The memorandum annexed to a record of confession is not a conclusive evidence of the fact that the confession was voluntarily made, so as to preclude the Court of Appeal from inquiring into the nature of the confession to see whether it was voluntary or not—Jogiban v. Emp., 13 C W N. 861, 10 Cr L J. 125.

The memorandum is required only in the case of confessions made by the accused. A statement of a witness need not be appended by a memorandum that such statement was made voluntarily—Q. E. v. Jadub, 27 Cal 295.

A confession does not become unworthy of evidence, merely because the memorandum required by law to be attached thereto has not been written in the exact form prescribed—Emp. v. Bhairon, 3 All. 339. It is sufficient if it is in substance the same as that given in this section.

It is most advisable, although the law does not require it, that the Magistrate should record a memorandum of enquiry showing what steps he has taken to fully satisfy himself that an accused person is confessing voluntarily—Umar din v Crown, 2 Lah. 129, 23 Cr.L.J. 389.

If the memorandum omitted to state that the confession was voluntarily made, it was held that the Magistrate omitted to observe a most important provision of this section, and the confession was therefore not admissible in evidence—In re Kottubadi Narasingha, 2 Weir 140; Q. E. v. Bhairab, 2 C.W N 702 (717); but in some recent cases it has been said that the defect would be cured by sec. 533 if the Magistrate afterwards deposed that he believed that the confession was voluntarily made—Emp. v. Deo Dat, 45 All. 166, 20 A.L.J. 915; Ramai v. King Emp., 3 Pat. 872 (877), 26 Cr.L.J. 314, Maksud v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 773.

Under this section as now amended, the Magistrate must explain to the accused that he is not to make any confession and that the confession may be used as evidence against him, and the memorandum also should record the fact that the explanation was given. But omission to record the fact that the accused was so warned would not make the confession inadmissible in evidence if the Magistrate who recorded the confession was afterwards examined (sec 533) and deposed that he gave the required warning to the accused and the accused understood it—Ramai v. Emp., 3 Pat. 872 (877), 26 Cr.L.J. 314, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 191; Bana Singh v. Emp., 7 Lah. L.J. 250, 26 P.L.R. 579, 26 Cr.L.J. 1459; Khemani v. Emp., 6 Lah. 58, 26 P.L.R. 316, 26 Cr.L.J. 1074; Nilmadhab v. Emp., 5 Pat. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 957. But if as a matter of fact, no such explanation was given by the Magistrate to the accused, the defect is not merely one of form but of substance, and sec 533 cannot cure it—Partap Singh v. Crown, 6 Lah. 415, 7 Lah.L.J. 482, 27 Cr.L.J. 514; Mt. Rao v. Crown, 26 P.L.R. 173, 26 Cr.L.J. 1175.

But the memorandum need not set forth the circumstances under which the confession was made. Thus, an omission to state in the memorandum that the accused was not in police custody at the time when the confession was made, does not make the confession invalid—In re Bokru, Ratanlal 534.

An English memorandum as required by sec 364 is not necessary in respect of a confession under this section—Fekoo v. Empress, 14 Cal. 539.

Refusal to make a memorandum—Where a Magistrate who recorded the confession of an accused refused to make the memorandum on the ground that the confession did not seem to be voluntary, it was held that under sec 533, the confession could be admitted in evidence during the trial when the Magistrate who recorded it proved that it was made voluntarily—Harbans v. K. E., 8 O.C. 395B. Where the Magistrate refused to make a memorandum on the ground that the accused had been in police custody for 5 days before he was produced before him, and that there was a proposal on the part of the police to treat the accused as an approver, but there was no evidence that the proposal was communicated to the accused, it was held that this ground was not a valid ground and the Sessions Judge ought to have proceeded, in the absence of the memorandum, to take evidence under sec 533 whether the confession was voluntarily made—Q. E. v. Anga Valayan, 22 Mad. 15.

520. Explanation—Magistrate without jurisdiction:

—The Explanation to this section lays down that a statement or confession can be recorded by a Magistrate, although he has no jurisdiction in the case. But a Magistrate not having jurisdiction can record the statement of a witness under this section, if the witness appears voluntarily before him, and is not brought before him by the police—Emp. v. Nuri Sheikh 29 Cal. 483. This section will not empower a police officer to compel a witness to go to a local Magistrate not competent to deal with the case, and to get the statement recorded—Queen Emp. v. Nana, Ratanlal 468 (469); Emp. v. Nuri Sheikh, 29 Cal. 483. Where the police officer has reason to believe that the witness is likely to be gained over by accused, the proper course is to send the accused and the witness to the Magistrate having jurisdiction without delay—Emp. v. Nuri Sheikh, 29 Cal. 483.

165. (1) Whenever an officer in charge of a police-station or a police-officer making an investigation considers that the production of any document or thing is necessary to the conduct of an investigation into any offence which he is authorised to investigate, and there is reason to believe that a person to whom a summons or order under Section 94 has been or might be issued will not or would not produce such document or thing according to the directions of the summons or order, or when such document or thing is not known to be in the possession of any person, such officer may search, or cause search to be made, for the same, in any place within the limits of the station of which he is in charge, or to which he is attached.

165. (1) Whenever an officer in charge of a police-station, or a police-officer making an investigation has reasonable grounds for believing that anything necessary for the purposes of an investigation into any offence which he is authorised to investigate may be found in any place within the limits of the police-station of which he is in charge, or to which he is attached, and that such thing cannot in his opinion be otherwise obtained without undue delay, such officer may, after recording in writing the grounds of his belief, and specifying in such writing, so far as possible, the thing for which search is to be made, search, or cause search to be made, for such thing in any place within the limits of such station.

(2) A police-officer proceeding under sub-section (1) shall, if practicable, conduct the search in person.

(3) If he is unable to conduct the search in person, and there is no other person competent to make the search present at the time, he may after recording in writing his reasons for so doing require any officer subordinate to him to make the search, and he shall deliver to such subordinate officer an order in writing specifying the place to be searched and so far as possible the thing for which search is to be made; and such subordinate officer may thereupon search for such thing in such place.

(4) The provisions of this Code as to search-warrants and the general provisions as to searches contained in Section 102 and Section 103 shall, so far as may be, apply to a search made under this section.

(5) Copies of any record made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (3) shall forthwith be sent to the nearest Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence, and the owner or occupier of the place searched shall on application be furnished with a copy of the same by the Magistrate :

Provided that he shall pay for the same, unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost.

Change :—The changes in this section as shown by the italicised words have been introduced by sec. 36 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). For reasons see below.

521. Sub-section (1)—General search :—The old section spoke of 'any document or thing' which meant a specific document or thing which might be the subject of a summons or order under section 94, that is, it does not authorise a general search on the chance that something might be found—Bajrang Gope v. Emp., 38 Cal 364; Pran Khan v. K. E., 16 C.W.N 1078; Emp. v. Brikhbhan, 38 All. 14, 13 A.L.J 979; Divakar v. Ramamurti, 35 M.L.J. 127, 19 Cr.L.J. 901. The section speaks of a particular document or thing which is necessary to the conduct of an investigation into an offence and does not authorise a general search e.g. for arms generally—Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore, 36 Cal 433, or for stolen property generally—Bisser Misser v. Emp., 41 Cal 261, nor is the requirement of this section fulfilled by framing the warrant as one for 'stolen property relevant to the case'—Pran Khan v. K. E., 16 C.W.N. 1078, 13 Cr.L.J 764

This has now been made clear by the present amendment, by the addition of the specific words "and specifying in such writing ... to be made" These words were added during the Debate on the motion of Mr Rangachariar who observed as follows "I think that it is a vicious thing to allow a police officer to have power to conduct a general search, without knowing what it is he is going to search for, but merely to see if he can find something incriminating in a person's house. Even the wording of the clause itself ('that such a thing cannot in his opinion be otherwise obtained without undue delay') contemplates that the man himself has some information and that he must know what it is that he is after; and it is necessary that he should record this in writing and forward the record to the Magistrate, so that it will be a check upon irresponsible searches which have frequently disfigured the police administration in various parts of the country"—Legislative Assembly Debates, 31st January 1923, p. 1754

Thus, under the amended section it has been held that it does not authorise a search for stolen property generally, but only a search for specified stolen articles. Where a definite list of stolen articles has been given to a police officer and he searches a house for those articles, he is making a search for specified articles, and his action is perfectly legal—Parash v. Jogendra, 27 Cr L.J. 1195 (Cal.).

This section is not restricted to a search for what is stolen and believed to be stolen property, but it permits a police-officer to make a search of anything necessary for the purposes of an investigation into any offence—Emp. v. Param Sukh, 23 A L.J. 1037, 27 Cr.L.J. 11.

Accused's house may be searched:—A police-officer is entitled to search the house of a person for specific articles even though the latter is the person accused of the crime—Parash v. Jogendra, 27 Cr.L.J. 1195 (Cal.).

522. "Within the limits":—A Station House officer has no power to make a search beyond the local limits of his own circle—Mir Sha v. Crown, 8 S L R 1, 16 Cr L J 15; Krishna Aiyar v. Emp., 24 M.L.T. 96, 20 Cr L J 145. Such a search is illegal and resistance to such search is not an offence—Madho Sonar v Emp., 13 A.L.J. 691, 16 Cr.L.J. 589. But see sec. 166 (3) which now authorises a Police officer, under certain circumstances, to make a search within the limits of another police station.

523. Who shall conduct the search:—Sub-section (2) lays down that the officer in charge of a police station or the investigating officer must "conduct the search in person". But this does not mean that the officer must himself make the search i.e. ransack boxes, examine the room, dig up the floor or otherwise seek for the property. Nor is it necessary that all these processes should take place under his very eye. Therefore where the Inspector remained outside the house, while the actual search was being made inside by two constables, it was held that the search was not illegal. All that the section means is that the officer should go to the spot and exercise a general superintendence over the search, in contradistinction to the cases where he is unable to go to the spot and deposes a subordinate by a written order to conduct the search in his place—Sadagopala v Satrugna, 23 M L J. 445 (dissenting from 17 M L J. 323, where a search made by a constable inside the house while the Inspector was seated outside, was held to be illegal as not being conducted in person by the Inspector).

The Magistrate cannot conduct the search. This section speaks of a search made by a Police officer and not by a Magistrate—Clarke v. Brojendra, 36 Cal. 433. The Magistrate can conduct a search only under sec. 105, which section has not been made applicable here.

524. Sub-section (3)—Order in writing.—If the officer cannot himself go to the spot he can depute a subordinate, but the deputation must be by an order in writing. A constable making the search without such a written order does not lawfully exercise the power of a public servant, and resistance to such search is not an offence—Q. v. Narain, 7 N.W.P. 209; Idu Mandal v. Emp., 6 C.L.J. 753; Mir Sha v. Crown, 8 S.L.R. 1; Madho Sonar v. Emp., 13 A.L.J. 691.

525. Sub-section (4)—Necessity of search warrant : A subordinate Police officer may, however, without a warrant enter a house in search of a person who is charged with having committed a cognizable offence, but he is not empowered to enter a house without a search warrant, in search of property—Reg. v. Venkatarav, 7 B.H.C.R. 50.

Witnesses to the search.—Prior to the present amendment it was held that the failure to call inhabitants of the locality as witnesses to the search did not make the search illegal because the provisions of section 103 did not apply to a search under this section—Sadagopala v. Satrugghna, 23 M.L.J. 445. This ruling is now rendered obsolete by the present sub-section (4) which makes the general provisions of searches under sections 102 and 103 applicable to searches under this section. But it should be noticed that sub-section (4) is not imperative, and that the provisions of sections 102 and 103 are made applicable only so far as may be. Therefore, the mere fact that in making a search under sec. 165, the police took independent witnesses with them, and did not call witnesses from the locality, did not necessarily render the search illegal—Shiam Lal v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 652 (All.).

Damages for illegal search.—A police officer cannot investigate into a non-cognizable case without the order of a Magistrate (sec. 155); nor can he make a search in respect of it, because he can make a search only in those cases which he can investigate. Therefore a police officer making a search in a non-cognizable case without being authorised by a Magistrate is liable to be sued for damages—Bahabal v. Tarak Nath, 24 Cal. 691.

Where a Police officer makes a search for specific stolen property bona fide, the person whose premises are searched is not entitled to damages—Divakar v. Ramamurti, 35 M.L.J. 127, 19 Cr.L.J. 901.

A police officer not having jurisdiction over the place searched, who takes part in a search conducted by another police officer authorised by the Code to conduct the search, cannot be said to exceed his jurisdiction and is not liable in damages as one making an illegal search—Asan v. Masilamani, 42 Mad. 446, 36 M.L.J. 252, 20 Cr.L.J. 422.

525A. Sub-section (5) :—"The object of this amendment is that as soon as a search is made, an immediate report should be made to the nearest Magistrate. The second object is that the person whose house is searched should have copies of the records made under sub-sections (1) and (3). Sub-section (4) as it stands enables the provisions of section 103 to apply, that is, the general rules relating to searches are made applicable. Under section 103 the occupier of the place where the search was made gets only a list of the articles taken, but what I want him to get is the reason for the search which has to be recorded in writing, which has to be sent to the Magistrate, and he gets a copy thereof." See the Legislative Assembly Debates, 31st January 1923, page 1755.

The provisions of this new sub-section, as well as of sub-section (5) of sec. 166, are intended as an extra safeguard to protect individuals against general or roving searches. Omission by a Police officer to send forthwith to the nearest Magistrate the copies of the record that he has prepared before undertaking the search, affects the validity of the search, and is a ground for setting aside the conviction of the accused—Lal Mia v Emp, 43 C.L.J. 184, 27 Cr.L.J. 542.

An order of refusal by the Magistrate to supply copies of the record to the owner or occupier of the house searched is subject to revision by the High Court—Churamani, 26 A.L.J. 703, 29 Cr.L.J. 663 (664).

166. (1) An officer in charge of a police-station or a police officer not being below the rank of a Sub-Inspector making an investigation may require an officer in charge of another police-station, whether in the same or a different district, to cause a search to be made in any place, in any case in which the former officer might cause such search to be made within the limits of his own station.

(2) Such officer, on being so required, shall proceed according to the provisions of section 165, and shall forward the thing found, if any, to the officer at whose request the search was made.

(3) Whenever there is reason to believe that the delay occasioned by requiring an officer in charge of another police-station to cause a search to be made under sub-section (1) might result in evidence of the commission of an offence being concealed or destroyed, it shall be lawful for an officer in charge of a police-station or a police officer making an investigation under this Chapter to search, or cause to be searched, any place in the limits of another police station, in accordance with the provisions of Section 165 as if such place were within the limits of his own station.

(4) Any officer conducting a search under sub-section (3) shall forthwith send notice of the search to the officer in charge of the police station within the limits of which such place is situate, and shall also send with such notice a copy of the list (if any) prepared under Section 103, and shall also send to the nearest Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence, copies of the records referred to in section 165 sub-sections (1) and (3).

(5) The owner or occupier of the place searched shall, on application, be furnished with a copy of any record sent to the Magistrate under sub-section (4):

Provided that he shall pay for the same, unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost.

Change :—The changes have been introduced by sec. 37 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923)

"Not being below the rank of Sub-inspector":—"We are inclined to think that the powers conferred by section 166 should not be exercised by a police-officer making an investigation who is below the rank of Sub-Inspector. We realise, however that there may be administrative difficulties in this connection, and if such difficulties are pointed out by Local Governments, we should be prepared to retain this clause unamended"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

Sub-sections (3), (4) :—"These two sub-sections are proposed to be added in order to give power in certain circumstances to an officer in charge of a Police station to search or cause to be searched places within the local limits of another police station"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Sub-section (5) :—This sub-section and the proviso as well as the words "and shall also .and (3)" in the last three lines of sub-section (4) did not exist in the Bills or the Reports but were added on the motion of Mr. Rangachariar during the Debate in the Legislative Assembly. The reason for this amendment is the same as that for a similar amendment made in sec. 165 See the Legislative Assembly Debates, January 31st 1923, page 1757

167. (1) Whenever it appears that any investigation cannot be completed in twenty-four hours, Chapter cannot be completed within the period of twenty-four hours fixed by Section 61, and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well-founded, the officer in charge of the police-station shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall at the same time forward the accused (if any) to such Magistrate.

167. (1) Whenever any person is arrested and detained in custody and it appears that the investigation * * * cannot be completed within the period of twenty-four hours fixed by Section 61, and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well-founded, the officer in charge of the police-station or the police officer making the investigation if he is not below the rank of Sub-Inspector shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall at the same time forward the accused (* *) to such Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate to whom an accused person is forwarded under this section may, whether he has or has not jurisdiction to try the case, from time to time authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as such Magistrate thinks fit, for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole. If he has not jurisdiction to try the case or commit it for trial, and considers further detention unnecessary, he may order the accused to be forwarded to a Magistrate having such jurisdiction :

Provided that no Magistrate of the third class, and no Magistrate of the second class not specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government, shall authorise detention in the custody of the police.

(3) A Magistrate authorizing under this section detention in the custody of the police shall record his reasons for so doing.

(4) If such order is given by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate, he shall forward a copy of his order, with his reasons for making it, to the Magistrate to whom he is immediately subordinate.

Change.—The italicised words in subsection (1) and the proviso in sub-section (2) have been inserted by sec. 38 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below.

526. Scope :—Prior to the present amendment, the first six lines of this section ran thus.—“Whenever it appears that any investigation under this chapter cannot be completed” etc., i.e. this section applied only to investigations under this chapter and gave no authority to a Magistrate to remand an accused person to custody in proceedings under Chapter VIII, in order to enable the police to arrest other persons jointly accused with him—Emp v Basya, 5 Bom L.R. 27, Raghuandan v Emp, 32 Cal. 80, 8 C.W.N. 779, In re Subbarayya, 39 Mad. 928, K. E. v. Rameshwar, 38 All. 262. These rulings are no longer good law, because the words “under this chapter” have now been omitted by the Amendment Act of 1923. The same view has been taken by Woodroffe (Criminal Procedure, p. 188).

527. 24 hours fixed by sec. 61 :—Having regard to the provisions of this section and of sec. 61 and to the requirements of justice, the intention of the Legislature is that the accused persons should be brought before the Magistrate competent to try or commit, with as little delay as possible—Q. E. v. Engadu, 11 Mad. 98.

‘Not below the rank of Sub-inspector’ :—“In sec. 167, however, which confers a power to ask for a remand, we would confine the operation to investigating officers not below the rank of sub-Inspector” —Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

528. “Forward the accused to the Magistrate” :—Before a Magistrate remands an accused person to police custody, the accused must be produced before him—Peary Mohan v. Weston, 16 C.W.N. 145, 13 Cr.L.J. 65. Where the accused is not brought before the Magistrate, it is illegal for him to remand the prisoner on the application of the police—Crown v. Shera, 1867 P.R. 39.

529. Sub-section (2)—Magistrate’s power to detain :—Under this section, a Magistrate, on a mere perusal of the entries in the Police diaries may from time to time authorise the detention of the accused for a term not exceeding 15 days on the whole. Thereafter he can, under sec. 344 by a warrant, remand the accused for any term not exceeding ‘ days at a time, if there is sufficient evidence to suspect that the accused has committed an offence and that further evidence may be obtained by such remand—Narendra Lal v. Emp., 36 Cal. 166.

An application for remand to police custody must be made personally by the chief Police officer present to the chief Magisterial officer present, unless this is impossible owing to the absence of one of the officers concerned or through some other exceptional cause—Peary Mohan v. Weston, 16 C W N. 145, 13 Cr L J 65.

The power under sec. 167 is given to detain the prisoners in custody while the police make the investigation, and before the inquiry; but the custody mentioned in sec. 344 is quite different and is intended for under-trial prisoners, i.e., when the inquiry or trial has begun or is about to begin—Q. E. v. Engadu, 11 Mad. 98; In re Krishnaji, 23 Bom. 32; In re Nagendra Nath, 51 Cal. 402 (412).

Under the proviso to this sub-section newly added, the power of detention is confined to first-class Magistrates and to second-class Magistrates specially empowered. The reason is that the period of detention is just the time which is taken advantage of by inexperienced Magistrates for extorting confessions and other things. Therefore the power of detention should be given only to experienced Magistrates. "We consider that the Bill does not go far enough in its restriction of the Magistrates who should be authorised to remand to police custody. We would confine the power to first-class Magistrates and to second-class Magistrates specially empowered"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

530. Period of detention.—The period for which a Magistrate can authorise the detention of the accused in police custody is under this section 15 days on the whole—In re Krishnaji, 23 Bom. 32; Harquol v. Emp., 1902 P R 24, Q. E. v. Engadu, 11 Mad. 98; Q. v. Bassooram, 19 W R. 36.

In ordering further detention when there are good reasons for it, a Magistrate should invariably limit the term as much as possible to what may be necessary for the object in view—Emp. v. Kampu Kuki, 11 C W.N. 554.

531 Sub-section (3)—Grounds of detention:—Where a Magistrate orders the detention of an accused person in police custody, he must record sufficient reasons for the same—In re Krishnaji, 23 Bom. 32; Peary Mohan v. Weston, 16 C W N. 145. Before he orders the detention of an accused person, he should ascertain how long the accused had been under police surveillance or influence, and in recording the reasons for detention he should note all the information that he is able to obtain on the subject—Emp. v. Madar, 1885 A W.N. 59.

By requiring the Magistrate to record his reasons in case of sanctioning detention in police custody, the law contemplates that the Magistrate should consider whether on the facts placed before him there are good grounds for allowing such detention. There must be at least something to satisfy the Magistrate that the presence of the person arrested would, during the police investigation, assist in some discovery of evidence—Emp. v. Kampu Kuli, 11 C.W.N. 554. The reasons which are to be recorded must be reasons showing the particular necessity which exists in each particular case for leaving the prisoner in the hands of the Police. Under no circumstances should an accused person be remanded to police custody unless it is made clear that his presence is actually needed in order to serve some important purpose connected with the completion of the inquiry—Emp. v. Madar, 1885 A.W.N. 59. Thus, when the accused had confessed before the Magistrate and had pointed out some of the properties stolen and was waiting to do more, but was unable to do so because the Police were by law unable without a special order to detain him, it was held that an order for detention should be made—Emp. v. Kampu, 11 C.W.N. 554.

But the fact that the accused is wanted by the police for the purpose of pointing out the places through which he passed on his way to commit a dacoity, or for the purpose of obtaining his identification in the village is not a sufficient reason for sanctioning detention—Amir Khan v. K. E., 7 C.W.N. 457. So also, it would be improper for a Magistrate to sanction the detention of a person in police custody so that he may be forced to give a clue to the stolen property—Q. E. v. Rugonath, 3 N.W.P. 275. An accused person may be remanded if it is likely that further evidence may be obtained, but he cannot be remanded on a mere expectation that time will show his guilt or that further fact would come to light—Khuda Bakhsh v. Crown, 1872 P.R. 17; or simply for the purpose of verifying his confession recorded under section 164—Emp. v. Radho Halwai, 7 C.W.N. 220.

168. When any subordinate police-officer has made

Report of investigation by subordinate police officer. any investigation under this Chapter, he shall report the result of such investigation to the officer in charge of the police-station.

532. It was formerly held that a report made by a subordinate Police Officer under this section was not a public document within the meaning of section 74, Evidence Act, and an accused person was not entitled to a copy of it before trial—Q. E. v. Arumagan, 20 Mad. 189. But now see sec 173, sub-section (4)

169. If, upon an investigation under this Chapter,

Release of accused when evidence deficient. it appears to the officer in charge of the police-station or to the police-officer making the investigation, that there is not sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the forwarding of the accused to a Magistrate, such officer shall, if such person is in custody, release him on his executing a bond, with or without sureties, as such officer may direct, to appear, if and when so required, before a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence on a police-report and to try the accused or commit him for trial.

Change .—The words “or to the police-officer making the investigation” have been added by section 39 of the Crim. Pro. Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 “In the case of sec. 169, we agree that the power contemplated by the section should be exercisable by investigating officers and we see no reason in this case to restrict the power to officers not below the rank of Sub-Inspector. With regard to section 170, however, we consider that the direct responsibility for sending up a case should rest with the officer in charge of the police-station.”—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

533. Power of Police Officer :—This section does not authorise a police-officer to entertain an application for withdrawal of a complaint. Permitting a complainant to withdraw is a judicial act, the exercise of which is vested in the Magistrate under Secs. 248 and 345, and the police have no authority to interfere in such matters—Anonymous, Ratanlal 91.

Re-arrest .—The admission to bail by the Police under this section is a purely provisional arrangement; and therefore if the Magistrate considers that the evidence does establish a prima facie case of a non-bailable offence, the accused should be re-arrested and forwarded to the Magistrate in custody—Anonymous, Ratanlal 121

170. (1) If, upon an investigation under this Chapter, it appears to the officer in charge of the police-station that there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground as aforesaid, such officer shall forward the accused under custody to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence upon a police-report and to try the accused or commit him for trial, or if the offence is bailable and the accused is able to give security, shall take security from him for his appearance before such Magistrate on a day fixed and for his attendance from day to day before such Magistrate until otherwise directed.

(2) When the officer in charge of a police-station forwards an accused person to a Magistrate or takes security for his appearance before such Magistrate under this section, he shall send to such Magistrate any weapon or other article which it may be necessary to produce before him, and shall require the complainant (if any) and so many of the persons who appear to such officer to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case as he may think necessary, to execute a bond, to appear before the Magistrate as thereby directed and prosecute or give evidence (as the case may be) in the matter of the charge against the accused.

(3) If the Court of the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate is mentioned in the bond, such Court shall be held to include any Court to which such Magistrate may refer the case for inquiry or trial, provided reasonable notice of such reference is given to such complainant or persons.

(4) * * * * *

(5) The officer in whose presence the bond is executed shall deliver a copy thereof to one of the persons who executed it, and shall then send to the Magistrate the original with his report.

Change.—Sub-section (4) has been recently omitted by the Crim. Pro. Code Amendment Act II of 1926. The reasons for the omission have been thus stated :—"Subsection (4) of section 170 provides that the day fixed under this section shall be the day whereon the accused person is to appear, if security for his appearance has been taken, or the day on which he may be expected to arrive at the Court of the Magistrate, if he is to be forwarded in custody. This provision requires, for example, that all witnesses shall be bound down to appear before the Magistrate on the date when the accused is expected to arrive at the Court if he is forwarded in custody. It has been found to be inconvenient, and, it is understood, is not frequently followed in practice"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925, Part V, p. 214).

534. "Shall forward" :—As soon as it appears to the investigating police officer that there is sufficient ground for forwarding the accused, the police officer is bound to forward the accused, and has no option but to do so—Govinda v. Emp., 16 N.L.R. 9, 21 Cr.L.J. 769

"On a day fixed" :—A recognisance taken from a prisoner binding him to attend the Court to answer a charge against him, should specify a particular day for his attendance—Q v. Pooran, 11 W.R. 47.

The police should not bind over witnesses to appear and give evidence long after the prisoner is brought before the Magistrate—Govt. v. Madun Das, 6 W.R. 52

535. Right of accused to copy of charge sheet at the beginning of trial :—It was held under the old law that a Magistrate was entitled to refuse to give the accused, at the commencement of the trial, a copy of the Police charge-sheet, containing the whole of the prosecution evidence and extracts from the police diaries—Q. E. v. Venkataratnam, 19 Mad. 14; but this is no longer good law in view of the new subsection (4) of sec 173 which now entitles the accused to get a copy of the charge sheet before trial.

Complainant and witnesses not to be required to accompany police officer.

171. No complainant or witness on his way to the Court of the Magistrate shall be required to accompany a police officer, or shall be subjected to unnecessary restraint or inconvenience, or required to give any security for his appearance other than his own bond;

Complainants and witnesses not to be subjected to restraint.

Provided that, if any complainant or witness refuses to attend or execute a bond as directed in Section 170, the officer in charge of the police-station may forward him in custody to the Magistrate who may detain him in custody until he executes such bond, or until the hearing of the case is completed.

Recusant complainant or witness may be forwarded in custody.

536. Unnecessary restraint —Where a witness was kept under police surveillance for about four days, it was held that there was no warrant in the law to keep a witness under such unnecessary restraint and that under such circumstances the evidence of the witness could not be accepted as given voluntarily—Bajrangi Lal v Emp, 4 C.W.N. 49

172. (1) Every police-officer making an investigation under this Chapter shall day by day enter his proceedings in the investigation in a diary, setting forth the time at which the information reached him, the time at which he began and closed his investigation, the place or places visited by him, and a statement of the circumstances ascertained through this investigation.

(2) Any Criminal Court may send for the police-diaries of a case under inquiry or trial in such Court, and may use such diaries, not as evidence in the case, but to aid it in such inquiry or trial. Neither the accused nor his agents shall be entitled to call for such diaries, nor shall he or they be entitled to see them merely because they are referred to by the Court; but if they are used by the police-officer who made them, to refresh his memory, or if the Court uses them for the purpose of contradicting such police officer, the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, Section 161 or Section 145, as the case may be, shall apply.

537. Scope—This section does not deal with the recording of statement made by witnesses. No mention is made in this section of the recording of any statement of a witness. What is intended to be recorded under this section is what the Sub-Inspector did, the places where he went, the people he visited, what he saw, etc. No statement can be said to be recorded under this section so as to be a privileged one—Mafizaddi v. Emp, 31 C.W.N. 940, 28 Cr L.J. 805. This section does not provide for the recording of statements of witnesses. Any statements of witnesses that are recorded, in whatever form they may be recorded, are recorded under sec. 161, and the accused has the right to ask for a copy of such statements, to use them for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses for the prosecution—Sadhu Shaikh v. K. E., 32 C.W.N. 280 (281), 29 Cr L.J. 531.

Diary to be kept properly:—Though Police-diaries are not evidence in the case against the accused, still it is very essential for criminal trials that they should be properly kept in the manner provided by the Code, and Magistrates should enforce the observance of law in this respect—Crown v. Shera, 1867 P.R. 39. See also Punj. Clr., p. 174.

It is incumbent upon a Police-officer who investigates a case under this chapter to keep the diary as provided by this section, and the omission to keep the diary deprives the Court of the very valuable assistance which such diaries can give, if legitimately used—Hiralal v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 16, 19 Cr L.J. 517.

"Court may send for diaries":—Sessions Judges should not issue a general order directing the Police diaries, in all cases committed for trial to the Court of Session and in every criminal appeal, to be transmitted to them. They are only authorised to send for the diaries of cases under trial before them, if they think it necessary in such cases to peruse the diaries—Q. E. v. Mannu, 19 All. 390 (F.B.).

538. Use of diary :—

Diary not an evidence in the case:—Police diaries are not original evidence of the matters contained therein—Dal Singh v. K. E., 44 Cal. 876 (P.C.), 21 C.W.N. 818; Q. E. v. Zahur Husain, 21 All. 159; In re Niravati, 2 Weir 143; Anonymous, 2 Weir 142. The Court should not take the facts and statements contained in the diaries as the material which would help it to come to a finding, for this would be using the diary as an evidence in the case—Syed Abdul Rahim v. Sabhu, 10 of the special diary or of any part of it. His right is limited to inspection only in certain cases. Where the diary is used by the Court for the purpose of enabling the Police officer who made it to refresh his memory, or for the purpose of contradicting him, the provisions of sec. 161 of the Evidence Act apply, and the accused or his agent is entitled to see (but not to get a copy of) such diary and to cross-examine such Police officer thereupon—Q E v Mannu, 19 All 390 (F.B.).

The right of the accused to inspect the police diary is limited to that portion of the diary from which the police officer who gave evidence refreshed his memory. He is not entitled to an inspection of anything more—Lachmi v K E, 2 Pat 74, Q E v Mannu, 19 All. 390 (F B.)

540. Contents of the diary—Statements under sec. 161—Before the Amendment Act of 1923, it was held that statements made to a police officer by a person whom he was examining under sec. 161 should not be recorded in the special diary—Dadan Gazi v. Erip, 33 Cal 1023; Sheru Shah v Q E, 20 Cal. 642. A contrary view was taken in Q. E. v Mannu, 19 All. 390. "But now whatever opinion may be held as to whether the Diary is a proper place for statements, the Police cannot by entering the statements in the Special Diary under sec. 172 protect them from the provisions of section 162, but they are liable to be produced under the conditions laid down in the latter section"—Woodroffe's Crim Pro, p 192

173. (1) Every investigation under this Chapter shall be completed without unnecessary delay, and, as soon as it is completed, the officer in charge of the police-station shall—

Report of police officer.

(a) forward, to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence on a police-report, a report, in the form prescribed by the Local Government, setting forth the names of the parties, the nature of the information and the names of the persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case, and stating whether the accused (if arrested) has been forwarded in custody or has been released on his bond, and if so, whether with or without sureties, and

(b) communicate, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Local Government, the action taken by him, to the person, if any, by whom the information relating to the commission of the offence was first given.

(2) Where a superior officer of police has been appointed under Section 158, the report shall, in any cases in which the Local Government by general or special order so directs, be submitted through that officer, and he may, pending the orders of the Magistrate, direct the officer in charge of the police-station to make further investigation.

(3) Whenever it appears from a report forwarded under this section that the accused has been released on his bond, the Magistrate shall make such order for the discharge of such bond or otherwise as he thinks fit.

(4) A copy of any report forwarded under this section shall on application be furnished to the accused before the commencement of the inquiry or trial :

Provided that the same shall be paid for unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost.

Change :—Clause (b) and sub-section (4) have been added by sec. 40 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "The principal change effected is to prescribe that the Police shall communicate the result of their investigation to the person by whom the first information was given"—Statement of Object and Reasons (1914). For reason of sub-section (4), see below

541. Police report .—It is the duty of the Police to make a report in every investigation under this Chapter. Where a person gave information to the Police of the commission of a non-cognizable offence, and the Police obtained the authority of a Magistrate, under section 155, to investigate the case, and without making any report instituted proceedings against that person under section 211 I. P. C. which ended in his conviction, it was held that the conviction was illegal in the absence of a Police report under this section—Emp. v Appa Ragho, 17 Bom L.R. 69, 16 Cr L.J. 161.

There is no legal limit to the number of investigations which can be held into a crime, and when one has been completed by the submission of a report under this section, another may be begun on further information received—Divakar v Ramamurthi, 35 M L J 127, 19 Cr L J 901.

The report must set forth the 'nature of the information.' A report which omits to set forth the information is defective, and a Magistrate taking cognizance of a case on such report acts illegally—Lee v. Adhikary, 37 Cal. 49, 14 C.W.N. 304.

It is sufficient if the Police report contains the names of the parties, the nature of the information and the names of the persons acquainted with the circumstances of the case. The report need not state whether in the opinion of the police the accused are guilty or not. Where the police sent up their report wherein they mentioned the names of two persons and stated that certain witnesses spoke against them on account of enmity but that if the Court thought that there was evidence against them, the Court might issue warrant, held that the report was a police-report within the meaning of this section—Mehrab v. Emp., 17 S.L.R. 150, A.I.R. 1924 Sind 71, 26 Cr L.J. 181.

On receipt of a police report under this section, the Magistrate can take cognizance of the case under sec. 190(b). If instead of doing so, he proceeded to make over the case to a subordinate Magistrate for enquiry and report as if he had taken cognizance of the case on a complaint, held that the proceedings of the Magistrate were irregular—Abdullah v. K. E., 40 Cal. 854, 17 C.W.N. 1004, 14 Cr.L.J. 297.

Order to strike off case :—A Magistrate's order directing a case reported to him by the Police under this section, to be struck off is not a judicial order dismissing a complaint, and cannot be reviewed by the Sessions Judge under sec. 437 (now 436)—Q. E. v. Kamru, Ratanlal 521

Sub-section (4) :—"This amendment relates to the supply to the accused person of a copy of the charge sheet in the case in which he is being prosecuted. There has been considerable difficulty in this matter on account of the rulings of various Courts that copies of charge sheets should not be furnished to accused persons. Some Courts went to the length of holding that till the accused brings his defence, a copy of the charge sheet should not be furnished to him. It has worked a great hardship. The accused has to grope in the dark as to what case he has to meet, who the prosecution witnesses are, and what their evidence is going to be. This amendment is therefore very necessary. Before a case begins or the inquiry or trial commences, an accused person ought to be furnished with a copy of the charge on which he is being prosecuted. Just as he is furnished with a copy of the complaint on which he is being prosecuted, so also this charge sheet is the information on which the Magistrate takes cognizance, and it is but right that the accused should be granted a copy of it"—Legislative Assembly Debates, 31st January, 1923, pages 1763-1764.

Before the enactment of this sub-section, it was held that the report made by a Police officer under this section not being a public document within the meaning of Sec 74 of the Evidence Act, the accused was not entitled to get a copy of the report before trial—Q. E. v. Arumugam, 20 Mad. 189; Q. E. v. Venkataratnam, 19 Mad 14. But these cases are now overruled by this sub-section

174. (1) The officer in charge of a police-station or some other police officer specially empowered by the Local Government in that behalf, on receiving information that a person—

- (a) has committed suicide, or
- (b) has been killed by another, or by an animal, or by machinery, or by an accident, or
- (c) has died under circumstances raising a reasonable suspicion that some other person has committed an offence, shall immediately give intimation thereof to the nearest Magistrate empowered to hold inquests, and, unless otherwise directed by any rule prescribed by the Local Government, or by any general or special order of the District or Sub-divisional Magistrate, shall proceed to the place where the body of such deceased person is, and there, in the presence of two or more respectable inhabitants of the neighbourhood, shall make an investigation, and draw up a report of the apparent cause of death, describing such wounds, fractures, bruises and other marks of injury as may be found on the body, and stating in what manner, or by what weapon or instrument (if any), such marks appear to have been inflicted.

(2) The report shall be signed by such police-officer and other persons, or by so many of them as concur therein, and shall be forthwith forwarded to the District Magistrate or the Sub-divisional Magistrate.

(3) When there is any doubt regarding the cause of death, or when for any other reason the police-officer considers it expedient so to do, he shall, subject to such rules as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf, forward the body, with a view to its being examined, to the nearest Civil Surgeon, or other qualified medical man appointed in this behalf by the Local Government, if the state of the weather and the distance admit of its being so forwarded without risk of such putrefaction on the road as would render such examination useless.

(4) In the Presidencies of Fort St. George and Bombay, investigations under this section may be made by the head of the village, who shall then report the result to the nearest Magistrate authorised to hold inquests.

(5) The following Magistrates are empowered to hold inquests, namely, any District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class and any Magistrate especially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government or the District Magistrate.

Change —In sub-section (5) the words “or Magistrate of the first class” have been newly added by sec 41 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. By this amendment, all first class Magistrates have been generally empowered to hold inquests.

Magistrates empowered :—In the Punjab, all Magistrates of the 1st and second class have been specially empowered to hold inquests under this section—Punjab Gazette, 1883, pp. 23, 52. In Bombay, all Magistrates (except Honorary Magistrates), all District Superintendents and Assistant Superintendents of Police are empowered to act under this section—Bombay Government Gazette, 1872, p. 1325; Ibid, 1873, p. 18.

District Magistrates should inform District Superintendents of Police which of the subordinate Magistrates have been authorised under section 37 read with sec 174 Cr P C to hold inquests. The District Superintendent of Police will thus be enabled to instruct his subordinates as to the particular Magistrates to whom the intimation required by this section is to be sent, and the intimations will give those Magistrates the opportunity of proceeding under sec 176, when it may be desirable to do so—C. P. Cr Cir, Part II, No 10.

542. Scope —When the body cannot be found or has been buried, there can be no investigation under section 174. This section is intended to apply to cases in which an inquest is necessary, which presupposes that the corpse must be available—Gul Hassan v. K E., 1908 P.R. 27.

543. Report :—The report is different from the final or complete report mentioned in sec 173. Inquest reports must be written up and completed on the spot where the inquest over the corpse is being held. Immediately the inquest is closed, the report thereof will be put into a cover and handed over in the presence of the Panchaytdars to the constable about to take the corpse to the Medical Officer's station for examination—Mad. Pol. Man, Vol 1, p. 85.

Considering the important nature of the evidence which is generally supplied by the results of the post mortem examination, it is necessary that in such cases the result of the observation, external and internal, should be fully recorded. A verbatim report of the statements of witnesses examined at the inquest may often be of great use to the Court in testing the value of evidence subsequently given—In re Pachudayan, 9 M.L.T. 321, 12 Cr.L.J. 124

When a Medical officer is not examined at the beginning of a post mortem inquiry, a copy of the post mortem certificate ought to be given to the accused for the purpose of enabling him to conduct his defence. Similarly, he should be given a copy of the inquest report (excluding statements made therein, which the accused is not entitled to get, under sec. 162) when the investigating police officer is not examined at the beginning of the inquiry—In re Maruthamuthu Kudumban, 50 Mad 750, 52 M.L.J. 601, 28 Cr.L.J. 463 (464)

Special diary not necessary in all cases :—The Lieutenant-Governor does not think that special diaries are intended or necessary in all cases of inquiry into unnatural deaths. The report described in sec. 174 Cr P Code is very much the same in character as the special diary of sec. 172. If the Police officer investigating sees reason to suspect crime, the inquiry becomes one under sec. 172 and special diaries become as a matter of course necessary, but in ordinary cases in which the inquiry is made and completed in a few hours, there seems to be no necessity of reporting the facts first in a special diary and then in the report prescribed by sec. 174. When however the inquiry is prolonged or lasts for more than one day, the diary should be sent to inform the District Superintendent and Magistrate of what is going on. The Lieutenant Governor would therefore rule that in cases of any complexity or in which the inquiry lasts over one day, or in which a crime is suspected, special diaries should be sent in anticipation of the final report, which will be made under sec. 173 if a crime is detected, and under sec. 174 if the death is from accident or unnatural causes. It is to be understood that in the station Diary everything done by the Police will be entered"—Bengal Police Circular, 1872, page 107

175. (1) A police-officer proceeding under Section 174 may by order in writing

summon two or more persons as aforesaid for the purpose of the said investigation, and any other person who appears to be acquainted with the facts of the case. Every person so summoned shall be bound to attend and to answer truly all questions other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge, or to a penalty or forfeiture.

(2) If the facts do not disclose a cognizable offence to which section 170 applies, such persons shall not be required by the police-officer to attend a Magistrate's Court.

Punishment.—A person who fails to attend in obedience to the order issued under this section is punishable under sec. 174 I. P. Code.

It should be noticed, however, that the word 'truly' which has been omitted from sec. 161 is still retained under this section, probably through oversight; but whether retained through oversight or otherwise, the word cannot be ignored, and a person giving false answers to questions put to him is liable to prosecution for giving false evidence, under sec. 193 I. P. C. If he refuses to answer the questions, he is punishable under sec. 179 I. P. C.

It should be further noted that the obligation to answer truly all questions attaches only to the persons summoned by the Police-officer. If a person voluntarily comes forward without any summons, and makes false statements, he cannot be prosecuted for perjury—Mad. Hayat v. Crown, 23 Cr.L.J. 82, A.I.R. 1922 Lah 133, 1922 P.W.R. 6.

544. Record of statement:—The statements of witnesses examined at the inquest should be recorded verbatim in the report, as the statements may be of great use to the Court in testing the value of evidence subsequently given—In re Pachudayan, 9 M.L.T. 321, 12 Cr.L.J. 124.

176. (1) When any person dies while in the custody of the police, the nearest Magistrate empowered to hold inquests shall, and, in any other case mentioned in Section 174, clauses (a), (b) and (c) of subsection (1), any Magistrate so empowered may, hold an inquiry into the cause of death either instead of or in addition to the investigation held by the police-officer, and, if he does so, he shall have all the powers in conducting it which he would have in holding an inquiry into an offence. The Magistrate holding such an inquiry shall record the evidence taken by him in connection therewith in any of the manner hereinafter prescribed according to the circumstances of the case.

(2) Whenever such Magistrate considers it expedient to make an examination of the dead body of any person who has been already interred in order to discover the cause of his death, the Magistrate may cause the body to be disinterred and examined.

545. Object:—This section proceeds on the basis that enquiry into a suspicious death should not depend merely upon the opinion the Police may form, but that there should be a further check by enabling a local Magistrate to hold an independent inquiry—In re Laxminarayan, 30 Bom.L.R. 1050, 29 Cr.L.J. 1063 (1071).

Jurisdiction of Presidency Magistrates :—The Presidency Magistrate is not ousted of his jurisdiction to hold a preliminary inquiry into a charge of murder, because the Coroner has held an inquiry into the cause of death and has committed the accused to the High Court under sec. 25 of the Coroner's Act (IV of 1871)—Q. E v Md Rajudin, 16 Bom. 159; Emp v. Jogeshwar, 31 Cal 1

Power to disinter corpses —A Police officer making an investigation under this section has no power to cause a dead body which has been already interred, to be disinterred in order to examine it. Such power is conferred on a Coroner under section 11 of the Coroner's Act (IV of 1871) and on a Magistrate holding an inquest under the present section.

546. Revision —Proceedings under this section are now liable to revision by the Court under secs. 435 and 439, by reason of the repeal of sub-section (3) of section 435 by the Amendment Act of 1923—In re Laxminarayan, 30 Bom.L.R. 1050, 29 Cr L.J. 1063 (1066).

In an earlier Calcutta case it has been held that as there is nothing in this section which requires that a Magistrate holding an inquiry under this section is bound to make a report or to come to a finding, the report of the inquiry under this section into the cause of a suspicious death is not a judicial proceeding, and therefore where he sent a report of the result of his inquiry to his executive superior (the District Magistrate) the High Court could not call for it under sec. 435—In re Troylokhanath, 3 Cal. 742 (752, 753) In other words, an inquiry under sec. 176 is a judicial proceeding, but the report of an inquiry under this section is not so, and cannot be sent for by the High Court under sec 435.

PART VI.

PROCEEDINGS IN PROSECUTIONS.

CHAPTER XV.

OF THE JURISDICTION OF THE CRIMINAL COURTS IN INQUIRIES AND TRIALS.

A—Place of Inquiry or Trial.

177. Every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed.

Ordinary place of inquiry and trial.

547. General Rule :—All crime is local; the jurisdiction over the crime belongs to the country where the crime is committed—Macleod v Attorney-General, L R (1891) A.C. 458 Crimes in their nature are local, and the jurisdiction of crimes is local—Rafael v Verelst, 2 Blackstone, p. 1058 Crime is purely local i.e. depends on the law of the place in which it is committed, and not on the nationality of the person who commits it—Sirdar Gurdayal v. Rajah of Furidkote, [1894] A.C. 670. Therefore British Indian Courts have no jurisdiction to try for offences committed and completed outside the British territory—Ibrahim v. Emp., 1894 P.R. 7, Q. E v Ranchhod, 2 Bom L.R. 337; Siddha v Biligiri, 7 Mad. 354; Anonymous, 6 M H C R App. 3. As to the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts over offences committed by subjects of the Crown in places outside British India, see sec 188.

548. Offence :—This chapter deals with the place of inquiry and trial in respect of offences only; an application under sec. 488 for maintenance is not a complaint of an offence, and the provisions of this section are not applicable to determine the jurisdiction of a Court competent to entertain such application—Hildephonsus v. Malone, 1885 P R 13, Bishen Das v Nanaki, 1893 P R 3. Contra —Bibi Nur v. Shah Walait, 1883 P.R. 9 and In re Malcolm De Castro, 13 All 348, where it was held that neglect to maintain a wife being an offence punishable under this Code under sec. 488, the place for its trial must be determined by the provisions of this Chapter But the recent amendment of sub-section (9) of sec 488 shows that that section does not contemplate any offence

So also, proceedings under Chapter XII are not proceedings in respect of an offence, and therefore sec. 182 does not apply to a proceeding under sec. 145—Maharaja Harbullubh v. Bajrang Das, 3 C.W.N. 148; nor does sec. 185 apply to determine jurisdiction in respect of such proceeding—Rudra Pratap v. Dewan, 12 A.L.J. 390, 15 Cr.L.J. 520.

Similar remarks may also apply to proceedings under Chapters VIII and X.

"Ordinarily".—The word "ordinarily" indicates that this section is a general one and must be read subject to any special provisions of law which may modify it. The rule laid down in this section has been relaxed or modified by several succeeding sections. Thus, this section must be read subject to the special provisions of sec. 197 (2) which override the general rule contained in this section—K. E v Maung Ka, 4 L.B.R. 265.

549. Local Jurisdiction.—Although this section lays down that every offence must be inquired into and tried by the Court within whose jurisdiction it was committed, still if the offence is inquired into or tried by a Magistrate who has no territorial jurisdiction over the place where the offence was committed, it would be at most an irregularity which would be cured by sec. 531 if such commitment or trial has occasioned no failure of justice—Rayan Kuttu v Emp., 26 Mad 640; Asst. Sessions Judge v Ramammal, 36 Mad 387, Emp. v. Doraisamy, 30 Mad. 94. Where a Magistrate, being empowered to commit to the sessions, but having no territorial jurisdiction over the place in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, commits a case to a Sessions Court which has jurisdiction over the place, the commitment is valid and cannot be quashed under sec. 532, although the objection to such commitment is taken before the commitment—Q. E. v. Abbi Redi, 17 Mad 402. But no Judge or Magistrate can try or pass an order of committal in respect of an offence committed outside the Province altogether. Such a trial or order of committal is illegal and the illegality cannot be cured by section 531—Bhagwatia v. Q. E., 3 Pat. 417 (422), 26 Cr.L.J. 49, A.I.R. 1925 Pat 187.

Commitment to wrong Sessions.—Where a Magistrate commits a case to a Sessions Court other than the one within whose local jurisdiction the offence has been committed, the commitment is merely irregular and would be cured by sec. 531, and the High Court will not quash the commitment but will direct the transfer of the case to the Court having jurisdiction—Q. E v. Thaku, 8 Bom. 312; Q. E. v. Atmaram, 2 Bom. L.R. 394, Q. E. v. Ram Dei, 18 All 350. But the Madras High Court, dissenting from the above cases, and following the Privy Council ruling in Ledgerd v. Bull, 9 All 191, has laid down that a commitment to a Sessions Court having no territorial jurisdiction over the offence is illegal and must be set aside, and the High Court would not be justified in upholding the commitment and directing the transfer of the case to the proper Sessions Court—Asst. Sessions Judge v. Ramammal, 36 Mad. 387 (391). This is also the view of the Patna High Court in Bhagwatia v. K. E., 3 Pat. 417, 26 Cr.L.J. 49. But where a commitment was made to the High Court Sessions in respect of two offences, one of which was committed within, and the other without, the original jurisdiction of the High Court, held that the High Court could, on the grounds of expediency and convenience, proceed with the trial, the irregularity being cured by sec. 531. Even if the High Court had no jurisdiction on its original side to try the case, an order could be made under sec. 526 directing the trial to take place at the High Court Sessions. And the High Court ordered accordingly—Ganapathi v. Rex, 42 Mad 791, 37 M.L.J. 60, 20 Cr.L.J. 484.

Several offences —Where two different offences are committed in the course of the same transaction, the case should be tried by a Magistrate who has jurisdiction to try both the offences; it would not be a proper course that a Magistrate who has jurisdiction over one of them should try that offence, leaving the other to be tried by another Magistrate. Such a procedure would be highly inconvenient—In re Ponnusami, 2 Weir 144.

550. Holding trial outside British India :—The mere fact that an offence has been committed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a District Magistrate would not enable him to try that offence at some place outside British India—Q. E. v. Maniklal, Ratanlal 376.

551. Effect of irregular arrest :—The irregularity of an arrest is not a ground for invalidating all proceedings and trials subsequent to the arrest—Sobha v. Emp., 1899 P.R. 6; Crown v. Gobinda, 1911 P.R. 1. Thus, a Magistrate should not acquit an accused merely because the officer who arrested the accused did not belong to the circle in which the arrest was made—Emp. v. Ravalu, 26 Mad 124. And so, where the subject of a Native State, who having committed an offence in British India escaped into the Native State, was arrested by the British police without the intervention of that State, held that the subsequent trial and conviction of the accused were not affected by the irregularity of the arrest—Sobha v. Emp., 1899 P.R. 6.

552. Effect of transfer of territory to Native State :—Where an offence was committed in a place within British territory, but some time after the commitment of the case to the Court of Session and before the commencement of the trial, the place in which the offence was committed ceased to be a British territory and became part of a Native State, it was held that this fact did not oust the jurisdiction of the British Court to try the offence—K. E. v. Ram Naresh, 34 All. 118, 9 A.L.J. 51; K. E. v. Ganga, 9 A.L.J. 696, 34 All. 451. Similarly, if, pending an appeal from a conviction, the place where the offence had been committed was transferred to a Native State, it was held that this transfer of territory did not deprive the Court in which the appeal had been filed of its jurisdiction to hear it—Mahabir v. K. E., 33 All. 578, 8 A.L.J. 630.

178. Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 177, the Local Government may direct that any cases or class of cases committed for trial in any district may be tried in any sessions divisions :

Provided that such direction is not repugnant to any direction previously issued by the High Court under Section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or Section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, or under this Code, Section 526.

553. Local Government's power in Burma :—The Local Government of Burma has no power to transfer a case committed to the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon for trial, to the Court of the Commissioner. But it can transfer a case from the District of Rangoon to the Sessions Judge of Pegu—Q. E. v. Nga Tha, 10 Cal. 643.

179. When a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of any thing which has been done, and of any consequence which has ensued, such offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done, or any such consequence has ensued.

Accused triable in district where act is done or where consequence ensues.

Illustrations.

(a) A is wounded within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court X, and dies within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Z. The offence of the culpable homicide of A may be inquired into or tried by X or Z.

(b) A is wounded within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court X, and is, during ten days within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Y, and during ten days more within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Z, unable in the local limits of the jurisdiction of either Court Y or Court Z to follow his ordinary pursuits. The offence of causing grievous hurt to A may be inquired into or tried by X, Y or Z.

(c) A is put in fear of injury within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court X, and is thereby induced, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Y, to deliver property to the person who put him in fear. The offence of extortion committed on A may be inquired into or tried either by X or Y.

(d) A is wounded in the Native State of Baroda, and dies of his wounds in Poona. The offence of causing A's death may be inquired into and tried in Poona.

554. Scope of section —This section applies when the act (or omission) is an offence by reason of anything which has been done and of any consequence which has ensued. But where the act (or omission) is a complete offence irrespective of any consequence which has ensued, this section does not apply, and the offence is to be inquired into and tried only by the Court within whose jurisdiction the act was committed (Sec. 177). Thus—

Examples—(a) The offence of falsification of accounts (sec. 477A, I. P. C.) is complete as soon as the accounts are falsified, and any consequence resulting from it is immaterial for the offence. Therefore, it is to be tried only by the Court within whose jurisdiction the accounts were falsified, and not by any other Court—Swaminathan v. Annamalai, 4 M.L.T. 481, 9 Cr. L.J. 92.

(b) Where a person who was assaulted by the accused in Baroda had his leg completely broken there and then came to British India where he remained for 2 months in the hospital, it was held that the offence of grievous hurt was complete in Baroda by the fracture of the leg, irrespective of any consequence (viz. the injured man lying in hospital) ensuing in British India, therefore the offence could not be tried in British India—Sirdar Meru v. Jethabhai, 8 Bom. L.R. 513.

(c) Where a dacoity was committed in a Native State and some stolen property was found concealed by the accused in the British territory, it was held that the offence of dacoity was complete in the Native State, irrespective of retaining the stolen property in the British territory, and could not be tried in British India—Reg v. Lakhya, 1 Bom. 50.

(d) Where a woman sold in District A her minor girl to a prostitute, who took the girl to District B, it was held that the offence of selling a minor girl for the purposes of prostitution was complete in District A, and that the possession of the girl in District B was not a consequence completing the offence; the Magistrate of District B had no jurisdiction to try the offence—6 Agra 46.

(e) The offence of infringement of copyright is complete as soon as the book infringing the copyright is printed, and it does not depend for its completion upon any consequence (e.g. loss of money to the complainant) such as is contemplated by Sec. 179. Therefore, the offence is to be inquired into and tried under Sec. 177 at the place where the infringing book was printed—Kalidas v. Karam Chand, 1916 P.R. 28, 18 Cr. L.J. 353.

(f) Where a person consigned some goods from District F to District K, and the consignee misappropriated the goods at K, it was held that the consignee could be tried in K and not in F, because the accused was not charged by reason of any consequence or loss which ensued to the consignor at F, but solely by reason of what was alleged to have been done at K—Nirbhai Ram v. Kallu Ram, 4 O.C. 376.

(g) Where a complaint was made before a Magistrate at Aligarh that a person had dishonestly and fraudulently, two days after he became insolvent, realised at Calcutta the money due in respect of certain hundies which the complainant purchased, it was held that the offence should be inquired into at Calcutta where the offence (sec. 415 I. P. C.) was committed and not at Aligarh where the loss ensued to the complainant—Babu Lal v. Ghansham, 5 A.L.J. 333.

(h) Where the offence of kidnapping is committed outside British India, the subsequent act of conveying the kidnapped person to British India is not such a consequence as is contemplated by this section, so as to give jurisdiction to a British Indian Court over the offence committed outside British India—Bhuta Santal v. Dama Santal, 20 C.W.N. 62, 17 Cr.L.J. 128; Jai Mal Singh v. Q. E., 1901 P.R. 1, Crown v. Koochri, 7 S.L.R. 17, 14 Cr.L.J. 439.

(i) Two persons were alleged to have induced another to purchase a barrel at Meerut on the false representation that the barrel contained a certain quantity of spirits. At Agra it was discovered that the quantity was less than what it was represented to contain. It was held that the Agra Court had no jurisdiction, because the offence of fraud had been committed at Meerut, and that sec 179 did not apply in as much as the discovery of the fraud after the delivery of the article was not a 'consequence which has ensued' within the meaning of the section—Pragdas v. Daulatram, 13 A.L.J. 1067, 16 Cr.L.J. 825

(j) Where a petition under sec 21 of the Income Tax Act (1916) was falsely verified at a place in the Tanjore District and was presented in the Ramnad District, held that the offence of false verification was completed in the Tanjore District, and the Ramnad Magistrate had no jurisdiction—In re Mohideen, 45 Mad 839, 43 M.L.J. 475, 23 Cr.L.J. 619

(k) The accused sent from Madras a V. P. parcel to the complainant at Hyderabad in consequence of an order by the complainant for some tea. The complainant paid the V. P. amount, and took delivery of the parcel which on opening was found to contain only saw-dust. In a trial on a charge of cheating preferred by the complainant against the accused at Madras, held that the deceit and the delivery of the parcel in consequence of the deceit were complete when the money was handed over to the Post office at Hyderabad, and the subsequent delivery of the money by the Post office to the accused at Madras was not a necessary ingredient of the offence, and the offence being committed wholly at Hyderabad, sec 179 did not apply and the Madras Court had no jurisdiction to try the offence—Kaleek v. Emp. 52 M.L.J. 511, 28 Cr.L.J. 452

555. Criminal misappropriation:—In case of the offence of criminal misappropriation or breach of trust, the consequence of wrongful gain or wrongful loss is not an essential part of the crime, and a person is not accused of the offence by reason of it, therefore the offence is triable where the dishonest use or disposal took place, and not where the loss ensued to the complainant—Rambilas v. Emp. 38 Mad 639, 29 M.L.J. 175; Simhachalam v. Ratu Kanta, 44 Cal 912, 21 C.W.N. 573; Jaw Karan v. Sargno, 1 P.L.T. 200, 21 Cr.L.J. 519, Banerjee v. Potnis, 20 N.L.R. 72, 25 Cr.L.J. 922, Abdul Salam v. Ramnewal, 21 Cr.L.J. 149; Abdul Haq v. Emp. 23 Cr.L.J. 743 (Lah), Ahmed Ibrahim v. Haji A. Gunny, 1 Rang 56, 24 Cr.L.J. 746 In Asst Sessions Judge v. Ramasami, 38 Mad 779, however, where certain jewels were entrusted to a person in a Native State for sale on commission, and he converted the jewels to his own use, it was held that since the loss of the jewels, which was the consequence, occurred in British India (where the complainant resided) the Magistrate of the British Indian Court had jurisdiction under this section. See also Behari Lal v. Gangadin, 27 Cr.L.J. 1104 (All.), where the forum of trial of the offence of criminal misappropriation was decided with reference to the place where the consequence of criminal misappropriation took place. See also Q. E. v. O'Brien, 19 All 111 and Abdul Latif v. Abu Md Kasim, 26 C.W.N. 175 where it is held that the offence of criminal breach of trust by an agent can be tried by the Court having jurisdiction in the place where the principal resides. This difference of opinion hangs upon the different interpretation put on the word "consequence" occurring in this section. See Note 557 infra, and Note 563 under sec 181. In a recent Allahabad case it has been held that the offence of criminal misappropriation may be tried either at the place where the offence was committed or at the place where the consequence ensued (i.e. where the complainant suffered loss)—Md Rashid Khan v. Emp, 27 Cr.L.J. 992 (All.).

556. Cases where either Court has jurisdiction:—

Where an act is an offence by reason of any consequence which has ensued, the offence is triable either by the Court within whose jurisdiction the act was committed or by the Court within whose jurisdiction the consequence has ensued. Thus:—

(a) Where a petition presented to a person at Lahore contained defamatory statements against another, and was published at Amritsar, it was held that the Amritsar Court had jurisdiction to try the offence of defamation, because the publication at Amritsar completed the offence and was a consequence by reason of which the accused was charged with the offence of defamation—Mahesh Das v. Emp, 1885 P.R. 44

(b) Where A sent goods by Railway from Karachi to Lahore under a false description, the Court at Lahore could under this section try A for the offence of cheating, as the consequence of A's act, viz., the loss of freight to the Railway Company was an ingredient of the offence and took place at Lahore, the Headquarters of the Railway Company—Ghulam Ali v. Q. E., 1900 P.R. 7

(c) In fulfilment of a contract the accused consigned several tins of groundnut oil at Salem (Madras) to the complainant at Dhulia (Bombay). The tins when opened were found to contain groundnut oil mixed with rock oil. The complainant thereupon filed a complaint of cheating in the Magistrate's Court at Dhulia. Held that the Dhulia Court had jurisdiction, for the deception took place at Dhulia where the complainant became the victim of the deceit in consequence of the accused's act—Emp v. Jamnadas, 17 Bom L.R. 389, 16 Cr.L.J. 433, Yusuf Ali v. Wahajuddin, 12 A.L.J. 1022, 16 Cr.L.J. 719.

(d) Where an alleged defamatory letter is written and posted in Madras with a view to its being read at Tinnevely, the offence of defamation is triable either in Madras or in Tinnevely—Krishnamurti v. Parasurama, 44 M.L.J. 648, 32 M.L.T. 164, 24 Cr.L.J. 309.

(e) Where the accused residing at Lahore recovered money from a Bank at Bombay on a forged draft of the Amritsar Branch of the Punjab National Bank of Lahore, it was held that the Lahore Court has jurisdiction to try the accused for an offence under sec. 420 I.P.C., as the consequence (viz., loss to the P. N. Bank) contemplated by this section ensued at Lahore where the Head Office of the Bank was situated—Ishar Das v. K. E., 1908 P.W.R. 18, 8 Cr.L.J. 75.

(f) The offence of cheating may be tried either at the place where the cheating was committed (where the accused resided) or at the place where the complainant resided—Girdhar v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 621, 24 Cr.L.J. 929.

557. Consequence :—The 'consequence' mentioned in this Section is the primary consequence, and not any secondary consequence of the offence. The primary consequence should be taken into consideration in determining the jurisdiction. Thus, where an accused living in Nandyal was appointed agent for the sale of the oil of the complainant living in Madras, and when called on to account the accused failed to do so, it was held that the offence of criminal breach of trust was triable at Nandyal and not at Madras, because the firm's loss at Nandyal was a primary consequence, and the loss at Madras, the firm's head quarters where the funds were kept, is a secondary one which is not sufficient to attract the operation of this section—Krishnamachari v. Shaw Wallace & Co., 39 Mad. 576, 16 Cr.L.J. 491. The same view is taken in Gunananda v. Senti, 26 Cr.L.J. 725, 29 C.W.N. 432; Rambilas v. Emp., 38 Mad. 639; Simhachalam v. Ratikanta, 44 Cal. 912; and Ganesh Lal v. Nand Kishore, 34 All. 487, 10 A.L.J. 45. But in Langridge v. Atkins, 35 All. 29, Sheo Shankar v. Mohan, 19 A.L.J. 69, Emp. v. Ramratan, 46 Bom. 641, Mahadeo v. K. E., 32 All. 397, Uttam Chand v. Emp., 1902 P.R. 2, Lakhmi Chand v. Emp., 1901 P.R. 24, Q. E. v. Obrien, 19 All. 111, Asst Sess. Judge v. Ramasami, 38 Mad. 779, Abdul Latif v. Abu Md. Kasim, 26 C.W.N. 175, Govind v. Emp., 22 S.L.R. 404, 30 Cr.L.J. 249, and Md. Rashid Khan v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 992 (All.), a wider interpretation has been put on the word 'consequence' which has been taken to include such secondary consequence as loss resulting to the employer, by criminal breach of trust or failure to account for moneys misappropriated, at the head office of the firm; and the Court of the place where such secondary consequence ensues has been held to have jurisdiction over the offence. See also Note 563 under sec. 181.

Offence in Native State—Consequence in British India—See 38 Mad. 779 cited above. See the same case cited under sec. 188.

Illustrations :—The illustrations are not exhaustive, and to hold that all the consequences prescribed by the Legislature as conferring jurisdiction are limited to those specified in the illustrations is not justified by the language of the section—Ishar Das v. K. E., 1908 P.W.R. 18, 8 Cr.L.J. 75. The illustration (d) to this section must be applied with certain restriction. The offender in that illustration must be taken to be a subject of the British Government, and a certificate of the Political Agent must be obtained under sec. 188 before he can be tried. If the offender is a subject of the Native State, he cannot be tried by the British Courts.

180. When an act is an offence by reason of its relation to any other act which is also an offence or which would be an offence if the doer were capable of committing an offence, a charge of the first-mentioned offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction either act was done.

Illustrations.

(a) A charge of abetment may be inquired into or tried either by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the abetment was committed, or by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offence abetted was committed.

(b) A charge of receiving or retaining stolen goods may be inquired into or tried either by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the goods were stolen, or by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any of them were at any time dishonestly received or retained.

(c) A charge of wrongfully concealing a person known to have been kidnapped may be inquired into or tried by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the wrongful concealing, or by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the kidnapping, took place.

558. Scope of section—Foreign territory :—The Code extends only to British territory, and the present section assumes the offence therein indicated to have been committed in a local jurisdiction created by the Code. Therefore, where a foreign subject in a foreign territory instigated the commission of an offence which was in consequence committed in British territory, it was held that the instigation not having taken place in any district created by this Code, the instigator was not amenable to the jurisdiction of a British Court—Reg v. Pirtai, 10 B.H.C.R. 356; Kishen Koer v. Crown, 1878 P.R. 20. When a house-breaking took place in a district in British India, and a non-British subject residing in a Native State was found to be in possession of the stolen property, held, that that person was not triable by the British Courts—Md. Hussain v. Crown, 2 Lah.L.J. 348, 23 Cr.L.J. 560. The operation of this Code cannot be extended beyond the British territory, so as to give jurisdiction to a British Court to try a non-British subject residing outside British India for the offence of retaining stolen properties, although the theft of those properties might have taken place in British India—Moheswari v. K. E., 18 C.W.N. 1178, 15 Cr.L.J. 537; Q. E. v. Kirpal Singh, 9 All 523, Reg v. Bechar, 4 B.H.C.R. 38. If, however, an Indian British subject is found in the Native State in possession of property stolen in British India, he can be tried by a Court in British India under this section, but a certificate of the Political Agent under sec. 188 would be necessary—Sessions Judge v. Sundara, 8 M.L.T. 54, 11 Cr.L.J. 306.

If, however, the contrary things happen, i.e., if the theft takes place outside British territory, and the stolen property is brought within British India, the offence of retaining stolen property may be tried in British India, although the offence of theft which was committed outside British India cannot be tried here—Q. E. v. Abdul Latib, 10 Bom. 186, Reg. v. Lakhya, 1 Bom. 50; Emp. v. Sunkur, 6 Cal. 307. Contra—Emp. v. Moorga Chetty, 5 Bom. 338 and Anonymous, 2 Weir 145. These two decisions are however no longer good law in view of the words "whether the transfer has been made or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed within or without British India" added to Sec 410 I. P. C. by the Penal Code Amendment Act VIII of 1882.

559. Abetment :—Where a person sends a letter to another through post inciting him to the commission of an offence, he is guilty of the offence of abetment as soon as the letter is received by and the contents known to the addressee, and is triable at the place where the letter is received—Q. E. v. Sheo Dial, 16 All. 389.

Although an abetment of an offence might have taken place outside the territorial jurisdiction of a Magistrate, yet under this section the abettor can be tried by a Magistrate within whose territorial jurisdiction the offence abetted was committed—In re Chinnannagoud, 1 Weir 155.

Where the abetment of the offence, as well as the offence itself, is committed in N (a place in the province of Bengal) but the abettor has a house in J (a place in the province of Behar), the charge of abetment should be inquired into and tried in N and not in J. A committal order in respect of the charge of abetment passed by a Court in Behar is without jurisdiction and must be quashed. If the abetment is committed both in a place inside the province of Behar, as well as in a place outside that province, it may be inquired into and tried in a Court of Behar—Bhagwalla v. K. E., 3 Pat. 417 (424), 26 Cr.L.J. 49.

Abetment in British India of offence committed outside British India.—Where a British subject abets in British India an offence committed outside British India, he may under the amended section 108A I. P. C. be tried in British India—Q. E. v. Baku, 24 Bom. 287. In view of sec 108A I. P. C. the decision in Q. E. v. Ganpatrai, 19 Bom. 105 is no longer good law.

560. Conspiracy—The offence of an attempt to murder a person in district R in pursuance of a conspiracy entered into in district M can be inquired into and tried in either of the two districts—Gurdit Singh v. Crown, 1917 P.R. 24, 18 Cr.L.J. 514. But the Calcutta High Court is of opinion that if a conspiracy is entered into in District A and acts are committed in pursuance of that conspiracy in District B, the Magistrate of District A can try the conspiracy but cannot try the accused in the same trial for acts committed outside his district. Even the fact that the offences could have been tried jointly under sec 239 if committed within his jurisdiction will not give him jurisdiction to try them—Bissessar v. Emp., 28 C.W.N. 975, A I R 1924 Cal. 1034, 26 Cr.L.J. 207.

181. (1) The offence of being a thug, of being a thug and committing murder, of dacoity with murder, of having belonged to a gang of dacoits, or of having escaped from custody, may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person charged is.

(2) The offence of criminal misappropriation or of criminal breach of trust may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused person or the offence was committed.

(3) The offence of stealing anything may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such thing was stolen or was possessed by the thief or by any person who received or retained the same knowing or having reason to believe it to be stolen.

(3) The offence of theft or any offence which includes theft or the possession of stolen property, may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such offence was committed or the property stolen was possessed by the thief or by any person who received or retained the same knowing or having reason to believe it to be stolen.

(4) The offence of kidnapping or abduction may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person kidnapped or abducted was kidnapped or abducted or was conveyed or concealed or detained.

560A. Change —Sub-section (3) has been redrafted by sec. 42 of the Crim Pro Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, but the actual change effected by this redrafting is the addition of the words "or any offence which includes theft or possession of stolen property." "We accept this clause but would enlarge the enumeration of offences to include the possession of stolen property. This will also cover the case of extortion. See the definition in sec. 410 I. P. C."—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

As a result of this amendment, sec. 181 (3) means that the offence of being in possession of stolen property may be inquired into either at the place where it was stolen or where it was found to be dishonestly possessed. This indeed is expressly stated in Illustration (b) to sec. 180. It must be conceded that the language of sub-section (3) of sec. 181 is open to objection. The words 'such offence' are intended to mean the offence of theft, but grammatically these words would mean any offence of possession of stolen property—Emp v Bhima, 24 A L.J. 148, 27 Cr.L.J. 21 (22), A.I.R. 1926 All. 167.

561. Scope of section .—This section does not apply to the case of an offence committed by a person who is not a British subject, outside British territory. This section is intended to regulate the jurisdiction of Courts in British India, in respect of offences committed in British India, and cannot vary or abrogate the ordinary rule that no foreign subject can be tried in British India for an offence committed outside British India—Emp. v Baldewa, 28 All. 372. This section only applies as between Courts of different local areas whose jurisdiction has been limited under sec. 12—Imp. v. Tribhun, 5 S L.R. 266; Reg. v. Adivigadu, 1 Mad. 171.

Thus, where a dacoity or theft was committed in a Native State, and part of the stolen property was found to have been concealed by the accused in British territory, held that the offence of dacoity could not be tried by British Indian Courts, although the offence of retaining stolen property could be tried by such Courts, the retaining having taken place in British territory—Reg. v. Lakhya, 1 Bom 50; Q E v Abdul Latif, 10 Bom. 186; and Emp. v. Sunkur, 6 Cal 307 cited under sec 180; see also Reg v. Adivigadu, 1 Mad 171. When a person escaped from lawful custody in a Native State and came into British India, held that the British Court had no jurisdiction to try him for an offence under sec. 224 I.P.C., as it was committed out of British India—Q E v Souza, Ratanlal 870. So also, where a criminal breach of trust was committed in a Native State, a Court in British India had no jurisdiction—Imp v. Tribhun, 5 S L R 266, 13 Cr L J. 530. Where the offence of kidnapping was committed out of British India, and the minor was brought into British India, a British Court had no jurisdiction as the offence was complete out of British India, even the fact that the person kidnapped was conveyed to British India would not give the British Court jurisdiction, because the words 'was conveyed' in this section do not import any separate or distinct offence, where the offence was complete previous to such conveying—Jamal Singh v Emp, 1901 P.R. 1, Crown v Koochri, 7 S L R. 17, 14 Cr L.J. 439, Bhuta Santal v Dama, 20 C.W N. 62, 17 Cr.L J 128. The complainant sent a sum of money from Burma to the accused, who was his agent in Japan. The accused misappropriated the money whereupon the complainant took criminal proceedings in Rangoon. Held that the offence of criminal misappropriation was complete when the conversion was done with the intent of causing wrongful gain to the offender, and did not depend on the consequence of wrongful loss which had ensued to the complainant. The conversion having taken place in Japan, the Rangoon Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint—Ahmed Ebrahim v. Hajee Abdul Ganny, 1 Rang 56, 24 Cr.L.J. 746.

562. Belonging to a gang of dacoits.—Where a resident of a Native State was arrested in that State and was brought before a Court in British India and charged with the offence of belonging to a gang of dacoits who had committed dacoities within the jurisdiction of that Court, it was held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction over the accused, as the accused was within his district at the time of the charge—Crown v. Govinda, 1911 P R 1, 12 Cr.L.J. 113.

"Is".—The word 'is' at the end of sub-section (1) does not mean 'is of his own accord'. The Magistrate has jurisdiction, whether the accused has come within the local limits of his jurisdiction of his own accord or has been brought there by force (i.e., under arrest)—Ibid.

563. Criminal misappropriation etc.—See Nirbhai Ram v. Kallu Ram, 4 O C 376, Rambilas v. Emp, 38 Mad. 639, Simhachalam v. Ratikanta, 44 Cal 912, Langridge v. Atkins, 35 All. 29, Abdul Latif v. Md. Karim, 26 C W N 175, Q. E. v. Obrien, 19 All. 111, Krishnamachari v. Shaw Wallace & Co., 39 Mad 576, and Ganesh v. Nand Kishore, 34 All. 487 cited under Sec. 179. In all these cases, the applicability or non-applicability of sec. 179 to cases of criminal misappropriation or breach of trust was decided with reference to the meaning of the word 'consequence' occurring in that section. But in some other cases it has been held that since the offence of criminal misappropriation or breach of trust is specifically provided for in sec. 181, the place of trial of the offence must be determined in accordance with the provisions of this section, without reference to the 'consequence' mentioned in sec. 179. See Mahlab Din v. Emp, 25 Cr.L.J. 410, A I R 1924 Lah 663; Dina Nath v. Tulsu Ram, 6 Lah L.J. 471, 26 Cr.L.J. 136; Ganananda v. Santi Prakash, 29 C W N. 432, 26 Cr.L.J. 725. The Allahabad High Court also recently holds that in respect of the offence of criminal breach of trust, sec. 179 is controlled by sec. 181, and the offence can only be inquired into and tried by the Court within whose jurisdiction the offence was committed or the property (the subject of the offence) was received or retained by the accused. Therefore, where the complainant residing at Basti appointed the accused as his commission agent in Bombay, and advanced money to him from time to time to purchase and sell goods at Bombay on behalf of the complainant, but the accused misappropriated the money including the profits derived from the purchase and sale of goods on behalf of the complainant, held that the Basti Court had no jurisdiction to try the offence of criminal breach of trust, which was triable by the Bombay

Court alone—Gurdhar v. K. E., 21 A.L.J. 621, 24 Cr.L.J. 929, A.I.R. 1924 All 77. Where the complainant charged the accused under Sec 408 I. P. C. alleging that the complainant had engaged the accused to manage a branch firm at Rurki, that accounts were sent by the accused to Rawalpindi for some time but subsequently discontinued, and that on inspection of accounts it was found that the accused had made false entries in respect of certain items it was held that in as much as the allegation in the complaint referred to specific items in respect of which the accused was charged with having committed the offence of criminal breach of trust at Rurki, the Rawalpindi Court had no jurisdiction to try the case—Crown v. Raghubir, 1915 P R 22. Where the accused is under a liability to render accounts at a particular place and fails to do so by reason of his having committed an offence of criminal breach of trust which is alleged against him, the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction that place is situated may inquire into and try the offence under the provisions of this section—Gunananda v. Santi Prakash, 29 C.W.N. 432, 41 C.L.J. 80, 26 Cr.L.J. 725, Yacoub v. Abdul Gunny, 6 Rang. 380, 29 Cr.L.J. 940; Ram Sahai v. Krishna, 27 Cr.L.J. 900, A.I.R. 1926 Lah 119, 7 Lah.L.J. 580. Where the accused was entrusted with a railway receipt for goods in one district with instructions to take delivery of the goods at their destination in another district and to sell them on complainant's account, and the accused sold them and misappropriated the sale-proceeds, it was held that the offence was triable by the Court within the jurisdiction of which the goods were sold and the money was received and misappropriated. It was held further that the "property which was the subject of the offence" in this case was not the railway receipt but the money received on sale of the goods—Kasi Chetty v. Kasi Chetty, 10 Bur.L.T. 50, 18 Cr.L.J. 645.

In view of the specific provisions contained in sec 181 (2) with regard to the jurisdiction of the Courts to try the offence of criminal breach of trust, a Court within whose jurisdiction the property which is the subject matter of the offence was received or retained, has jurisdiction to try such offence even though the actual offence is committed outside its limits. Even if the property is received quite properly and innocently at one place and is subsequently dealt with at another place dishonestly by the accused, he can be tried at the place where he received or retained the property—Emp v. Laxman, 51 Bom 101, 28 Bom.L.R. 1292, 28 Cr.L.J. 44.

Sub-section (3).—The offences of theft and the possession of stolen property cannot be tried by a Magistrate if neither the offence of theft was committed nor the property possessed within his jurisdiction, even though a conspiracy to commit these offences was entered into in a place within his jurisdiction—Bissesswar v. Emp, 28 C.W.N. 975, 26 Cr.L.J. 207.

564. Sub-section (4) -Scope—This sub-section refers only to cases of kidnapping and abduction, but it does not apply to offences under Chapter XX of the I P C., e.g. detaining a married woman for the purpose of illicit intercourse. Such offence is to be inquired into only in the district where the detention of the woman occurs—Jaswant v. Crown, 1918 P.L.R. 51, 18 Cr.L.J. 438.

Kidnapping—Sub-section (4) was for the first time added in the Code of 1898. Prior to 1898, it was held that the offence of kidnapping, not being a continuing offence, could be tried only by the Court within the local limits of which the minor was taken out, and not by the Court within whose jurisdiction the minor was confined—Emp. v. Surja, 1883 A.W.N. 164; Emp. v. Prasadi, 1887 A.W.N. 139; nor by the Court within whose jurisdiction such minor was conveyed—Emp. v. Budha, 1883 A.W.N. 67. But these decisions are no longer good law. See also Q. E. v. Ramdei, 18 All. 350, Q. E. v. Ram Sundar, 19 All. 109, Emp. v. Tika, 26 All. 197, Nema v. Q. E., 27 Cal. 1041, Rakhal v. Q. E., 2 C.W.N. 81, where it has been held that the offence of kidnapping is not a continuing offence but is complete as soon as the minor is taken out of the custody of the lawful guardian.

The words 'kidnapping' and 'abduction' do not include an offence of wrongfully confining or keeping in confinement a kidnapped person—Badlu v. Emperor, 25 Cr.L.J. 552, A.I.R. 1924 All. 545, 21 A.L.J. 912. A girl was kidnapped in the Budaun district by D and B. These men took the girl to a place in Etah district where they met two other men H and A, and the four men then took the girl to Karnal district in Panjab to the house of one Dallu. Held that the offence committed by D and B (viz kidnapping, sec. 366 I.P.C.) may be tried in Budaun, Etah, or Karnal, the offence committed by H and A (viz keeping in confinement a kidnapped person, sec. 368 I.P.C.) should be tried in Etah, and the offence committed by Dallu (sec. 368 I.P.C.) should be tried in Karnal—Ibid.

A person kidnapped outside British India and conveyed into British territory cannot be tried by British Courts. See Bhuta Santal v. Dama Santal, 20 C.W.N. 62, Jai Mal Singh v. Crown, 1901 P.R. 1 and Crown v. Koochri, 7 S.L.R. 17 cited under Note 561 above.

182. When it is uncertain in which of several local

Place of inquiry or trial where scene of offence is uncertain or not in one district only or where offence is continuing or consists of several acts.

areas an offence was committed, or where an offence is committed partly in one local area and partly in another, or where an offence is a continuing one, and continues to be committed in more local areas than one, or where it consists of several acts done in different local areas, it may be inquired into or tried by a Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas.

565. Object of section—This section intends to provide for the difficulty which would arise where there is a conflict between the different areas, in order to prevent an accused person from getting off entirely because there may be some doubt as to what particular Magistrate has jurisdiction to try the case—Bichitranand v. Bhagbut, 16 Cal. 667. Where there is an uncertainty in which of two districts the scene of an alleged offence lies, sec 182 is applicable and the offence may be tried by the Court of either district—Punardeo v Ram Saran, 25 Cal. 858. Thus, where the accused who was a travelling agent of a firm, employed to sell goods, sold the goods, and misappropriated some of the money, and it was not possible to say exactly where the various acts of embezzlement took place, it was held that according to the first para of this section the accused was triable either at the place where the firm was situated or at one of the various districts through which the accused travelled—Mahadeo v. K. E., 32 All 397, 7 A.L.J. 319.

If a defamatory letter is posted in Madras with a view to its being read in Tinnevely, the offence of defamation is triable either in Madras or in Tinnevely under sec 179 or 182—Krishnamurthi v. Parasurama, 44 M.L.J. 648, 24 Cr.L.J. 309. An offence under section 134 of the Companies Act, 1913 (default in filing balance sheet), even though the Company is situate outside Calcutta, can be tried by the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, because the office of the Registrar of joint stock companies with whom the balance sheet is to be filed is in Calcutta—Debendra v. Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, 45 Cal 486, 490.

Where in a case of uncertainty as to local area, the trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence was triable in his Court, but the accused moved the District Magistrate, who relying upon the report of a S. D. O. held that the offence should be tried in another Court, and quashed the proceedings held before the trying Magistrate, held that the District Magistrate ought to have issued notice to the complainant and come to a proper finding of his own on the question of the local jurisdiction, instead of relying solely on the report of the S. D. O.; held further that the District Magistrate could not quash the proceedings but ought to have made a reference to the High Court—Kasim Ali v Md. Tafajjal, 49 C.L.J. 62, 30 Cr.L.J. 401 (402).

Continuing offence :—If a person has several adulterous sexual intercourses with a woman at several places, the offence committed is not a continuing offence, nor does it consist of 'several acts done in different local areas'—In re Shankar, 53 Bom 69, 30 Cr.L.J. 54 (55).

566. Local area .—The words 'local area' mean a local area to which the Code applies, and not a local area in a foreign country or in a portion of the British Empire to which the Code has no application—Bichitranand v Bhagbut, 16 Cal 667. Moreover, the expression includes Sessions Division, District or Sub-division, and cannot be restricted to mean the scene of an alleged occurrence only. Therefore this section applies where the place of occurrence is known but it is doubtful to which sessions division the place belongs—Punardeo v Ram Saran, 25 Cal. 858.

183. An offence committed whilst the offender is in the course of performing a journey or voyage may be inquired into or tried by a Court through or into the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offender, or the person against whom, or the thing in respect of which, the offence was committed, passed in the course of that journey or voyage.

567. Object and Scope—The object of this section is to remove doubts and inconveniences as regards the exact locality in which the offences alleged to have occurred in a journey or voyage had been actually committed or completed—Q v Malony, 1 M.H.C.R. 193.

But this section only applies where the offence is committed in British India and not in a foreign territory. The word 'journey' does not include a journey in a foreign territory but is confined in its meaning to a journey within the territories of British India. Where during the course of a journey through foreign territory and British India, the carrier to whom certain goods were entrusted committed criminal breach of trust in respect of those goods, and there was nothing to show that the offence took place during the journey in British India, the offence could not be tried by any Court in British India—Nadar v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 579 (Lah.).

568. Offence committed in a journey :—Under this section, if a person is accused before a Court of an offence committed during a journey or voyage, he may be tried by that Court if any part of that journey or voyage during which the offence was committed is within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction—Q v. Malony, 1 M.H.C.R. 193. And the Courts competent to try the case of an offender in respect of an offence committed in a journey are the Courts through or into the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offender in the course of the journey passed at the time the offence was committed—Aminulla v. P. M. Guha, 1 C.L.J. 334. Thus, if a theft is committed from a running train, the offence may be said to have been committed during a journey, and it can be inquired into and tried by any Court having jurisdiction over any part of the country through which the train passed during the course of its journey, no matter in whose jurisdiction the offence was committed—Lazarus v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 253 (Lah). Where the offence is committed in the course of a railway journey, the accused can be tried at the place of destination, though the offence was actually committed outside the jurisdiction of that Court—Emp. v. Moulabuz, 25 Cr.L.J. 439, A.I.R. 1925 Sind. 177.

But this section is applicable only when the journey or voyage is continuous and uninterrupted. Therefore, where an offence was alleged to have been committed by the accused in the course of a journey from Bombay to Howrah, but in fact took place between Bombay and Allahabad, at which place both the complainant and the accused broke the journey and then proceeded separately by different trains to Howrah, it was held that the journey from Bombay to Howrah not being continuous, the Magistrate at Howrah had no jurisdiction to try the offence—Q. v. Piran, 21 W.R. 66. Where a guard of a train going from Coimbatore to Madras was found drunk and detained at Arkonam on the way, but he broke away, got into train and arrived at Madras, it was held that the journey must be deemed to have been broken at Arkonam, and the offence (of being drunk, under sec. 27 of the Railways Act) could not be tried at Madras—Q. v. Malony, 1 M.H.C.R. 193.

But any short stoppage in the course of a journey does not break the journey. Thus, where some articles were missed from a boat during a halt at S, in the course of a journey to C, it was held that the journey would not be deemed to have been broken by the halt at S, and that the offence of theft could be tried at C—Q. v. Abdul Ali, 25 W.R. 45.

569. Voyage on High Seas :—This section applies only to the trial of offences committed in British India. The words 'journey or voyage' do not include a voyage on the High Seas, or in a foreign territory, but are confined only to a voyage or journey within the territories of British India—Bapu Daid v. Q. 5 Mad 23.

But in Q. E. v. Ismail, Ratanlal 181, where the accused and the complainant sailed from Bombay to Honawar, and during the voyage the accused threw a box of the complainant into the sea, it was held that the Magistrate at Honawar, through whose jurisdiction the accused passed during the voyage, had jurisdiction to try the offence of mischief (although it was committed on the High Seas, about 9 miles off from the coast).

may be inquired into or tried in a

Court ought to inquire into or try any offence, it shall be decided by that High Court.

(2) Where two or more Courts not subordinate to the same High Court have taken cognizance of the same offence, the High Court within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction the proceedings were first commenced may direct the trial of such offender to be held in any Court subordinate to it, and if it so decides, all other proceedings against such person in respect of such offence shall be discontinued. If such High Court, upon the matter having been brought to its notice, does not so decide, any other High Court within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction such proceedings are pending may give a like direction, and upon its so doing all other such proceedings shall be discontinued.

Change .—This section has been redrafted by sec 43 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 For reasons see below.

570. Sub-section (1) —Nature of the doubt :—The decision of the High Court can be sought not only where the doubt arises as to whether one Court or another has jurisdiction, but also where the doubt is on the point whether the choice between two Courts, both of which have jurisdiction to try the offence, should be decided on the ground of general convenience—Charu Chandra v. Emp., 44 Cal. 595 F.B. (overruling Rajani Benode v. All India Banking Co., 41 Cal. 305); Emp. v. Chaichal, 5 L.B.R. 17, 9 Cr.L.J. 581.

Again, the doubt must be as to the jurisdiction of the Court by which an offence is to be inquired into or tried, and not as to whether a particular Magistrate is competent to try or commit the accused for trial—Emp. v. Clegg, 1887 P.R. 13; Emp. v. Tulak, 3 All. 251. Where no doubt exists as to the jurisdiction of the Court, this section does not apply—Gurdit Singh v. Crown, 1917 P.R. 24, 18 Cr.L.J. 514, Girdhar v. K. E., 21 A.L.J. 621, 24 Cr.L.J. 929.

571. Sub-section (2)—Power of High Court to transfer case from Court outside jurisdiction :—Where the nominee of a policy-holder, resident within the District Chittagong (Bengal) brought a charge of cheating in the Chittagong Magistrate's Court against the Insurance Company having its head office at Gujranwalla (Punjab) and a branch office at Chittagong, and the Insurance Company also brought a charge of cheating against the nominee in the Gujranwalla Magistrate's Court, both charges relating to the payment of the amount secured on the policy, it was held that the Calcutta High Court could properly make an order under sec. 185 to the effect that the offence should be inquired into and tried at Chittagong, and transfer the case from the Court of Gujranwalla to that of Chittagong—Hiran Kumar v. Mangal Sein, 17 C.W.N. 761, 14 Cr.L.J. 398. In another Calcutta case also it was held that this section was comprehensive enough to be applicable to a case instituted in a Court beyond the local limits of the Appellate Criminal Jurisdiction of the High Court where the offender actually was—Charu Chandra v. Emp., 44 Cal. 595 (F.B.), 21 C.W.N. 320. Contra—The Madras High Court, however, was of opinion that the High Court had no power to direct the transfer of a case pending before a Magistrate not subject to its appellate jurisdiction—Mahomed Ghouse v. Nathu, 40 Mad. 835, 18 Cr.L.J. 148.

This subsection has been enacted to remove this conflict of opinion. By adopting the Madras view it practically disallows the High Court to transfer a case from a Court outside its jurisdiction, and lays down a new procedure in case of such contingency. "In view of the conflicting decisions in the Indian Law Reports, 44 Cal. 595, and Indian Law Reports, 40 Mad. 835, it is proposed to make it clear that one High Court has no power, whether by implication or otherwise, to transfer a case to itself from another High Court or vice versa, or to decide which of two other High Courts should try a particular case"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921).

By adopting the simple procedure laid down in this subsection, the High Court will be relieved of the cumbrous procedure of a reference to the Governor-General for an order under sec. 527.

186. (1) When a Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate, a Subdivisional Magistrate or, if he is specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government, a Magistrate of the first class, sees reason to believe that any person within the local limits of his jurisdiction has committed without such limits (whether within or without British India) an offence which cannot under the provisions of Sections 177 to 184 (both inclusive) or any other law for the time being in force, be inquired into or tried within such local limits, but is under some law for the time being in force triable in British India, such Magistrate may inquire into the offence as if it had been committed within such local limits, and compel such person in manner hereinbefore provided to appear before him, and send such person to the Magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into or try such offence, or if such offence is bailable, take a bond with or without sureties, for his appearance before such Magistrate.

Magistrate's procedure on arrest.

to the Magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into or try such offence, or if such offence is bailable, take a bond with or without sureties, for his appearance before such Magistrate.

(2) When there are more Magistrates than one having such jurisdiction and the Magistrate acting under this section cannot satisfy himself as to the Magistrate to or before whom such person should be sent or bound to appear, the case shall be reported for the orders of the High Court.

"Empowered" —If a Magistrate who is not empowered under this section finds that he has no jurisdiction under this Chapter, he can decline jurisdiction—Q. E. v. Ramji, Ratanlal 849 But if a Magistrate not empowered under this section acts in good faith, his proceedings will not be set aside for want of jurisdiction, the defect being cured by sec 529.

572. Power of High Court :—The High Court, under sec. 29 of the Letters Patent, can direct a Magistrate to make a preliminary inquiry and to commit for trial to the Sessions, a case falling within this section. But where the circumstances of a case fall exactly within the terms of this section, the procedure must be governed by such special provision and not by the general provisions of the Letters Patent, except in extremely exceptional cases—Oriental Govt. Security Life Assurance Co. Ltd. v. Masilamani, 2 Weir 146 (147).

573. Issue of warrant from outside jurisdiction :—It is not necessary that the Magistrate issuing the warrant should be present within the local limits of his jurisdiction at the time of issuing it. Where a Magistrate of Ahmedabad District issued from a place in Kathiawar a warrant for the apprehension of a person who was in Ahmedabad for an offence committed in Kathiawar, it was held that the issuing of the warrant from Kathiawar by the Magistrate without being present in the Ahmedabad District in which he had jurisdiction, was not beyond his competency—Reg v. Locha Kala, 1 Bom. 340.

187. (1) If the person has been arrested under a warrant issued under Section 186

Procedure where warrant issued by subordinate Magistrate.

by a Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate, such Magistrate shall send the person arrested to the District or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate, unless the Magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into or try such offence issues his warrant for the arrest of such person, in which case the person arrested shall be delivered to the police-officer executing such warrant or shall be sent to the Magistrate by whom such warrant was issued.

(2) If the offence which the person arrested is alleged or suspected to have committed is one which may be inquired into or tried by any Criminal Court in the same district other than that of the Magistrate acting under Section 186, such Magistrate shall send such person to such Court.

“Send the person to the District Magistrate” :—

Where a British Indian subject was arrested in a British district by a first class Magistrate for an offence committed in a Native State, and the Political Agent's certificate (required by sec. 188) was obtained, it was unnecessary to send the accused to the District Magistrate under this section, and the First Class Magistrate was competent to hold the preliminary inquiry himself—Reg v Kahandas, Ratanlal 97.

188. When a Native Indian subject of Her Majesty commits an offence at any place without and beyond the limits of British India, or

Liability of British subjects for offences committed out of British India.

when any British subject commits an offence in the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India, or when a servant of the Queen (whether a British subject or not) commits an offence in the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India, he may be dealt with in respect of such offence as if it had been committed at any place within British India at which he may be found :

Provided that notwithstanding anything in any of the preceding sections of this chapter, Political Agent to certify fitness of in- no charge as to any such offence
quiry into charge. shall be inquired into in British India unless the Political Agent, if there is one, for the territory in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, certifies that, in his opinion, the charge ought to be inquired into in British India, and, where there is no Political Agent, the sanction of the Local Government shall be required :

Provided, also, that any proceedings taken against any person under this section, which would be a bar to subsequent proceedings against such person for the same offence if such offence had been committed in British India, shall be a bar to further proceedings against him under the Indian Extradition Act, 1903, in respect of the same offence in any territory beyond the limits of British India.

Change :—The italicised words in the first proviso have been added by sec 44 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

In the second proviso, the words "Indian Extradition Act, 1903" have been substituted for the words "Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, 1879." This is consequential to the repeal of the old Act by the Act of 1903.

575. This section controls the preceding sections :—Sections 177 to 184 are controlled by the provisions of sec. 188, so that if the offence specified in those sections (177—184) happen to be committed outside British India, those sections would cease to apply, and the special provision of Sec 188 would come in. Thus, to give concrete illustrations, where the offence of criminal breach of trust was committed in a Native State by a British subject, then according to sec. 181, independently of sec 188, such offence could not have been tried by a British Court. But as secs. 177—184 are controlled by sec. 188, the latter section would apply, and would give jurisdiction to a British Court to try the offence, but the certificate of a Political Agent would be absolutely necessary—Emp v. Tribhuan, 5 S L.R. 268, 13 Cr L J 530. So also, where a person was kidnapped in a Native State and conveyed to

DRAFT FOR APPROVAL.

181 would not apply but the case would fall under certificate of the Political Agent would be a preliminary of the offence by a British Court—Crown v. Koochri, v. Emperor, 41 All. 452, 17 A.L.J. 450, 20 Cr.L.J. If an Indian subject is found in a Native State in possession, he can be tried in British India for an offence under but the certificate of the Political Agent would be Judge v Sundara, 8 M.L.T. 54, 11 Cr.L.J. 306.

In this case, where the complainant in a place in British India found jewels to the accused, a Native Indian subject of the offence on commission, and the latter pledged the jewels in his possession, converted them to his use, it was held that the loss of the jewels was the consequence, occurred to the complainant in his possession was sufficient under sec. 179 to give jurisdiction to the Court to try the offence, that secs 179—184 should be read with sec. 188, and that no certificate of the Political Agent is required—Assistant Sessions Judge v Ramaswami, 38 Mad 779, 11 Cr.L.J. 207. This view of the law is totally unjustified "notwithstanding anything in Chapter" have now proposed to make it clear that sec 188 controls the provisions of this chapter. The Select Committee observe "except the Madras High Court seem to make it doubtful whether it is subject to the provisions of sections 179—184, and unable to clear this up. We are not satisfied that this was the intention of section 188, and in our opinion it is safer, when a man is tried in British India in respect of an offence committed in a Native State, to require the Political Agent's certificate in every case. The amendment which we propose will make this clear"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

576. Illegal arrest.—See notes under sec. 177. A trial under this section will not be vitiated by reason of the fact that the accused has been brought into British India from a foreign territory under an illegal arrest—Emp v. Vinayak Damodar Savarkar, 35 Bom 225, 13 Bom. L.R. 296.

577. "Native Indian Subject"—This expression means only a Native Indian subject de jure and not de facto; a person who is not a Native Indian subject de jure but who owns some land in British territory and occasionally resides in British India does not thereby become an Indian subject, amenable to the jurisdiction of a British Indian Court for an offence committed by him in a foreign territory—Fakir v. Emp., 1885 P.R. 1: on appeal from 1883 P.R. 22.

Foreigners :—This section does not apply to an offence committed by a foreigner outside British territory, though he may subsequently be found in British India—Q. E v Abdul Latib, 10 Bom 186. British Indian Courts have no jurisdiction to try a foreigner for offences committed and completed outside the British territory—Ibrahim v. Empress, 1894 P.R. 7. No foreign subject can be tried in British India for an offence committed outside British India—Emp. v. Baldewa, 28 All. 372; Q. E. v.

Ranchhod, 2 Bom.L.R. 337; Fakir v. Emp., 1883 P.R. 22; Roda v. Empress, 1889 P.R. 30. Therefore, where the subject of a Native State committed theft in that State, and was subsequently found in British India in possession of the stolen property, the British Indian Court had no jurisdiction to try him for the offence of theft (but had jurisdiction to try him for retaining stolen property, under sec. 411 I P. C.)—Erip v. Baldewa, 28 All 372, Q. E. v. Abdul Latib, 10 Bom 186

578. Offence.—The word "offence" in this section means an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. Thus, the act of giving false evidence before a foreign Court where the oath is administered not under the provisions of the law in force in British India but under the law of that State in relation to proceedings before the Court, is not punishable under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and cannot be taken cognizance of by Magistrates of British Indian Courts. So also, the offence of lodging a false complaint in a foreign Court is not punishable under the Indian Penal Code, because it cannot be said that a false information was given to a 'public servant' as defined by the Indian Penal Code. Similarly, the act of instituting criminal proceedings and making false charges before a foreign Court does not constitute an offence under sec. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, because the criminal proceedings and false charges contemplated by that section mean proceedings and charges in British India where the Indian Penal Code is in force. Therefore, offences committed in relation to Courts and authorities outside British India do not constitute offences under the Indian Penal Code and cannot be tried by any Court in British India; and a certificate of the Political Agent is out of the question—In re Rambharathi, 47 Bom. 907, 25 Bom. L.R. 772, 25 Cr.L.J. 333

"May be found"—The word 'found' must be taken to mean not where a person is discovered, but where he is actually present, whether he comes of his own accord or is brought under arrest—Emp. v. Maganlal, 6 Bom. 622

579. Scope of proviso :—This proviso is of universal application and is not restricted to Native States only. If the offence is committed in a Native State, the certificate of the Political Agent is necessary; if the Native State has no Political Agent, the sanction of the Local Government is required. And if the offence is committed in a place other than a Native State, e.g. Spain, the sanction of the Local Government is likewise necessary—Imp. v. Chellaram, 6 S.L.R. 260.

The words "or where there is no Political Agent, the sanction of the Local Government shall be required" have been added to the Code in 1898. Under the previous Codes, when the offence was committed in a territory in which there was no Political Agent, no certificate (or sanction) was necessary, as for instance in Goa (Q. E. v. Daya Bhima, 13 Bom. 147) or Siam (Q. E. v. Abdul Husen, Ratanlal 773) or Cyprus (Emp. v. Sarmukh, 2 All 218)

580. Offences on High Seas—Section 188 does not apply to offences committed on the High Seas. The proviso to this section refers to offences committed in a "territory" and not to offences committed on the High Seas. Therefore an offence committed by a Native Indian subject on the sea at a distance of five or six miles from the coast can be tried by a Magistrate of British India without the sanction of the Local Government—Emp v Manuel Philip, 41 Bom. 667; Po Thaung v. K. E., 5 L.B.R. 221, 12 Cr.L.J. 198. The power to try offences committed on the High seas is conferred on Indian Courts by Stat. 23 and 24 Vic., C. 88 (within three miles from the Coast of British India) and Stat. 30 and 31 Vic., C. 124, section 11 (beyond the three miles limit). See Reg. v. Kastya Rama, 8 B.H.C.R. 63; Q. E. v. Sk Abdul Rahaman, 14 Bom 227.

581. Certificate of a Political Agent.—The certificate of the Political Agent is the preliminary requisite for the institution of criminal proceedings in a Court of British India for an offence committed outside British India. Want of certificate will invalidate all subsequent proceedings—Emp. v. Kalicharan, 24 All. 256; Q. E. v. Ram Sundar, 19 All. 109, Narain v Emp, 41 All 452, Q. E. v. Baku, 24 Bom 287; Sirdar v. Jethabhai, 8 Bom L.R. 513, Q. E. v Kathaperumal, 13 Mad 423, Bapu v. Q., 5 Mad 23, Ram Charan v Crown, 5 Lah. 416. The want of a certificate is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by section 532 by a subsequent production of the certificate—Q. E. v. Kathaperumal, 13 Mad. 423. Even where the Magistrate was himself the Political Agent, the defect would not be cured by any subsequent production of the certificate signed by him—Q. E. v Kathaperumal, 13 Mad 423; Bapu Dald v. Q., 5 Mad. 23, Q. E. v. Ram Sundar, 19 All 109.

An agreement between a Native State and the authorities of a British Indian district, conceding to the British Indian Courts the right to arrest and try British Indian subjects found gambling in the Native State, and vice versa, cannot take the place of the certificate or sanction required by this section—Nandu v. Emp., 42 All. 89.

In a sessions case, the certificate of the Political Agent must be obtained before the commencement of the committal proceedings in the Magistrate's Court—Ruhya Singh v. Crown, 7 Lah 468, 27 Cr.L.J. 942 (944), and the proceedings of a Magistrate committing an accused to the Sessions Court before a certificate under sec. 188 is obtained are void and illegal—Buta Singh v Emp, 7 Lah. 396, 27 P.L.R. 447, 27 Cr.L.J. 1168. Where a commitment was made without the certificate, the fact that the certificate existed at the date of the commitment, (i.e. it had been signed by the Political Agent before the date of commitment) but had not come into the hands of the Magistrate till after commitment) could not cure the defect—Emp v Kalicharan, 24 All 256. In certain Punjab cases however, it has been held that the want of a certificate is not a fatal defect, but a mere irregularity cured by section 537, if no objection is taken at the trial and no prejudice to the accused has been caused in the defence—Shamir Khan v Emp, 1888 P.R. 35, Roda v Emp, 1889 P.R. 30; Fateh Din v. Emperor, 1902 P.R. 4-(F.B.) Where, however, the defect was observed and objected to by the Sessions Judge, the commitment should be quashed—Q. E. v. Mastana, 1899 P.R. 11; Ram Charan v. Crown, 5 Lah. 416 (420), A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 185, 27 Cr.L.J. 218.

The proviso lays down that “no charge shall be inquired into in British India unless the Political Agent” etc., and therefore there is nothing illegal in obtaining the certificate or sanction after the complaint has been filed and the inquiry has begun or been completed as far as the framing of the charge—Emp. v. Sakharan, 12 Bom. L.R. 667, 11 Cr.L.J. 543, In re Ram Bharathi, 47 Bom. 907 (at p. 911). If the certificate is not produced at the time the proceedings have reached the stage of framing a charge, the Magistrate cannot proceed any further, but it is open to him to give the complainant a reasonable time within which to obtain the certificate, and then to continue the proceedings in the event of such certificate being obtained—Allibhoy v. Emp., 19 S.L.R. 122, 25 Cr.L.J. 620, A.I.R. 1925 Sind. 88. In a Bombay case, it has even been held that where the certificate was received after the examination of some prosecution witnesses but before the commitment of the case to the Sessions, the commitment was good, and the irregularity, if any, was cured by sec. 537—Emp. v. Mahamad Buksh, 8 Bom. L.R. 507, 4 Cr.L.J. 49.

A document certifying that a case should be tried in British India, and purporting to be signed by the Under-Secretary for the Political Agent, is not sufficient, it is necessary that the Agent should himself certify. But a certified copy of an order signed by the Agent himself and directing that a certificate should issue under sec. 188 in the particular case sufficiently meets the requirements of this section. If the order is of a date prior to the commencement of committal proceedings in the Magistrate's Court, though the certified copy is produced in the Sessions Court, the commitment is not invalid—Ruliya Singh v. Emp., 7 Lah. 468, 27 P.L.R. 708, 27 Cr.L.J. 942.

Magistrate not confined to the charges in the certificate :—The Magistrate is not restricted to the charge mentioned in the certificate. The certificate granted by the Political Agent in respect of an offence will cover every charge which the facts declared in the certificate will suffice to sustain—Krishna Nath v. Emp., 33 All. 514. An order or committal on a charge which is different from that mentioned in the certificate but based upon the same set of facts, will be perfectly valid—In re Sessions Judge, 8 M.L.T. 203, 11 Cr.L.J. 531.

Certificate cannot be revoked :—Where the District Magistrate as the Political Agent granted a certificate for the trial of the accused by a Magistrate in British India, it was held that the latter was legally seized of the case, and it was not competent to the Political Agent to recall the certificate and to hand over the accused to the Native State for his trial in that State—In re Vazir Saheb, 14 Bom. L.R. 377, 13 Cr.L.J. 537; In re Hormusjee, Ratanlal 253.

189. Whenever any such offence as is referred to

Power to direct copies of depositions and exhibits to be received in evidence.

in Section 188 is being inquired into or tried, the Local Government may, if it thinks fit, direct that copies of depositions made or exhibits produced before the Political Agent or a judicial officer in or for the territory in which such offence is alleged to have been committed shall be received as evidence by the Court holding such inquiry or trial in any case in which such Court might issue a commission for taking evidence as to the matters to which such depositions or exhibits relate.

B.—Conditions requisite for Initiation of Proceedings.

190. (1) Except as hereinafter provided, any Cognizance of offence by Magistrates. Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or Subdivisional Magistrate, and any other Magistrate specially empowered in this behalf, may take cognizance of any offence—

(a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence;

(b) upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer;

(c) upon information received from any person other than a police-officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed.

(2) The Local Government, or the District Magistrate subject to the general or special orders of the Local Government, may empower any Magistrate to take cognizance under subsection (1), clause (a) or clause (b), of offences for which he may try or commit for trial.

(3) The Local Government may empower any Magistrate of the first or second class to take cognizance under sub-section (1), clause (c), of offences for which he may try or commit for trial.

582. Change :—The words in clause (b) have been substituted for the words "upon a police report of such facts," by section 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. In K E. v. Sada, 26 Bom. 150, Bhairab v Emp, 46 Cal. 807 (817, 818), In re Chidambaram, 32 Mad 3, Ram Lal v Emp, 1 P.L.T. 73, Harihar v. K. E., 23 C.W.N. 481, Emp. v. Ghulam Husain, 6 Lah.L.J. 606, 25 Cr.L.J. 1361, and Q E. v Nga Shwe, 1 L.B.R. 18 it was held that the term police report in this clause was used in a technical sense as meaning

ment should be quashed—Q E. v. Mastana, 1899 P.R. 11; Ram Charan v. Crown, 5 Lah 416 (420), A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 185, 27 Cr.L.J. 218

The proviso lays down that "no charge shall be inquired into in British India unless the Political Agent" etc., and therefore there is nothing illegal in obtaining the certificate or sanction after the complaint has been filed and the inquiry has begun or been completed as far as the framing of the charge—Emp v Sakharan, 12 Bom. L.R. 667, 11 Cr.L.J. 543, In re Ram Bharathi, 47 Bom 907 (at p 911) If the certificate is not produced at the time the proceedings have reached the stage of framing a charge, the Magistrate cannot proceed any further, but it is open to him to give the complainant a reasonable time within which to obtain the certificate, and then to continue the proceedings in the event of such certificate being obtained—Allubhoy v Emp, 19 S L R 122, 25 Cr.L.J. 620, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 88 In a Bombay case, it has even been held that where the certificate was received after the examination of some prosecution witnesses but before the commitment of the case to the Sessions, the commitment was good, and the irregularity, if any, was cured by sec. 537—Emp v. Mahamad Buksh, 8 Bom L.R 507, 4 Cr L.J. 49.

A document certifying that a case should be tried in British India, and purporting to be signed by the Under-Secretary for the Political Agent, is not sufficient, it is necessary that the Agent should himself certify. But a certified copy of an order signed by the Agent himself and directing that a certificate should issue under sec. 188 in the particular case sufficiently meets the requirements of this section. If the order is of a date prior to the commencement of committal proceedings in the Magistrate's Court, though the certified copy is produced in the Sessions Court, the commitment is not invalid—Ruhya Singh v. Emp., 7 Lah 468, 27 P.L.R. 708, 27 Cr.L.J. 842.

Magistrate not confined to the charges in the certificate:—The Magistrate is not restricted to the charge mentioned in the certificate. The certificate granted by the Political Agent in respect of an offence will cover every charge which the facts declared in the certificate will suffice to sustain—Krishna Nath v. Emp, 33 All. 514 An order or committal on a charge which is different from that mentioned in the certificate but based upon the same set of facts, will be perfectly valid—In re Sessions Judge, 8 M L T. 203, 11 Cr.L.J. 531.

Certificate cannot be revoked:—Where the District Magistrate as the Political Agent granted a certificate for the trial of the accused by a Magistrate in British India, it was held that the latter was legally seized of the case, and it was not competent to the Political Agent to recall the certificate and to hand over the accused to the Native State for his trial in that State In re Vazir Saheb, 14 Bom. L.R. 377, 13 Cr.L.J. 537; In re Hormusjee, Ratanlal 253.

189. Whenever any such offence as is referred to

Power to direct copies of depositions and exhibits to be received in evidence.

in Section 188 is being inquired into or tried, the Local Government may, if it thinks fit, direct that copies of depositions made or exhibits produced before the Political Agent or a judicial officer in or for the territory in which such offence is alleged to have been committed shall be received as evidence by the Court holding such inquiry or trial in any case in which such Court might issue a commission for taking evidence as to the matters to which such depositions or exhibits relate.

B.—Conditions requisite for Initiation of Proceedings.

190. (1) Except as hereinafter provided, any Cognizance of offence by Magistrates. Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or Subdivisional Magistrate, and any other Magistrate specially empowered in this behalf, may take cognizance of any offence—

(a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence;

(b) upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer;

(c) upon information received from any person other than a police-officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed.

(2) The Local Government, or the District Magistrate subject to the general or special orders of the Local Government, may empower any Magistrate to take cognizance under subsection (1), clause (a) or clause (b), of offences for which he may try or commit for trial.

(3) The Local Government may empower any Magistrate of the first or second class to take cognizance under sub-section (1), clause (c), of offences for which he may try or commit for trial.

582. Change :—The words in clause (b) have been substituted for the words "upon a police report of such facts," by section 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. In K. E. v. Sada, 26 Bom. 150, Bhairab v. Emp., 46 Cal. 807 (817, 818), In re Chidambaram, 32 Mad. 3, Ram Lal v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 73, Harihar v. K. E., 23 C.W.N. 481, Emp. v. Ghulam Husain, 6 Lah L.J. 606, 25 Cr.L.J. 1361, and Q. E. v. Nga Shwe, 1 L.B.R. 18 it was held that the term police report in this clause was used in a technical sense as meaning the report of the police in a cognizable case only, and that since a police officer had no power to make a report in a non-cognizable case, a police report in such a case was to be treated as a complaint under clause (a) and the procedure of sec. 200 was to be followed by the Magistrate. Under the present amendment, the wording of clause (b) is quite general, and would empower a Magistrate to take cognizance of a non-cognizable offence upon a report in writing by a police-officer—Emp. v. Shivaswami, 51 Bom. 498, 29 Bom. L.R. 742, 28 Cr.L.J. 939; Public Prosecutor v. Ratnavelu, 49 Mad 525, 27 Cr.L.J. 1031 (F.B.) (overruling In re Perumal, 22 L.W. 209, 26 Cr.L.J. 1550). The present amendment lays down that the report of a police officer in a non-cognizable case is a report under clause (b) all the same, and not a complaint under clause (a), and the Magistrate will not have to follow the procedure of Chapter XVI, e.g. to examine the complainant (i.e. the police-officer) on oath. See Bholanath v. Emp., 28 C.W.N. 490, 26 Cr.L.J. 68, Public Prosecutor v. Ratnavelu, (supra); Shankar Lal v. Emp., 9 Lah. 280, 28 Cr.L.J. 821 (822); Prag Datt v. Emp., 51 All 382, 27 A.L.J. 68.

Moreover, before the present amendment, the words 'police report' were used in a technical sense to mean a police report under section 170 or 173 i.e., a report made after investigation, and not an information sent by the Police to the Magistrate before making any investigation—Ahmed Khan v. Emp., 5 S.L.R. 1, 12 Cr.L.J. 92; Emp. v. Khusaldas, 6 S.L.R. 82, 13 Cr.L.J. 752, In re Nagendra Nath, 51 Cal 402 (413); King Emp. v. Sada, 26 Bom. 150 (157). Under the present amendment the words have been changed altogether and replaced by the non-technical words "report made by any police officer" which would certainly include a report or information given before investigation. Even before the present amendment, it was held in a Sind case that the Police report referred to in this section was not confined to a report under sec. 173 but was wide enough to cover reports under other sections of the Chapter (e.g., reports under secs. 157 and 168), nor was it confined to reports under Ch. XIV alone—Mehrab v. Crown, 17 S.L.R. 150 (dissenting from 5 S.L.R. 1).

583. Magistrates empowered :—Under this section a third class Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence under clauses (a) and (b) only i.e. upon a complaint or a police report—K. E. v. Sada, 26 Bom. 150.

The District Magistrate of the Civil and Military Station of Bangalore has jurisdiction to take cognizance of and try offences committed by European British subjects in accordance with the provisions of this Code—In re Lawrance, 34 Mad 346 (F.B.).

If a Magistrate not empowered to take cognizance under cl. (a) or (b) does so under a bona fide mistake, his proceedings will not be set aside merely on the ground of his not being empowered—Sec. 529 (e). But the proceedings under clause (c) of a Magistrate not empowered to take cognizance under that clause are void—sec. 530 (k).

If a Magistrate not empowered to take cognizance of offences upon complaint (e.g. a second class Magistrate who is not competent to take cognizance of a murder case) nevertheless takes cognizance of the case, sends the complaint to the police for inquiry, and on receiving the police report, dismisses the complaint as false and prosecutes the complainant under sec. 211 I. P. Code for making a false complaint, held that the action of the Magistrate in taking cognizance of the offence may be cured by sec. 529 (e), but the further action of the Magistrate in prosecuting the complainant for making a false complaint cannot be validated by sec. 529 (e)—Bengali Gope v. K. E., 5 Pat. 447, 7 P.L.T. 335, 27 Cr.L.J. 704.

The District Magistrate cannot authorize a second class Magistrate to take cognizance of complaints of offences which the second class Magistrate is not competent to try (e.g. a case of murder). Section 37 and Schedule IV of this Code must be read with sec. 190, and there is nothing in these provisions to extend the power which the District Magistrate can confer—Bengali Gope v. K. E., (supra)

A Magistrate duly empowered under this section to take cognizance of an offence cannot refuse to take cognizance on the ground that the gravity of the offence requires severer punishment than he can inflict—Q. E. v. Gema, Ratanlal 375

584. Offence :—A Magistrate authorised under this section to take cognizance of an offence upon complaint, can take cognizance of an offence under sec. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, even in the absence of a special authorisation in that behalf, because the very definition of the word 'offence' in section 4 clause (o) includes any act in respect of which a complaint may be made under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act—Emp. v. Visvanatha, 44 Bom. 42, 21 Bom. L.R 1084, 21 Cr.L.J. 95; Deenadayalu v. Ratna, 50 Mad. 841, 52 M.L.J. 251, 28 Cr.L.J. 301. See also Budhan v. Issur, 34 Cal. 926 (927).

585. "Taking cognizance" :—The expression "to take cognizance" has not been defined in the Code, and it is difficult to ascertain at what precise stage of the case cognizance is said to be taken. When a Magistrate in charge, on receipt of a police report, makes over the case to another Magistrate for inquiry, and the latter after taking evidence summons the accused, it is the latter Magistrate and not the former who is said to have taken cognizance of the offence—Ananta Ram v. Sk. Altab, 17 C.W.N. 795, 14 Cr.L.J. 425. A Magistrate cannot be said to have taken cognizance of a case under section 107 until he issues notice to the person charged to show cause why he should not be proceeded against under that section. Therefore, where the Police reported the matter to the District Magistrate who ordered the case to be transferred to the file of the Headquarters Deputy Magistrate, who then issued notice to the accused, held that it was the latter Magistrate and not the District Magistrate who took cognizance of the case—Konda Reddy v. K. E., 41 Mad. 246 (249)

Taking cognizance does not involve any formal action or indeed action of any kind but occurs as soon as a Magistrate applies his mind to a suspected commission of an offence. Where a police report of a case was submitted to the Subdivisional Officer on the 24th April 1909, a the case was afterwards withdrawn by the District Magistrate to his own file on the 20th January 1910, held that the District Magistrate took cognizance of the case on the 20th January 1910—Sourindra v. Emp., 37 Cal. 412.

Where an officer who is also a Magistrate holds a departmental inquiry and charges are made before him, he cannot be said to have taken cognizance—Q. E. v. Karigowda, 19 Bom. 51.

In cases where sanction or certificate is necessary (i.e., cases under secs 132, 188, 197) the Magistrate is not competent to take cognizance upon a mere complaint unaccompanied by the requisite sanction or certificate—Durga Das v. Q. E., 27 Cal. 820. See also Lalit Chandra v. Emp., 39 Cal. 119, 13 Cr L.J. 433.

A Magistrate is not debarred from taking cognizance of an offence simply because another Magistrate has already taken cognizance of the same and is in seisin of the case. But since the accused person cannot be tried twice for the same offence, the proper course is for the one Magistrate to transfer his case to the other, and thus a multiplicity of trials can be avoided—Hari Satya v. Emp., 50 Cal. 482, 24 Cr L.J. 710, 37 C.L.J. 327.

The three alternatives upon which a Magistrate may take proceedings are not mutually exclusive. It is not correct to say that a Magistrate while taking cognizance of an offence should have done it under some one of the alternatives to the exclusion of the others—Bharat Kishore v. Judhistir, 10 P.L.T. 779 (F.B.), 30 Cr L.J. 1056 (1058).

586. Clause (a)—Cognizance upon complaint:—For 'complaint' see sec 4 (h) and notes thereunder.

"Complaint of facts which constitute offence":—Where a complaint presented to the Magistrate contains the offences with which the accused is charged, the fact that it was defective in not stating all the facts necessary to constitute the offence charged is immaterial—Sardar Dyal Singh v. Q. E., 1891 P.R. 8.

Who can make a complaint:—A complaint of an offence may be made by any person acquainted with the facts of the case; it need not necessarily be made by the aggrieved party, except in those cases (e.g. under secs. 198; 199) where it is so restricted by the Code—Farzand Ali v. Hanuman, 18 All. 465; In re Ganesh Narain, 13 Bom. 600; Dedar But v. Shyamapada, 41 Cal. 1013; Basirulla v. Asadulla, 33 C.W.N. 576 (577); Parshadi v. Balji, 14 Cr L.J. 409 (Oudh).

It is not necessary that the person lodging the complaint must have personal knowledge of the facts constituting the offence—Sukumar v. Mofizuddin, 25 C.W.N. 357; Suresh v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 351, 21 Cr L.J. 346; In re Ganesh, 13 Bom. 600; Imp v. Shewak Ram, 7 S.L.R. 77. 15 Cr.L.J. 369.

Magistrate bound to take cognizance upon complaint:—It cannot be held that the words 'may take cognizance of an offence' mean that a Magistrate is not bound to take cognizance of an offence on receiving a complaint of facts constituting an offence—Ram Sarup v. K. E., 4 O.C.

127. The use of the term "may . . . offence" does not make it optional with a Magistrate to hear a complaint, but refers to the action of the Magistrate in taking cognizance of the offence in either of the specified courses in which the facts constituting the offence may be brought to his notice. He is bound to examine the complainant and can then either issue summons to the accused, or order an inquiry under sec. 202 or dismiss the complaint under sec. 203—Umer Ali v. Safer Ali, 13 Cal. 334. He is bound, when the circumstances giving him jurisdiction exist, to receive the complaint and deal with it according to law—In re Jankidas, 12 Bom. 161; and has no option to refer it to the police under sec. 156 (3) without taking cognizance of it—In re Arula, 10 M.L.T. 120, 12 Cr.L.J. 463. When a complaint is made to a Magistrate of a petty offence ordinarily within the cognizance of heads of villages, the Magistrate is bound to take cognizance of it, to proceed under sec. 200 and to dispose of the complaint according to law. The mere fact that the complaint is also cognizable by the head of the village does not entitle the Magistrate to decline to exercise jurisdiction and to direct the complainant to seek redress from the head of the village—Anonymous, 2 Weir 237, 7 M.H.C.R. App 31.

Instances where Magistrate acts under Cl (a) and not Cl (c):—Where a complaint is made before a Magistrate, he takes cognizance of the case under clause (a) and not under clause (c), even though he may record on the complaint that he acts under clause (c)—Meshidi v Rangoon Municipal Committee, 4 L.B.R. 300, Emp v Rasid, 9 Bom. L.R. 212, 5 Cr.L.J. 202; Girdhari Lal v Emp., 1911 P.R. 11; Jhuna Lal v K. E., 2 P.L.J. 657.

Where a complainant charged certain persons with committing a certain offence, and the examination of the complainant revealed an offence different from that mentioned in the complaint, or revealed an additional offence, the Magistrate was competent to take cognizance of the latter offence, and in taking cognizance thereof he acted under clause (a) and not under clause (c), so that sec. 191 did not apply—Jagat Chandra v. Q. E., 26 Cal. 786 (789), Abdul Rahman v. K. E., 4 Bur.L.J. 213, 27 Cr.L.J. 669; on appeal, Abdul Rahman v Emp., 5 Rang 53 (P.C.), 31 C.W.N. 271, 28 Cr.L.J. 259, 52 M.L.J. 585, 25 A.L.J. 117.

Similarly, where the complainant charged several persons with having committed an offence, but the Magistrate after examination of the complainant found out that other persons, not mentioned in the complaint, were concerned in the offence, he was competent to take cognizance in respect of the latter persons also, and in so doing he acted under clause (a) and not under clause (c), so that sec 191 was not applicable to the case—Jagat Chandra v. Q. E., 26 Cal. 786 (789), Qutba v Emp., 1904 P.R. 32; Nga Paing v. Q. E., U.B.R. (1897-1901) 56, Emp v Imankhan, 14 Bom.L.R. 141; Dedar Bax v. Shyamapada, 41 Cal 1013; Charu Chandra v. Narendra, 4 C.W.N. 367, Sri Kishan v Debi Dayal, 2 O.W.N. 823, 26 Cr.L.J. 1619.

587. Clause (b) —Police Report —The 'police report' mentioned in this section is not limited to a report mentioned in Chap. XIV.

Where on an information received by post, a Magistrate sent the case to the police for inquiry and report, and on receiving the report took cognizance of the case, it was held that the action taken by him was based on the police report—Sarfaraz Khan v. K. E., 11 A.L.J. 331, 14 Cr.L.J. 218

A police report in a non-cognizable case falls within this clause, and there is no authority in the Code for examining a police-officer submitting a police report under this section, as if he were a complainant—Nga Saw v. K. E., 1914 U.B.R. 19, 16 Cr.L.J. 97; Sk. Abdul Ali v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 446, 59 I.C. 41. See Note 582 above under heading "Change."

A report submitted by a Police officer under sec. 24 of the Police Act falls under this clause—Sk. Abdul Ali v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 446, 59 I.C. 41. The report of an Excise Sub-Inspector is a Police report for the purposes of this section—Radhika v. Hamid Ali, 54 Cal. 371, 28 Cr.L.J. 316.

A Police challan is a police report of facts constituting an offence under clause (b) and a Magistrate can take cognizance upon it—Emp. v. Sundar, 1901 P.R. 8; Emp. v. Chet Singh, 1900 P.R. 22. But a mere suggestion by the police-officer is not a police report, and where a Magistrate issued summons to the accused on the suggestion of a police-officer that the accused injured the crops of the people of the village, it was held that the Magistrate acted illegally, as none of the conditions required by this section had been fulfilled—Samun v. Emp., 1894 P.R. 24.

The police report must state the facts which constitute the offence, that is, the concrete facts which constitute the alleged offence. Where no facts were stated, the mere assertions made by the police that certain offences had been committed, could not be regarded as compliance with the letter or the spirit of the law—In re Nagendra, 51 Cal. 402 (414), A I.R. 1924 Cal. 476.

So also, a Magistrate cannot take cognizance of an offence on the mere information of a police-officer who has no knowledge of the facts and whom it is impracticable to examine—Q. E. v. Nga Shwe, 1 L.B.R. 18.

A prosecution is not legally instituted under section 190 (b) when the police report is defective and does not fulfil all the requirements of sec. 173 (e.g. when it does not set forth the nature of the information) and the first information report under sec. 154 is equally defective in this respect—Lee v. Adhikari, 37 Cal. 49. In Feroja v. Amiruddin, 16 C.W.N. 1049 it has been remarked that if the police report be defective it is open to the Magistrate to treat it as a complaint, and in that case it will be necessary for him to call upon the Police-officer to appear and substantiate that complaint upon oath.

Magistrate not bound to take cognizance upon police report:—A Magistrate is entitled to refuse to initiate proceedings on the report of the Police in the absence of a complaint—Bhiku v. K. E., 1 A.L.J. 609. He has a discretion either to take cognizance of the offence or to proceed under sec. 203, or to take no further steps—Anon., 2 Weir 119

Instances where Magistrate acts under Clause (b) and not under Clause (c):—Where L. was charged by the police before the Magistrate, and the Magistrate after examining the investigating officer found that another person S should be joined as an accused person, and issued process against him, it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance of S's offence under clause (b) and not under clause (c), and was not bound to act under sec. 191—Sarwa v. Emp, 9 N.L.R. 65. The principle is that when a Magistrate takes cognizance under clause (b) on a police report, he takes cognizance of the offence and not merely of the particular person charged in the report as the offender. He can therefore issue process against other persons also who appear to him, on the basis of the report and other materials placed before him when he has taken cognizance of the case, to be concerned in the commission of the offence. When he does so, it is not a case of taking cognizance against such persons under clause (c) of this section.—Mehrab v. Crown, 17 S.L.R. 150 (F.B.) overruling 5 S.L.R. 1. Similarly, where the Magistrate issued warrants against persons not named in the complaint or in the first information, but named in a report subsequently made by the police after investigation, it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance of the case under clause (b) and not under clause (c) of this section—Rajani Kanto v. Emp, 8 C.W.N. 864. Where a Magistrate while acquitting a certain person sent up by the Police, stated that another person had in his opinion committed the offence, and that the Police should take action against that person, and that person was accordingly sent up and convicted, it was held that the Magistrate acted under clause (b) and not clause (c), and sec. 191 was not applicable—Hakim Ally v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 137, 7 Cr.L.J. 414. Where an accused person charged by the Police was convicted and the case came up in appeal before a Subdivisional Magistrate, the latter could try the offender himself under sec. 423 (1) (b) if the offence was one within his ordinary jurisdiction; and in so doing the Sub-divisional Magistrate took cognizance of the case not under clause (c) but under clause (b), as he had before him the police charge-sheet stating all the facts—Emp v. Manikka, 30 Mad. 228. Where after the close of a trial the Magistrate ordered the police to send up a charge-sheet in respect of a witness for the prosecution, which the Police did, and then the Magistrate tried that person and convicted him, held that the Magistrate took cognizance of the case under clause (b) and not under clause (c), and section 191 did not therefore apply to the case—Emp. v. Gundoo, 23 Bom L.R. 842, 22 Cr L.J. 603.

588. Clause (c):—This clause applies only to cases where the private individual who is injured or aggrieved or some one on his part does not come forward to make a formal complaint. It is a provision of law for enabling a public official to take care that justice may be vindicated notwithstanding that the persons individually aggrieved are unwilling or unable to prosecute—Q. v. Surendra, 13 W R 27.

Where upon the Sub-Registrar refusing to register a deed, the petitioner appealed to the District Registrar (who was also the District Magistrate) under the provisions of the Registration Act, and the District Registrar finding that the document was a forgery ordered the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence under sec. 471 I. P. C., held that although the District Registrar, not being a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court, could not direct a prosecution under sec. 476 of the Cr. P. Code, still his action must be deemed as one under clause (c) of section 190, Cr. P. Code, because in his capacity as District Magistrate he was competent to take cognizance of the offence under this clause, and to transfer the case to a subordinate Magistrate under sec 191—Cheta Mahto v. K. E., 2 Pat. 459, 4 P.L.T. 727, 24 Cr.L.J. 792.

A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence under this clause must comply with the provisions of law laid down in section 191—Sk. Abdul Ali v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 446, 59 I.C. 41.

This clause has no application when proceedings are instituted against any person under chapter VIII, by a Magistrate upon information, or upon personal knowledge or suspicion—In re Mithu Khan, 27 All. 172, Mahomedally v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 291, 27 Cr.L.J. 1280.

Magistrate should state grounds:—It is most desirable that a Magistrate taking cognizance under clause (c) should record grounds on which he is taking action, and this not only in fairness to the accused who is entitled to know for what reason he is being arrested, but also for his own protection. His omission, however, to do so, does not necessarily vitiate the proceedings where the accused has not in any way been prejudiced—Maung Nyl v. Emp., 4 Bur. L.J. 211, 27 Cr.L.J. 413.

589. Information:—The expression "information received from any person other than a Police officer" means only such information as does not constitute a complaint or a Police report—Meshidi v. Rangoon Municipal Committee, 4 L.B.R. 300.

A letter written to the District Magistrate conveying information of an offence and asking for action to be taken can be treated as information under this clause for taking action—Chhoday Maharaj v. K. E., 28 O.C. 33, A.L.R. 1925 Oudh 144, 25 Cr.L.J. 1147.

The information need not contain all the allegations necessary to be proved to establish the offence; it is sufficient if enough is alleged to justify the Magistrate in dealing judicially with the matter. What allegations or how much of the information should be recorded by the Magistrate in such a case, it is difficult to lay down in general terms; if the recorded information is sufficient to justify the Magistrate in considering that a prima facie case has been made out, he can take cognizance under this clause—Rash Behary v. Emp., 35 Cal. 1076.

Where the Deputy Commissioner, as a Collector and as such representing the Court of Wards, received information of an offence, he as Magistrate was not competent to act on the information and to issue warrants, as by such action he was practically making himself a Judge in his own case—Thakur Persad v. Emp., 10 C.W.N. 775, Lakhi Narayan v. Emp., 37 Cal. 221 (per Stephen J.) But this view does not seem to be correct, for sec. 191 provides a sufficient safeguard and gives the accused a right to have the case transferred to another Magistrate. On this principle the Madras High Court has held that there can be no objection to a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence upon information received by him in another capacity e.g. as President of the District Board—Sundarasana v. K. E., 43 Mad. 709 (dissenting from 10 C.W.N. 775); Lakhi Narayan v. Emp., 37 Cal. 221 (per Carnduf J. dissenting from 10 C.W.N. 775).

The following are held to be 'information' within the meaning of this section:—(a) An anonymous communication—In re Hari Narain, 3 C.W.N. 65, Bhairon v. Emp., 51 All. 377, 30 Cr.L.J. 62 (63); (b) communication through post—Anon., 2 Weir 149, Karim Buksh v. Adil Khan, 1899 A.W.N. 201; (c) information received from another Magistrate—Makhan v. Jepson, 1914 P.L.R. 65, 15 Cr.L.J. 261; 3 C.W.N. cclxii.

Information must be recorded.—A Magistrate taking cognizance upon information under this clause should at least record the information on which he acted, though he may not be obliged to disclose the sources of the information—Thakur Persad v. Emp., 10 C.W.N. 775; Rash Behary v. Emp., 35 Cal. 1076, 12 C.W.N. 1075, but his omission to do so does not necessarily vitiate the proceedings—Mg Nyi Bu v. K. E., 4 Bur. L.J. 211, A I R 1926 Rang 46, 27 Cr.L.J. 413.

Information received from witness.—A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence against a person on evidence given on behalf of another accused person, proceeds under clause (c) of this section—Raghab v. Emp., 3 C.W.N. cclxxix. So also, a Magistrate who takes cognizance of an offence against a witness in a case pending before him, upon the facts disclosed by the evidence of another witness, does so under clause (c) of the present section and not under section 351—Khudi Ram v. Emp., 1 C.W.N. 105. Contra—Yasin Khan v. Emp., 5 N.L.R. 113 and Imp v. Lalu, 4 S.L.R. 258, 12 Cr.L.J. 399, in which under such circumstances it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance against the new accused under sec. 351 and not under clause (c) of sec. 190. If, however, the Magistrate has already taken cognizance upon a complaint of an offence against some person, and after examination of some witnesses the offences of other persons are revealed, the Magistrate proceeding against the latter does so under clause (a), (since there is a complaint) and not under clause (c)—Dedar Bux v. Shyamapada, 41 Cal 1013.

590. Knowledge.—Knowledge means actual personal knowledge of the Magistrate or knowledge based upon evidence legally placed before him—Q. E. v. Nga Shwe, 1 L.B.R. 18

Where a Magistrate issued an order under sec. 144 to stop work in a quarry, and took action for the disobedience of that order, and convicted the accused, it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance of the offence on his own knowledge of the facts under this clause—Crown v. Mul Raj, 1905 P.R. 36, 2 Cr.L.J. 365. So also, where the accused in disobedience of an order given by a Cantonment Magistrate tied his buffaloes in a certain place, and the Magistrate finding the place filthy in consequence, sent for the accused and fined him, it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance from his own knowledge under this clause and was debarred from trying the case by virtue of sec. 191—K. E. v. Abdul Rahim, 1905 P.R. 8.

A Magistrate who takes part in the initiation of proceedings is not incompetent to take cognizance of the offence, because this clause empowers the Magistrate to take cognizance upon his own 'knowledge', but of course the Magistrate will be debarred under section 556 from trying the case—Oziullah v. Beni Madhab, 50 Cal. 135.

591. Suspicion :—Where a Magistrate has a mere suspicion that an offence has been committed, he should not, as a matter of sound judicial discretion, take cognizance of it until some person aggrieved has complained (clause a) or until he has before him a police report (clause b) on the subject based on investigation directed to the offence—Q. E. v. Sham Lal, 14 Cal 707.

592. Miscellaneous :—

No Limitation—The general law of limitation is chiefly intended for civil matters and does not apply to the taking cognizance of offences—Q. E. v. Nageshapa, 20 Bom. 543.

Complaint in respect of one offence—Cognizance in respect of another—Where a complaint charges certain persons with committing a certain offence, and the examination of the complainant reveals a different offence from that mentioned in the complaint, or reveals an additional offence, the Magistrate is competent to take cognizance of the latter offence—Jagat Chandra v. Q. E., 26 Cal 786 (789). The Magistrate is not bound to adhere to any particular section of the law which may be mentioned by the complainant in his complaint, but may apply any section which he thinks applicable to the case, so long as the parties are not misled and the proper procedure is observed—Kalidass v. Mohendro, 12 W.R. 40 (41).

Complaint against some persons, cognizance against others :—Where a complaint is made against some persons and the Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence, it is the duty of the Magistrate to deal with the evidence brought before him, and to see that justice is done in regard to any other person who might be proved by the evidence to be concerned in the offence—Charu Chandra v. Norendra, 4 C.W.N. xiv. When once a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence, he is competent to take proceedings against all who from the evidence appear to be offenders. His power is not limited only with regard to the persons mentioned in the complaint or Police report—Bishen Dayal v. Chedi Khan, 4 C.W.N. 560; Girdhar Lal v. K. E., 21 C.W.N. 950; Nga Chan v. K. E., 1 Bur. L.J. 183; Mehtab v. Emp., 17 S.L.R. 150 (F.B.). See also 26 Cal 786; 1904 P.R. 32; 14 Bom L.R. 141; 41 Cal. 1013; and 4 C.W.N. 367 cited in Note 586 under clause (a); also 9 N.L.R. 65; and 8 C.W.N. 864 cited in Note 587 under clause (b).

191. When a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence under sub-section (1), clause (c), of the preceding section, the accused shall, before any evidence is taken, be informed that he is entitled to have the case tried by another Court, and if the accused, or any of the accused if there be more than one, objects to being tried by such Magistrate, the case shall, instead of being tried by such Magistrate, be committed to the Court of Session or transferred to another Magistrate.

593. Principle :—The principle of this section is that no man ought to be a Judge in his own case. If a Magistrate proceeds against a person upon his own personal knowledge, he is interested in the prosecution and thereby he would practically make himself a Judge in his own case and his pre-conceived opinion as to the guilt of the accused person is likely to bias his mind against that person.

When a Magistrate takes, cognizance suo motu either on his own knowledge or suspicion, or upon information received from some person who will not take the responsibility of setting the law in motion, the law, partly out of regard for the susceptibilities of the accused, and partly to inspire confidence in the administration of justice, allows the accused the right to claim to be tried before another Magistrate—Imp. v. Shewak Ram, 7 S L R. 77, 15 Cr L J 369 (370).

A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence under clause (c) of section 190, is bound to comply with the provisions of this section—Sh. Abdul Ali v. Emp., 1 P L T. 446. Where on a report being made by a Cantonment official in respect of an offence under sec 92 of the Cantonment Code, the Cantonment Magistrate took cognizance of the case and convicted the accused, held that the trial and conviction were illegal as the Magistrate should have informed the accused under this section that he was entitled to have the case transferred to another Magistrate—Anandi Pershad v. Emp., 1920 P L R 124, 21 Cr L J 394. When a Magistrate himself institutes criminal proceedings under sec 476, he is bound to inform the accused that he is entitled to have his case tried by another Court—K. E. v. Naipal, 28 O C 1, A I R. 1924 Oudh 448, 25 Cr L J. 1224. Where a matter was brought to the notice of the District Magistrate, and he sent the matter to the S D O , for inquiry and report, and the S D O . reported that the offence had been committed and decided that a case should be instituted, whereupon the District Magistrate ordered the S D O . to try the case, held that it was the S D O who had taken cognizance of the case (and not the District Magistrate) and he should have given the accused an opportunity to be tried by a different Magistrate—Lachhmi Narain, 4 Luck. 353, 30 Cr L J. 134 (135).

The mere fact that the Magistrate takes cognizance of a case under clause (c) of section 190 does not bring the case within the operative sent for the accused and fined him, it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance from his own knowledge under this clause and was debarred from trying the case by virtue of sec 191—K. E. v. Abdul Rahim, 1905 P.R. 8.

A Magistrate who takes part in the initiation of proceedings is not incompetent to take cognizance of the offence, because this clause empowers the Magistrate to take cognizance upon his own 'knowledge'; but of course the Magistrate will be debarred under section 556 from trying the case—Oziullah v. Beni Madhab, 50 Cal 135.

591. Suspicion :—Where a Magistrate has a mere suspicion that an offence has been committed, he should not, as a matter of sound judicial discretion, take cognizance of it until some person aggrieved has complained (clause a) or until he has before him a police report (clause b) on the subject based on investigation directed to the offence—Q. E. v. Sham Lal, 14 Cal. 707.

592. Miscellaneous :—

No Limitation :—The general law of limitation is chiefly intended for civil matters and does not apply to the taking cognizance of offences—Q. E. v. Nageshapa, 20 Bom. 543

Complaint in respect of one offence—Cognizance in respect of another .—Where a complaint charges certain persons with committing a certain offence, and the examination of the complainant reveals a different offence from that mentioned in the complaint, or reveals an additional offence, the Magistrate is competent to take cognizance of the latter offence—Jagat Chandra v. Q. E., 26 Cal. 786 (789). The Magistrate is not bound to adhere to any particular section of the law which may be mentioned by the complainant in his complaint, but may apply any section which he thinks applicable to the case, so long as the parties are not misled and the proper procedure is observed—Kalidass v. Mohendro, 12 W.R. 40 (41).

Complaint against some persons, cognizance against others :—Where a complaint is made against some persons and the Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence, it is the duty of the Magistrate to deal with the evidence brought before him, and to see that justice is done in regard to any other person who might be proved by the evidence to be concerned in the offence—Charu Chandra v. Norendra, 4 C.W.N. xlv. When once a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence, he is competent to take proceedings against all who from the evidence appear to be offenders. His power is not limited only with regard to the persons mentioned in the complaint or Police report—Bishen Dayal v. Chedi Khan, 4 C.W.N. 560; Girdhari Lal v. K. E., 21 C.W.N. 950; Nga Chan v. K. E., 1 Bur. L.J. 183; Mehrab v. Emp., 17 S.L.R. 150 (F.B.). See also 26 Cal. 786; 1904 P.R. 32; 14 Bom L.R. 141; 41 Cal. 1013; and 4 C.W.N. 367 cited in Note 586 under clause (a); also 9 N.L.R. 63; and 8 C.W.N. 864 cited in Note 587 under clause (b).

commit the case to the Sessions. And the commitment involves the holding of a preliminary inquiry. This section empowers the Magistrate to hold a preliminary inquiry even in a case triable by himself; if the case is one triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, the Magistrate is a fortiori entitled to hold an inquiry preliminary to commitment—Q. E. v. Abdul Razzak, 21 All. 109; Azam Ali v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 47 (Cal.).

But a Magistrate who takes cognizance of a case under sec. 190 (c) cannot, after becoming a District Magistrate, hear an appeal from a conviction in the case (which was tried by another subordinate Magistrate) without following the procedure laid down in Sec. 191, as an appeal is a part of the trial of the offence—Bansi Lal v. Emp., 12 C.W.N. 438.

596. When objection to be taken :—If the accused wants to be tried by another Court, he must express his objection before any evidence is taken—Murad v. Emp., 1894 P.R. 29 (at p. 82).

597. Application of Section to Chapter VIII :—The provisions of secs. 190 and 191 do not apply to proceedings under sec. 110, and a Magistrate who has instituted those proceedings need not inform the person proceeded against that he is entitled to have his case transferred to another Magistrate—In re Mithu Khan, 27 All. 172; Mahomedally v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 291, 27 Cr.L.J. 1280. But in Alimuddin v. Emp., 29 Cal. 392 and Godhan v. Emp., 4 P.L.J. 7, however, it has been held that the principle of this section, viz., that no man ought to be a judge in his case, applies to proceedings under Sec. 110, though they do not relate to offences; therefore, where a Magistrate has initiated proceedings against a person under sec. 110, mainly if not wholly upon his own knowledge of the character of that person, he is incompetent to proceed with the inquiry under sec. 117.

192. (1) Any Chief Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or sub-divisional Magistrate may transfer any case, of which he has taken cognizance, for inquiry or trial, to any Magistrate subordinate to him.

Transfer of cases by Magistrates.

(2) Any District Magistrate may empower any Magistrate of the first class who has taken cognizance of any case to transfer it for inquiry or trial to any other specified Magistrate in his district who is competent under this Code to try the accused or commit him for trial; and such Magistrate may dispose of the case accordingly.

'May transfer'.—The power under this section is optional and not obligatory. As to cases which a Magistrate is disqualified from trying and is bound to transfer, see Secs. 487 and 556.

598. 'Any case'.—This section deals with the power of the Magistrate to transfer any case; the words 'any case' are not restricted to criminal cases only, but are wide enough to include any case triable by any criminal Court, e.g. cases under Chapter VIII—Chintaman v Emp., 35 Cal. 243; K E v Munna, 24 All. 151; Hiranando v. Emp., 1 Pat. 621; or cases under Chapter XII—Satish v. Rajendra, 22 Cal 898 (902); Ram Kissoore v Dwarka, 10 C.W.N. 1095; Mahendra v. Rajpat, 20 A.L.J. 215; Abdul Hamid v Hasan, 4 P.L.T. 297, 24 Cr.L.J. 487. Even if the transfer be not strictly legal, the irregularity would be cured by Sec 529 (f)—Gurudas v. Gaganendra, 2 C.L.J. 614; Akbar v. Domi Lal, 4 C.W.N. 821.

The word 'case' has not been defined, but reading together sections 192 (1), 190 (a) and 200 (c) it is clear that the term includes a proceeding upon a complaint as soon as the complaint has been received by the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence and before he issues any process. A case can therefore be transferred under sec 192 even before a decision to issue process against the accused has been made—Asaram v Bhagurathl, 7 N.L.R. 97, 12 Cr.L.J. 437.

Under sub-sec. (1), the Magistrates specified have power to transfer a case to any Magistrate subordinate to him (even though the latter be incompetent to try the case on his own initiative), thus, a complaint under sec. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act can be entertained only by the District Magistrate or a Magistrate specially authorized; but this section will empower such Magistrate to transfer the case, after taking cognizance of it, to any subordinate Magistrate—Budhan v. Issur Singh, 34 Cal. 926 (928).

But if a first class Magistrate transfers a case under subsection (2), he can transfer only those cases to a Subordinate Magistrate which the latter is competent to try or commit for trial.

599. "Of which he has taken cognizance" :—This section empowers the District Magistrate to transfer to Subordinate Magistrates only those cases of which he has taken cognizance. A Magistrate is said to take cognizance of a case under section 107 only when (and not before) he issues notice to the person charged to show cause why he should not be proceeded against under that section. Therefore, where the District Magistrate has not issued any notice to the person charged, that is, where he has not taken cognizance of a case under section 107, he cannot transfer the case to a subordinate Magistrate—Konda Reddy v. K. E., 41 Mad 246. This section enables a District Magistrate or Subdivisional Magistrate to transfer only those cases of which he has taken cognizance under the provisions of Sec. 190. It has no reference to cases which have been transferred to his Court—Darra v Mukat, 12 A.L.J. 277, 15 Cr.L.J. 357. In other words, a case which has once been transferred to a District Magistrate or Subdivisional Magistrate cannot be transferred by him again under Sec. 192—Bashir Husain v. Ali Husain, 38 All 166; Crown v. Nga So, 1 L.B.R. 86; Anonymous, 7 M.H.C.R. App 33. But where a case had been transferred by the Chief Court under sec 526 from the Dt. Magistrate of Rohtak to the Dt Magistrate of Hissar with a direction that the latter should either dispose of the case himself or transfer it to some other competent Magistrate in the District, and the District Magistrate of Hissar transferred the case under sec. 192 to an Honorary Magistrate, held that the District Magistrate of Hissar was competent under this section to make the transfer—Kishen Singh v. Crown, 1917 P.R. 30; Q. E. v. Mata Prasad, 19 All. 249.

Where a trying Magistrate sends up a report to the District Magistrate that an accused before him has committed perjury and altered a document filed in Court, the report amounts to a complaint, and the District Magistrate can take cognizance of the case under section 190 (a) and transfer it for trial under section 192 to another Magistrate subordinate to him—Suraj Prasad v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 825; Emp v. Sundar Sarup, 26 All 514.

600. At which stage case can be transferred :—The Magistrate can transfer the case, on taking cognizance of it. A District Magistrate is competent, under sec 190, to take cognizance without complaint, and to transfer the case to a subordinate Magistrate without such complaint—Crown v. Allahwarayo, 1 S.L.R. 119. He can transfer the case before any process has been issued to the accused—Asaram v. Bhagirathi, 7 N.L.R. 97, 12 Cr.L.J. 437. He can transfer a case even after summons has been issued against the accused—In re Azim Sheikh, 7 C.L.J. 249; Egbal v. Emp, 20 Cr.L.J. 413 (Pat.). But a case cannot be transferred under this section after it has been partly tried—Anonymous, 2 Weir 152, e.g. after all the evidence for the prosecution and the defence has been taken—Q. E. v. Radhe, 12 All 66. The transfer of a part-heard case, after the framing of the charge and the cross-examination of some of the prosecution witnesses, to another Magistrate for disposal is undesirable. A Magistrate who undertakes a trial and hears the witnesses should, if possible, finish it—Mazahar Ali v Emp, 50 Cal 223 (226).

'For inquiry or trial' :—This section empowers a Magistrate to transfer a case for inquiry or trial, but it does not empower him to transfer a case simply for the purpose of considering the report of an investigation under sec. 202, which he has himself ordered. The provisions of sections 192 and 202 do not entitle a Magistrate, after he has proceeded under the latter section, to make an order under the provisions of the former section transferring the case for the purpose of being dealt with under sec. 203 or 204, without a fresh investigation as contemplated by sec. 202—Mahabir v. Giribala, 29 C.W.N. 508 (509), 26 Cr.L.J. 990, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 742.

601. How much of the case need be transferred :—Where a complaint or a police report deals with several persons, it is not necessary that the entire case, i.e., the case regarding the offences committed according to the complaint or Police report, should be transferred. Whether the entire case has been transferred or not is a question of fact, depending on the intention of the transferring Magistrate, and this intention must be gathered from the order itself. Where no reservation is made, it may be concluded that the entire case has been transferred—Ajab Lal v Emp, 32 Cal 783. Thus, where a complaint was lodged against several persons, and the Magistrate after examining the complainant, issued summons against one of the accused only and transferred the case to a Subordinate Magistrate, it was held that the whole case of the complainant was transferred, and the Subordinate Magistrate could take proceedings against the other accused persons also—In re Azim Sheikh, 7 C.L.J. 249.

602. 'Subordinate to him':—A case can be transferred under this section to the Court of a subordinate Magistrate and not to a superior Magistrate. So, a third class Magistrate cannot transfer a case to a District Magistrate—Q E v. Radhe, 12 All. 66

The subordination of the Presidency Magistrate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate shall be deemed to be of the same kind and extent as the subordination of Magistrates and Benches to the District Magistrate under sec. 17 (1). The Chief Presidency Magistrate can under sec. 528 withdraw any case from any Presidency Magistrate and refer it for inquiry or trial to any other Presidency Magistrate—In re Nageswar, 1 Bom L.R. 347.

For the purpose of this section, an Additional District Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate; see sec 10 (3).

A village headman is not a Magistrate, and a case cannot be transferred to him—Q. E. v. Maung Gale, 1 L.B.R. 59.

603. Effect of transfer:—When a District Magistrate has transferred a case for trial to a Deputy Magistrate, the former ceases to have jurisdiction in the case so long as the transfer is in existence, and cannot take any further steps in the matter (e.g. issue warrants), unless the case is withdrawn to his own file under sec. 528—Golapdy v. Q E., 27 Cal. 979; Amrit Majhi v. K E., 46 Cal. 854. Until the transferring Magistrate withdraws the case from the file of the subordinate Magistrate (to whom the case was transferred) to that of his own Court, he has no power to make any order save an order for further inquiry under sec. 437 (now 436)—Ajab Lal v. Emp., 32 Cal. 783; Radhaballabh v. Benode Behari, 30 Cal. 449. In this respect this section differs from sec 202. Under that section the Magistrate receiving a complaint refers it to a subordinate Magistrate only for inquiry and report, and does not cease to have control over the case. The provisions of secs. 192 and 202 are separate and distinct and the powers conferred by one section do not curtail the power conferred by the other—Amrit Majhi v. K. E., 46 Cal. 854.

In a recent case it has been held that a Magistrate who has transferred a case under sec 192 to a Subordinate Magistrate cannot recall the case—Mahari v Baldeo, 7 P L.T. 530, 26 Cr.L.J. 1585 (1587). This view, it is submitted, is not correct. The learned Judge seems to have overlooked the new provisions of sec 528 sub-section (4).

When a case is, after issue of process, transferred from one Magistrate to another, the latter stands in the shoes of the Magistrate who originally issued the process. Therefore, if the second Magistrate discharges the accused and suo motu issues process against another person under sec. 190 clause (c), he cannot be said to be acting without jurisdiction—Hemendra v. Emp., 55 Cal. 1274, 30 Cr.L.J. 352.

604. Procedure before transfer :—*Notice to parties :—*Before a case is transferred under this section from one subordinate Court to another, the District Magistrate should give notice to the parties of such transfer—Teacotta v. Ameer Majee, 8 Cal. 393; Umrao v. Fakirchand, 3 All. 749; In re Saker Naik, 2 Bom. L.R. 342; In re Daud Hussain, Ratanlal 460; Imp. v. Sadashiv, 22 Bom. 549.

*Examination of complainant :—*Under sec. 200, proviso (a), when a complaint is made in writing, the Magistrate is not bound to examine the complainant before transferring the case under this section.

605. Procedure after transfer :—*Examination of complainant :—*If the transferring Magistrate has already examined the complainant, the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred is not bound to examine the complainant again—sec. 200 (c)

*Examination of prosecution witness :—*Even where the transferring Magistrate has examined all the prosecution witnesses, the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred is bound to examine the witnesses again. He cannot act upon the deposition of witnesses recorded by the transferring Magistrate—Q E v Bashir Khan, 14 All 346, In re Totz Venkata, 2 Weir 152, see also Dy. Leg. Rem. v Upendra, 12 C.W.N. 140

606. Transfer by High Court .—In the case of a transfer of a criminal case by the High Court from a Court subordinate to the District Magistrate to the District Magistrate's Court, it will be understood that the District Magistrate should try the case himself, unless the High Court has expressed that the District Magistrate shall have the power to transfer the case to a subordinate Court. But when the High Court transfers a case from the Court of one District Magistrate to the Court of another District Magistrate, it will be understood, unless the contrary is directly expressed, that the Magistrate to whom the transfer is made has power and jurisdiction to apply section 192, and to transfer the case to any Magistrate subordinate to him, who may be competent to try it—Q E. v Mata Prasad, 19 All. 249; Kishen Singh v. Crown, 1917 P R. 30

193. (1) Except as otherwise expressly provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, no Court of Session shall take cognizance of any offence as a Court of original jurisdiction unless the accused has been committed to it by a Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf such cases only as the Local Government by general or special order may direct them to try, or, in the case of Assistant Sessions Judges, as the Sessions Judge of the division, by general or special order, may make over to them for trial.

such cases only as the Local Government by general or special order may direct them to try or, * * * * as the Sessions Judge of the division by general or special order, may make over to them for trial.

Change :—The words "in the case of Assistant Sessions Judges" which occurred in subsection (2) after the words "may direct them to try" have been omitted by sec 46 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 "We propose to omit from section 193 (2) the words 'in the case of Assistant Sessions Judges' The section, as it stands at present (i.e. before the amendment) makes a distinction between Additional Sessions Judges and Assistant Sessions Judges, only allowing transfers by the Sessions Judge in the case of the latter. Considerable inconvenience has been felt owing to this limitation, which we propose to remedy by the omission of the words referred to above"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916. Under the present law, Sessions Judges will be able to make over the cases to Additional Sessions Judges as well as to Assistant Sessions Judges.

607. Object of this section :—The object of the requirement of a commitment before trial is to secure, in the case of a person charged with a grave offence, a preliminary inquiry which would afford him the opportunity of becoming acquainted with the circumstances of the offence imputed to him and enable him to make his defence—Ram Varma v. Q., 3 Mad. 351. The law contemplates that in the serious cases of which a Court of Session may take cognizance, the accused should have some information of the case he has to answer—Q. v. Chinna Vedagiri, 4 Mad 227.

for trial, and the Court of Session disposing of it did not 'try a case' within the meaning of this section. An Additional Sessions Judge empowered by the Government to try all cases which might be committed for trial by the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass an order on such reference—In re Dayaram, Ratanlal, 830. This decision is no longer good law, because the new sub-section (B) of sec. 123 added by the Amendment Act of 1923 expressly authorises the Sessions Judge to make over all references under sec. 123 to the Additional or Assistant Sessions Judge. In Benode Behari v. Emp., 50 Cal. 229, the word 'cases' under this section was held to include a reference under sec. 123; but such a laboured interpretation is no longer necessary.

610. Assistant Sessions Judge appointed temporarily—An Assistant Sessions Judge who has been directed by the Government to take over charge of the duties of the Sessions Judge during a temporary vacancy of the officer, is not an officer appointed to act as a Sessions Judge, and has no jurisdiction to try any case even as Assistant Sessions Judge, unless it was made over to him by a general or special order under the last para of this section—*Q. Change :—The words "in the case of Assistant Sessions Judges" which occurred in subsection (2) after the words "may direct them to try" have been omitted by sec. 46 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. "We propose to omit from section 193 (2) the words 'in the case of Assistant Sessions Judges' The section, as it stands at present (i.e. before the amendment) makes a distinction between Additional Sessions Judges and Assistant Sessions Judges, only allowing transfers by the Sessions Judge in the case of the latter. Considerable inconvenience has been felt owing to this limitation, which we propose to remedy by the omission of the words referred to above"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916 Under the present law, Sessions Judges will be able to make over the cases to Additional Sessions Judges as well as to Assistant Sessions Judges

607. Object of this section :—The object of the requirement of a commitment before trial is to secure, in the case of a person charged with a grave offence, a preliminary inquiry which would afford him the opportunity of becoming acquainted with the circumstances of the offence imputed to him and enable him to make his defence—Ram Varma v. Q, 3 Mad. 351 The law contemplates that in the serious cases of which a Court of Session may take cognizance, the accused should have some information of the case he has to answer—Q v Chinna Vedagiri, 4 Mad. 227.

(7) For the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie, that is to say :—

(c) Where no appeal lies, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the principal Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such first mentioned Court is situate.

(3) For the purposes of this section, a Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the appealable decrees or sentences of such former Court, or in the case of a Civil Court from whose decrees no appeal ordinarily lies, to the principal Court having ordinary original civil jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such Civil Court is situate :

(a) Where such appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate.

(b) Where such appeals lie to a Civil and also to a Revenue Court, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Civil or Revenue Court according to the nature of the case in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed.

Change :—This section has been substantially amended by sec 47 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923.

The changes introduced by the present Amendment are the following :—

(i) The words "with the previous sanction" have been omitted from clauses (a) (b) and (c) of sub-section (1). Under the old law, a private

Provided that—

(a) where appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate; and

(b) where appeals lie to a Civil and also to a Revenue Court, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Civil or Revenue Court, according to the nature of the case or proceeding in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed.

(4) The provisions of sub-section (1), with reference to the offences named therein, apply also to criminal conspiracies to commit such offences and to the abetment of such offences, and attempts to commit them.

person could launch a prosecution for the offences referred to in this section, after obtaining the sanction of the Court. Under the present law, by abolishing sanction altogether, the right of private individuals to prosecute for the said offences has been taken away. Sub-sections (4), (5) and (6) which dealt with sanction have also been omitted.

(ii) The words "in writing" have been added after the word "complaint" in clauses (a) (b) and (c); and the words "is alleged to have been committed" have been substituted for the words "have been committed" in clauses (b) and (c). For reasons, see notes under those words.

(iii) In sub-section (2) the word 'includes' has been substituted for 'means.'

(iv) Sub-section (3) has been re-numbered as sub-section (4)

(v) Sub-section (7) has been re-numbered as sub-section (3), because that sub-section should come in more properly after the definition of the word 'Court' in sub-section (2). The old clause (c) of sub-section (7) has now been incorporated into the body of sub-section (3) with this restriction: that it is now confined to civil Courts only.

(vi) Sub-section (5) is entirely new.

Reasons for the change:—"The provisions of section 195 cause constant and great difficulty, and various amendments have been suggested which we have considered at length. We have no doubt that it will not be possible to remedy the evils which are connected with this section so long as private individuals are allowed to prosecute for offences connected with the administration of justice. In our opinion the only effective way of dealing with this section is to allow prosecutions to be launched only by the public servant or by the Court.

"We see no reason why the public servant or the Court should not file a complaint exactly in the same way as a private individual would do in other cases, and our proposals in this connection with this section and the enlargement of section 476 involve the adoption of this principle. In our view section 195 should bar the cognizance by any Court of offences of this nature except upon such complaint, while the procedure to be followed when the Court desires to prosecute should be prescribed by section 476

"The adoption of this principle will at all events get rid of the objectionable practice of keeping a sanction, which has been granted to a private individual, hanging over the head of the accused person for a period of six months, which is frequently utilised for the various purposes of blackmail. In the case of a complaint by a Court or a public servant we do not think that it will be necessary to prescribe any limit of time.

"It will also, in our opinion, be a distinct advantage to get rid altogether of the term "sanction" in connection with these prosecutions, a result which will be effected by the amendments we propose

"We recognise that clause (a) of sub-section (1) stands on a somewhat different footing from clauses (b) and (c), but we think there is no reason to retain even in it any reference to a sanction, as prosecution under clause (a) can reasonably be launched in all cases on the direct complaint of a public servant"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

The object of the amendment is to stop private persons from obtaining sanction as a means of wreaking vengeance and to give the Court concerned full discretion in deciding whether any prosecution is necessary or not—Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 4 Bur.L.J. 213, 27 Cr.L.J. 669.

611. Sanction abolished—Effect of Amendment :—Since sanction has been abolished by the Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, a sanction granted after the 1st September, 1923 (the date on which the Amendment Act came into operation) is illegal—In re Gafur, 26 Bom. L.R. 1235, 26 Cr.L.J. 448. A sanction granted after 1st September 1923 is illegal, even though an application for sanction was made prior to that date. The order granting sanction cannot be treated even as a complaint—Baldeo Misser v. D. I. G. of Police, 51 Cal. 652 (655).

So also, where sanction was granted before the 1st September 1923, but no prosecution was launched by that time, further proceedings cannot be taken after that date on the strength of the sanction. A prosecution can then be started only on a complaint by the Court concerned—Ani v. Ah Yone, 2 Bur L.J. 289, Jawahir v Jaggu, 6 Lah 41, 26 P.L.R. 152, 26 Cr.L.J. 1163; Ameraj v Emp., 23 A.L.J. 35, 26 Cr.L.J. 751.

But where a sanction was obtained and the Court had taken cognizance of the offence, before the Amendment Act came into operation, the subsequent amendment of the law did not take away the jurisdiction of the Court to proceed with the trial, and did not necessitate a fresh complaint under the amended provisions—In re Appasamy, 49 M.L.J. 276, 27 Cr.L.J. 84; Muthia Goundan v. Chinna, 1924 M.W.N. 358, 26 Cr.L.J. 142; Emp. v. Akbar Ali, 7 Lah 99, 27 P.L.R. 181, 27 Cr.L.J. 724; Wasudeo v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 181 (Nag); Kewal Ram v Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 560 (All)

An application under sub-section (6) of the old section to revoke a sanction granted before the Amendment Act of 1923 is maintainable even after the coming into operation of the Amendment Act of 1923, because the right conferred by sub-section (6) of the old section was not a mere matter of procedure but a substantive right, and such right could not be taken away by any amending Act—Ramakrishna v Sithai Ammal, 48 Mad. 620 (F.B.), 49 M.L.J. 223, 27 Cr.L.J. 91 (practically overruling Nataraja v. Rangaswamy, 47 Mad 384, 46 M.L.J. 274, 25 Cr.L.J. 361, and Sesha Ayyar v. Public Prosecutor, 19 L.W. 463, 34 M.L.T. 353, 25 Cr.L.J. 702). Similarly, where proceedings under the old sec. 195 were commenced and the order of the subordinate Judge refusing to sanction a prosecution was passed under the old section, but during the pendency of an application to the District Judge against the order of refusal the new section came into operation, and the District Judge sanctioned the prosecution, held that the case was governed by sec. 6 (c) of the General Clauses Act, and the repeal of the old sec. 195 could not affect any pending investigation in respect of the right which had accrued to the complainant. The District Judge therefore did not act illegally in granting th sanction—Kashmire Lal v Kishen Dei, 26 Cr.L.J. 90, A I R 1924 All 563.

N. B.—It should be noted that many of the cases cited below are cases relating to sanctions, but the principle of those cases applies also to complaints, for under the old law no distinction was made between a sanction and a complaint. The cases noted below are therefore cited with certain verbal alterations.

612. Object of section :—The object of this section is to protect persons from being needlessly harassed by rash, baseless or vexatious prosecutions at the instance of private individuals for the offences specified—Parameshwaran v Emp, 39 Mad. 677; Palaniappa v. Ramasamy, 32 M L J 54, to protect persons from criminal prosecution by persons actuated by personal malice or ill-will or frivolity of disposition—Baliwant v. Umed Singh, 18 All 203; Emp. v. Mahadeo, 1887 A W N. 142; Ram Prasad v Sooba, 1 C W N 400; to protect persons from criminal prosecutions upon insufficient grounds and to ensure prosecution only when the Court after due consideration is satisfied that there is a proper case to put a party on his trial—Tuck Sew v Hain, 4 L.B R 234; to insist on there being prosecution only when the public justice demands it and to prevent prosecution when public interest cannot be served—Ram Prasad v. Sooba, 1 C W N. 400; Vasteva Puttaralya v. Lakshmi, 2 Weir 178, Q E v Girdharlal, Ratanlal 374; In re Chandra Kanta, 3 C W.N. 3; Kishan v. Sheo Dial, 1893 A.W.N 104; and to save the time of Criminal Courts from being wasted by endless prosecutions without convictions—Parameshwaran v Emp, 39 Mad 677; Ram Prasad v. Sooba Roy, 1 C W N 400

Section 195, though it forms a part of the Code of Procedure, in reality contains a provision of the substantive law of crimes. It does not deal with the competency of the Courts, nor lay down which of several Courts shall in any particular matter have jurisdiction to try the case. It in reality lays down that the offences therein referred to shall not be deemed to be any offence at all, except on the complaint of the persons or the Courts therein specified, it enhances the connotation of those offences and limits the scope of their definition—Fakir Mahomed v. Emp, 21 S.L R 1, 27 Cr L.J. 1105 (1110)

613. Duty of Court :—A complaint ought not to be made under this section when there is no probability of conviction. It is necessary for the Court before making a complaint, to consider the evidence and to decide as to whether there is a prima facie case and any reasonable chance of conviction being obtained—Abboo v Kuppasawmy, 2 Weir, 188; In re Paree Kunhammad, 26 Mad. 116; Chakrapani v. K. E, 12 M.L.J. 408; Abboo Chetty v. Kuppasawmy, 12 M.L.J. 302; Munisami v. Rajaratnam, 44 M.L.J. 774; Kali Charan v. Basudeo, 12 C.W.N. 3; Kusum Sao v. Janak Lal, 4 P.L.J. 374; In re Raoji, 7 Bom. L.R 732 (per Russel J.); Palaniappa v. Ramasami, 32 M.L.J. 54; Kidha Singh v. Emp., 13 A.L.J. 1111; Mutayya v. Maung Shwe, 3 Bur L.T. 152, 11 Cr.L.J. 749;

It would be an abuse of the powers vested in a Court of justice if complaints were made by it on the principle that though the conviction of the party complained against is a mere possibility, it is desirable that the matter should be thrashed out, so that it may be decided whether or not an offence has been committed—Jadunandan v. Emp., 37 Cal. 250.

In making a complaint, the Court must act on its own independent judgment and should not be guided by the opinions of others. It should not act merely on the report of the Police—Bapu v. Bapu, 39 Mad. 750 (757); Q. E. v. Sheikh Beart, 10 Mad. 232 (239).

614. Sub-section (1)—Complaint—Under the present law, a Court must make a complaint and cannot directly order prosecution. The complaint must set forth the offence, the precise facts on which it is based and the evidence available for proving it—Ram prasad v. Emp., 25 A.L.J. 639, 28 Cr.L.J. 543.

If a Court adopts the procedure laid down in sec. 476, and after making the necessary inquiry under that section, sends the case to a first class Magistrate, such action amounts to making a complaint—Q. E. v. Rachappa, 13 Bom. 109. In order to make a complaint under this section, the Judge or Munsiff will not have to appear before a Magistrate and make a complaint on oath like an ordinary complainant. If he adopts the procedure under sec. 476, that would be sufficient. Section 476 was enacted with the object of avoiding the inconvenience which might be caused if a Munsiff or Subordinate Judge or a Judge were obliged to appear before a Magistrate, like a private individual, and make a complaint on oath to lay the foundation of a prosecution—Ishri Prasad v. Sham Lal, 7 All. 871 (F.B.).

But it should be noted that sec. 476 refers only to offences 'when committed before the Court' and the ruling in 7 All. 871 must be applied to those cases only. But if the offence is committed before a public servant other than a Court, his proper course is to prepare an ordinary complaint. See Nga Lu Po v. K. E., U.B.R. (1908) Cr.P.C. 13, 10 Cr.L.J. 12.

But even in the case of complaints by public servants, the law is not so stringent as in the case of complaints by ordinary persons. Thus, where a Sub-Inspector drew up what was virtually a complaint and sent it up along with a calendar of witnesses to his immediate superior praying that a case under sec. 182 I.P.C. be lodged against the accused, and then the superior officer got the documents presented to the Magistrate by the Court Inspector, it was held that there was a sufficient complaint by the Sub-Inspector, although it was not addressed to the Magistrate as required by sec. 4 (h) but to his superior officer—Mehr Chiragh Din v. Crown, 4 Lah. 359. So also, where a police officer made a report that a certain person had lodged a false information before him, and recommended that that person might be prosecuted, held that the report virtually amounted to a complaint within the meaning of sec. 195—Dilan Singh v. Emp, 40 Cal. 360.

The words "in writing" have been inserted after the word "complaint" in order to remove the inconvenience which might be felt if it was made incumbent on the public servant to attend the Court and to appear before the Magistrate in order to lodge the complaint. It will be sufficient if he sends a written complaint to the Magistrate. It is for this reason that clause (aa) has been added to sec. 200, so that it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to examine the public servant (complainant) when taking cognizance of the offence—Lachmi Singh v. K. E., 5 P.L.T. 505, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 691, 25 Cr.L.J. 972.

If an offence under sec 173 I. P. C. is committed before a public servant, the Court shall not take cognizance of the offence without a complaint in writing from the public servant; and it is not open to a Magistrate to ignore the provisions of this clause by the device of instituting the case under another section of the I. P. Code. Hence the Magistrate cannot say that he took cognizance of an offence under sec. 225B of the Penal Code, and that having done so, he was entitled under sec. 238 of the Cr. P. Code to convict the accused under sec 173 I. P. Code which he regarded as a minor offence of the same character as that for which a penalty is provided under sec 225B I. P. Code—Narain Singh v. K. E., 47 All 114, 22 A L J 1005, 26 Cr L J. 446, A.I.R. 1925 All. 129

Instances of complaints:—Where a Munsiff who heard a suit was of opinion that certain persons should be prosecuted for offences under Secs. 193, 463, 471 I. P. C and directed them to be sent to a Magistrate for inquiry, it was held that the Munsiff's order was a complaint within the meaning of this section—Ishri Prosad v. Sham Lal, 7 All 871 (F.B.) Where a Magistrate ordered the prosecution of a person, and sent the case to another Magistrate for inquiry, it was held that the order must be deemed to be a complaint under Sec 476—Q. E. v. Yendava, 7 Mad 189. Where a Civil Judge trying a rent suit was of opinion that a party to the suit had committed perjury, and sent the record to the Collector for starting a case under Sec. 193 I. P. C, it was held that the order was a complaint, though it was not an order under Sec 476—Emp. v. Sundar Sarup, 26 All. 514 Where a Judge passed an order to the following effect—"I complain that R filed two false and forged bonds in the Court of Small Causes etc" and sent the papers to the District Magistrate for taking action, it was held that the order of the Judge was a complaint—Rajaram v. K E, 12 A L-J. 881, 15 Cr.L J. 700. Where the accused removed the property which had been attached in execution of a decree, and on the report of the attaching officer the District Judge, being of opinion that the accused should be prosecuted, ordered the papers to be sent to the Deputy Commissioner, it was held that the order of the District Judge operated as a complaint—Crown v. Nihala, 1904 P.L.R. 3, 1 Cr.L.J 36 Where a Munsiff being of opinion that a document filed in a case before him had been tampered with, communicated his suspicions to the District Judge who thereupon wrote to the District Magistrate requesting him to take action, it was held that the letter of the District Judge amounted to a complaint—Debi Prasad v. K. E., 35 All. 8, 13 Cr.L.J. 829. Where the District Judge forwarded to the District Magistrate a copy of his judgment, with a letter in which he called attention to his remarks as regards the forgery of a will and requested the latter to take up the matter for judicial investigation, the letter was a sufficient complaint—In re Aparoa, 20 Bom.L.R. 1018. Where a Magistrate who had made a certain alteration in a document filed in Court and had thus committed an offence, the report amounted to a complaint—Suraj Prasad v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 825.

614A. Want of Complaint :—Under clause (b) of section 537 before it was amended in 1923, the want of a sanction or any irregularity in the matter of, a sanction or in a proceeding under sec. 476 did not stand in the way of a conviction, if it was otherwise sound. This clause does not any longer find its place in sec 537. The inference is that want of a regular complaint by a public servant or a Court must be fatal to a prosecution—Ameraj v. Emp., 23 A.L.J. 35, 26 Cr.L.J. 751; Mohim Chandra v. Emp., 56 Cal. 824, 30 Cr.L.J. 658, 33 C.W.N. 285; Girdhari Lal v. Emp., 29 O.C. 1, 26 Cr.L.J. 929, Janki Prasad v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 901 (All), Ram Samujh v. Emp., 3 O.W.N. 614, 27 Cr.L.J. 969, 1 Luck. 523.

615. Subordination of public servants :—The subordination of one public servant to another may arise either from express enactment or from the fact that both the public servants belong to the same department, one being superior in rank to another—Narasimhaya v. Venkatasami, 18 M.L.J. 584, 8 Cr.L.J. 400.

A constable is subordinate to the Superintendent of Police—Tarnee v. Bonomali, 19 W.R. 33. The District Magistrate (in his executive capacity) is at the head of the Police, and the Police (e.g., the Superintendent of Police) is subordinate to him—Emp. v. Ram Khilawan, 1890 A.W.N. 167; Emp. v. Shib Singh, 27 All. 292, Chhote Lal v. Chhedi Lal, 45 All. 135; Shibboo v. Crown, 1910 P.R. 6, 11 Cr.L.J. 252; (Contra—Ramasory Lal v. Q. E., 27 Cal. 452 and Khazan Singh v. Kirpa Singh, 4 Lah. 130. In these two cases it has been held that although the police officers in a district are generally subordinate to the District Magistrate, the subordination contemplated by sec 195 is not such subordination; and that sec 195 contemplates the subordination of the police officers to some superior officer of Police). If the District Magistrate makes the complaint at the request of the police, the complaint is not improper—Emp. v. Saroda, 32 Cal. 180.

A sub-divisional Magistrate passing an order under sec 144 does so as a public servant and not as a Court. He is subordinate to the District Magistrate and not to the Sessions Judge (sec 17). Sub-section (3) of sec 195 does not apply to the case—Maini Misser v. Emp., 6 Pat. 39, 28 Cr.L.J. 353. A commissioner appointed by the Court to examine accounts is a public servant subordinate to the Court which appointed him—Nana Khanderao, 29 Bom. L.R. 1476, 28 Cr.L.J. 1021 (1022)

The Secretary of a Municipal Board is subordinate to the Chairman—In re Sheo Prasad, 1892 A.W.N. 31.

The Registrar of the Small Cause Court is subordinate to the Chief Judge of the Court—In re Goverdhandas, 27 Bom. 130

A Station House Officer is not subordinate to the Taluk Magistrate—Q v. Velayudam, 6 Mad. 146. The Police is not subordinate to the Honorary Magistrate—Emp. v. Baldeo, 1895 A.W.N. 152; Tarinee v. Bonomali, 19 W R 33, or to the Township Magistrate—Crown v. Mizar, 1 L B R 101. Neither the Police nor the Sub-Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge—Reddi Rama Reddi v. Pub. Prosecutor, 27 M L J 586, 15 Cr L J 612. A village Munsiff or village Magistrate is not subordinate to a Sub-Magistrate—Narasimhaya v Venkatasami, 18 M.L.J. 584 (dissenting from Q v. Perianan, 4 Mad. 241).

616. Clause (b) :—The power of a Court to complain in respect of offences mentioned in clause (b) is not restricted, as under clause (c), to the parties before it—Emp. v. Syed Khan, 3 Rang. 303 (F.B.), A I R. 1925 Rang. 321

Perjury—In making a complaint against a witness for perjury the Court should remember that the statement must be intentionally false in order to justify a prosecution—Sheodahin v. Bandhan, 2 A.L.J. 836. The essential ingredient of the offence is the intention of the person—In re Muni Buksh, 3 C.W.N. 81

Again, the statement alleged to be false must have a bearing upon the matter in issue. When the question is neither material to the issue in the case nor goes to the credit of the witness, he is not liable to prosecution—Sheodahin v Bandhan, 2 A.L.J. 836; Khajumal v Crown, 14 S L R. 69; Maharaja Prasad v Emp., 21 A.L.J. 673, 24 Cr.L.J. 779.

Prosecution for perjury ought not to be made in respect of a loose or inaccurate statement which is remotely relevant to the case and which is not pressed home to the witness in cross-examination—Muquaddos v Zahuruddin, 20 Cr.L.J. 564 (All). A prosecution for perjury ought not to be made while the principal proceeding in respect of which the perjury is said to have been committed is pending. If such a prosecution is to be started, it ought to be started after the principal proceeding has terminated—In re Vasudev, 24 Bom. L.R. 1153. A complaint for perjury should not be made by the Court in cases where it will have to determine the question by merely weighing the evidence on both sides—Padarath v Rattan Singh, 5 P.L.J. 23, 1 P.L.T. 458, 21 Cr.L.J. 145. A prosecution for perjury in respect of a piece of evidence should not generally be made where the trial Court and the Appellate Court have taken different views as to its credibility—Hirulal v. Lila Mahton, 3 P.L.T. 60.

A prosecution for offences under secs. 193, 467 and 471 I P. C. in respect of a handnote sued upon may be made even though the suit was compromised after it was heard in part—Dulloo v. D. I. G. of Police, 49 Cal. 551, 23 Cr.L.J. 138.

In considering the question whether a prosecution for perjury shall or shall not be made, it is a safe rule to give the witness a locus penitentiae and an opportunity to correct himself, and if he subsequently corrects his false statement, prosecution is inadvisable—Hukum Chand v. Emp., 29 Cr.L.J. 679 (Lah.); In re Pandu, 19 Bom. L.R. 61, 18 Cr L.J. 480 (481); Maharaj Prasad v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 673.

Where a Sessions Judge believes the evidence of a witness given before him, but disbelieves the evidence given by him before the committing Magistrate, he should not prosecute for perjury in the alternative but he may prosecute for giving false evidence before the Magistrate—Public Prosecutor v. Nallan, 2 Weir 166.

617. Contradictory statements :—Whether a prosecution should be made for giving false evidence on the ground that the witness made contradictory statements, depends upon the circumstances of each case—Nga Lu Pe v. Emp., 4 Bur LT 262, 13 Cr L.J. 58. The mere fact that a witness made contradictory statements in the course of a single deposition is not a ground of prosecution—In re Chennamma, 2 Weir 169, Hari Churn v. Emp., 4 C.W.N. 249, in such a case the Court should take into consideration the whole deposition—In re Sahib Bacha, 2 Weir 168, and should consider if the contradiction may possibly be due to some confusion or mistake—In re Mun: Buksh, 3 C.W.N. 81. Nor should the Court make a complaint on the mere fact that the witness made two contradictory statements, one before the committing Magistrate and another at the trial. The Court should consider how the contradiction has happened and why the witness in the trial has resiled from his statement made before the committing Magistrate. Where the witness had made false statements before the committing Magistrate but deposed truly at the trial, the High Court refused to prosecute—Emp v Tripura Shankar, 37 Cal 618, 11 Cr.L.J. 360. Before making a complaint in respect of contradictory statements it would be necessary and proper to allow the person, against whom the complaint is made, an opportunity to explain the statements fully and to state the circumstances under which they came to be made—Iqbal v. Wilayat, 17 Cr L.J. 93 (All.); Fazal Din v Crown, 3 Lah. L.J. 442.

A Court should not prosecute merely where there is a discrepancy between a statement made on oath and a statement made under circumstances in which the witness is not bound to state the truth, e.g. where a person made two contradictory statements one in a petition in which he is not bound to state the truth, and another in a deposition—In re Chennamma, 2 Weir 169.

Where a person made two contradictory statements, one before a Magistrate and another before a Subordinate Judge, it is necessary that there should be a proper complaint for prosecution on each branch of the alternative, i.e. one complaint from the Magistrate and another from the Subordinate Judge. The Court to which both Courts are subordinate may properly make the complaint where one Court is not subordinate to the other—Emp. v. Purshottam, 45 Bom. 834 (F.B.), 23 Bom. L.R. 1, 22 Cr.L.J. 241.

618. False Charge—Where a Magistrate dismisses a complaint as false, and is of opinion that the complainant ought to be proceeded against under sec. 211 I. P. Code, the proper procedure for him to follow is to make a complaint under sec. 195 Cr. P. Code, and not to hold an inquiry into the case himself under Ch. XVIII and commit the complainant to the Court of Session for trial under sec. 211 I. P. Code—Ambika v. Emp., 5 Pat. 450, 7 P.L.T. 716, 27 Cr.L.J. 987.

A complaint for an offence under Sec. 211 I. P. C. can be made only when the case is deliberately false; but where the case brought is not false in substance but is bolstered up by false evidence, prosecution should be made for an offence not under sec. 211 but under sec. 195 I. P. C.—Bholanath v. Harimohan, 7 C.L.J. 169.

Mere acquittal of the person against whom the charge was made is not sufficient for a prosecution under Sec. 211 I. P. C. There must be more than a mere acquittal; there must be a reasonable belief in the mind of the prosecuting Court that there was no foundation whatever for the original charge; there must be a belief that in instituting the criminal proceedings the accused had acted knowingly without belief in the truth of the allegations made by himself and recklessly without caring whether the allegations were true or false—Kusum v. Janaklal, 4 P.L.J. 374.

The fact that the complainant fails to prove his case is by itself not sufficient to sanction a prosecution under sec. 211 I. P. Code. It must be established satisfactorily that the complaint was made with intent to cause injury or that it was a false complaint made with the knowledge that it was false—Bhuan Kahar v. Emp., 6 P.L.T. 365, 26 Cr.L.J. 141.

Before making a complaint for bringing a false case, it is necessary that the case must be judicially determined; the original case must be disposed of according to law before proceedings can be taken for prosecution for false charge—Gunamony v. Q. E., 3 C.W.N. 758; In re Sahiram, 5 C.W.N. 254; Munshi Isser v. K. E., 14 C.W.N. 765, 11 Cr.L.J. 354; Sheikh Kutub Ali v. Emp., 3 C.W.N. 490; In re Ningappa, 48 Bom. 360, 26 Bom L.R. 183. A Magistrate is not competent to order the prosecution of the complainant for making a false complaint unless that complaint is dismissed as false—Gunamony v. Q. E., 3 C.W.N. 758; Aly Mahomed v. Emp., 1912 P.R. 2. If the original case is neither tried out nor dismissed on evidence taken, the prosecution is invalid—Ram Sarup v. K. E., 4 O.C. 127.

619. False Claim—Before prosecuting a person under sec. 219 I. P. C. for bringing a false claim, that person should be allowed an opportunity of proving his claim; a prosecution should not be made when that person has been thwarted in his attempt to establish the correctness of his claim by the unwarranted activities of the Police acting as the agent of the other party—Khairati Ram v. Crown, 3 Lah. L.J. 537.

620. False charges made before police :—A complaint by the Court is necessary when the offences referred to in this clause are committed in or in relation to any proceeding in Court; no complaint is necessary when the offence is committed in police proceedings, e.g. when a false charge is made to the Police and has not been followed by a judicial investigation thereof by a Court—Tayabullah v. Emp., 43 Cal. 1152; Ramasami v. Q. E., 7 Mad. 292; Anon., 2 Weir 162, Putiram v. Mahomed Kasim, 3 C.W.N. 33; Emp v. Irad Ally 4 Cal. 869; Karim Baksh v. Emp., 1905 P.R. 12; Q. E. v. Ganpat, Ratanlal 704; Dhanka v. Umroo Singh, 30 All. 58; Bakshi v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 805; Q. E. v. Sheikh Beari, 10 Mad. 232; Bholu v. Punaji, 23 N.L.R. 136, 28 Cr.L.J. 934. If, however, the information to the police was followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and on the same charges as those contained in the information to the Police, and the complaint was investigated by the Court and found to be false, a complaint of the Court would be necessary for prosecuting the false complainant because it was an offence committed in relation to a proceeding in Court—Crown v. Ananda Lal, 44 Cal. 650; Jogendra v. Emp., 33 Cal. 1; Q. E. v. Sham Lal, 14 Cal. 707; Jadunandan v. Emp., 37 Cal. 250, Po Hlaing v. Ba E., 6 L.B.R. 50, 13 Cr.L.J. 565, Nagapan v. Emp., 1 Bur. L.J. 258. Contra—Prag Datt v. Emp., 51 All. 382, 27 A.L.J. 68 Where an information to the police is followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and the same charge, and the police investigates the case and reports that it is false, the complaint of the Court is necessary even in respect of the false charge made to the police, on the ground that it was an offence committed in relation to a proceeding in Court. The fact that the complaint was not investigated or proceeded with by the Court does not make any difference—Md. Yasin v. Emp., 4 Pat. 323, 6 P.L.T. 457, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 483, Daroga Gope v. Emp., 5 Pat. 33, 6 P.L.T. 515, 26 Cr.L.J. 1269, Chuhermal v. Emp., 23 S.L.R. 285, 30 Cr.L.J. 732 (734).

If a false charge is made by A before the police against three persons B, C and D, but the police takes criminal proceedings in Court against B and C but releases D from the charge, and B and C are acquitted by the Court, held that a complaint of the Court is necessary for the prosecution of A for making false charge against B and C, but no complaint is necessary for the prosecution of A for making false charge against D, because there was no proceeding in Court against D, he having been released by the police before the case came to Court—Emp. v. Kashi Ram, 46 All. 906 (910, 912), dissenting from Emperor v. Hardwar, 34 All. 522 in which it was held that, under similar circumstances, a complaint of the Court would be necessary for the prosecution of A for making false charge against D, because the charge against D led to the proceeding in Court although D was not charged in Court.

“Alleged to have been committed”—These words have been substituted for the simple word “committed” occurring in the old section. See Note 626 under clause (c) infra.

620. False charges made before police :—A complaint by the Court is necessary when the offences referred to in this clause are committed in or in relation to any proceeding in Court; no complaint is necessary when the offence is committed in police proceedings, e.g. when a false charge is made to the Police and has not been followed by a judicial investigation thereof by a Court—Tayabullah v. Emp., 43 Cal. 1152; Ramasami v. Q. E., 7 Mad. 292; Anon., 2 Welr. 162; Putiram v. Mahomed Kasim, 3 C.W.N. 33; Emp. v. Irad Ally, 4 Cal. 809; Karim Baksh v. Emp., 1905 P.R. 12; Q. E. v. Ganpat, Ratanlal 704; Dhanka v. Umroo Singh, 30 All. 58; Bakshi v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 805, Q. E. v. Sheikh Beari, 10 Mad. 232; Bholu v. Punaji, 23 N.L.R. 136, 28 Cr.L.J. 934. If, however, the information to the police was followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and on the same charges as those contained in the information to the Police, and the complaint was investigated by the Court and found to be false, a complaint of the Court would be necessary for prosecuting the false complainant because it was an offence committed in relation to a proceeding in Court—Crown v. Ananda Lal, 44 Cal. 650; Jogendra v. Emp., 33 Cal. 1, Q. E. v. Sham Lal, 14 Cal. 707; Jadunandan v. Emp., 37 Cal. 250, Po Hlaing v. Ba E., 6 L.B.R. 50, 13 Cr.L.J. 565, Nagapan v. Emp., 1 Bur. L.J. 258. Contra—Prag Datt v. Emp., 51 All. 382, 27 A.L.J. 68. Where an information to the police is followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and the same charge, and the police investigates the case and reports that it is false, the complaint of the Court is necessary even in respect of the false charge made to the police, on the ground that it was an offence committed in relation to a proceeding in Court. The fact that the complaint was not investigated or proceeded with by the Court does not make any difference—Md. Yasin v. Emp., 4 Pat. 323, 6 P.L.T. 457, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 483, Daroga Gope v. Emp., 5 Pat. 33, 6 P.L.T. 515, 26 Cr.L.J. 1260, Chuhermal v. Emp., 23 S.L.R. 285, 30 Cr.L.J. 732 (734).

If a false charge is made by A before the police against three persons B, C and D, but the police takes criminal proceedings in Court against B and C but releases D from the charge, and B and C are acquitted by the Court, held that a complaint of the Court is necessary for the prosecution of A for making false charge against B and C, but no complaint is necessary for the prosecution of A for making false charge against D, because there was no proceeding in Court against D, he having been released by the police before the case came to Court Emp. v. Kashi Ram, 46 All. 906 (910, 912), dissenting from Emperor v. Hardwar, 34 All. 522 in which it was held that, under similar circumstances, a complaint of the Court would be necessary for the prosecution of A for making false charge against D, because the charge against D led to the proceeding in Court although D was not charged in Court.

"Alleged to have been committed":—These words have been substituted for the simple word "committed" occurring in the old section. See Note 626 under clause (c) infra

621. "In relation to":—The words "in relation to" in this clause are very general and are wide enough to cover a proceeding in contemplation before a Criminal Court, though the proceeding may not have begun when the offence was committed. Therefore, sanction (complaint) is necessary for the prosecution of a person for abetment of perjury, though the main case in which the false evidence was intended to be given was not then commenced but was in contemplation—In re Vasudeo, 24 Bom. L.R. 1153, 24 Cr.L.J. 171; Chuhermal v. Emp., 23 S.L.R. 285, 30 Cr.L.J. 732 (734). But the Calcutta High Court is of opinion that the words "in relation to" mean that there must be some proceeding actually pending in a Court, in relation to which the offence (e.g. fabrication of false evidence) is alleged to have been committed. Where there was no such proceeding pending in any Court, but there was simply an investigation being held into the matter of a complaint during the course of which the offence was alleged to have been committed, no complaint is necessary under this section—Jagat Chandra v. Q. E., 26 Cal. 786 (790).

This section does not apply where the fabrication of false evidence was made not with the intention of using that evidence in a Court, but only with the intention of influencing the Police in their investigation—Emp v. Ismail, 52 Bom. 385, 30 Bom.L.R. 330, 29 Cr.L.J. 403 (406).

Where there was no proceeding, pending or disposed of, in which or in relation to which, an offence under sec. 193 I. P. Code is said to have been committed, no complaint is necessary—In re Govind Pandurang, 45 Bom. 608 (671), 22 Bom. L.R. 1239, 22 Cr.L.J. 49.

622. Court:—The word "Court" in this section has a wider meaning than a Court of Justice as defined in the Penal Code. Having regard to the obvious purpose for which this section was enacted, the widest possible meaning should be given to this word, and it will include a tribunal empowered to deal with a particular matter and authorised to receive evidence on that matter in order to come to a determination (e.g. a tribunal formed under the Calcutta Improvement Act)—Nunda Lal v. Kheira Mohan, 45 Cal. 585, Raghubans v. Kokil, 17 Cal. 872; Seadut Ali v. Emp., 11 C.W.N. 909.

The word "Court" cannot be so construed as to include a Court in a Native State, e.g. Baroda Court—In re Muljibhai, 49 Bom. 860, 27 Bom. L.R. 1063, 26 Cr.L.J. 1456.

The expression 'Court' in sec. 195 is of wider scope than the expression Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court in sec. 476. This is indicated by the word 'includes' occurring in sec. 195 (2). Section 476 speaks of a civil, revenue or criminal Court, it does not refer to any Court other than such Courts, whereas sec. 195 refers to Courts in general—Kanhaiya Lal v. Bhagwan Das, 48 All. 60, 23 A.L.J. 956, 26 Cr.L.J. 1485, A.I.R. 1926 All. 30; Bilas Singh v. Emp., 47 All. 934, 23 A.L.J. 845, A.I.R. 1925 All. 737 (per Sulaiman J.; Daniels J. contra). But the Calcutta High Court holds that although the word used in sub-section (2) of this section is 'includes,' the Courts which can make a complaint under this section are restricted to the Courts detailed in sec. 476. Reading sec. 476 together with sec. 195, it is difficult to see what would be the Court contemplated by sec. 195 other than Civil, Revenue or Criminal Courts—Galstaun v. Banku Behari, 31 C.W.N. 825 (827), 28 Cr.L.J. 809.

What are 'Courts':—A Collector acting in appraisal proceedings under Secs 69 and 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—Raghubans v. Kokil, 17 Cal. 872; a Certificate Officer acting under section 6 of Bengal Act I of 1895 (Public Demands Recovery Act)—Sunder v. Sital, 28 Cal. 217; a Tahsildar holding an enquiry as to whether a transfer of names in a land register should be made or not is a Court, since he is authorised under Madras Act III of 1869 to receive evidence and to come to a judicial determination as to whether the transfer should be made or not—Q. E. v. Munda, 24 Mad. 121; a village Munsiff trying a case under Regulation IV of 1816—Q. E. v. Venkayya, 11 Mad. 375; a Registrar of the Presidency Small Cause Court of Calcutta is a Court, since he is entitled to decide the question of service of summons, and is entitled to receive evidence in order to come to a finding on that matter—Balchand v. Taraknath, 18 C.W.N. 1323, 16 Cr.L.J. 151; a District Judge determining the validity of election under Sec 22 Bombay District Municipalities Act (III of 1911)—In re Nanchand, 37 Bom 365; an Income Tax Collector—In re Punamchand, 38 Bom 642; Nataraja v. Emp., 36 Mad. 72; K. E. v. Rup Singh, 1905 P.R. 44, a tribunal constituted by the Calcutta Improvement Act (V of 1911)—Nundo Lal v. Khetra Mohan, 45 Cal. 585, a Deputy Commissioner acting under 5 (ii) or 5 (iii) of the Rules made under sec. 240 of the Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911)—Karimulla v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 525 (Lah.)

What are not Courts:—A Collector or Deputy Collector acting under the Land Acquisition Act—Durga Das v. Q. E., 27 Cal. 820; Ezra v. Secretary of State, 30 Cal. 36, 7 C.W.N. 249, Galstaun v. Banku Behari, 31 C.W.N. 825; a Collector to whom an application is made to replace a damaged stamp—Q. v. Gour Mohan, 11 W.R. 48, a Commissioner appointed for the examination of a witness—Seadut Ali v. Emp., 11 C.W.N. 909; an arbitrator appointed by the Court—Puttiah v. Veerasami, 17 M.L.J. 420, Mula Mal v. Chiranjilal, 1914 P.R. 3, 15 Cr.L.J. 358; a Registration officer—Gopi Nath v. Kuldip, 11 Cal. 566; Mulfat v. Emp., 10 C.W.N. 222, a Police officer examining a person under section 161 in the course of an investigation—Q. E. v. Ismail, 11 Bom. 659; a Police patel—Emp. v. Irbasapa, 4 Bom 479, an Excise Collector—Mahadeo v. Narayan, 10 C.W.N. 220, an Assistant Collector holding a departmental inquiry under the Bombay Land Revenue Code into the misconduct of a subordinate—In re Chotalal, 22 Bom 936, a Collector in his administrative (and not judicial) capacity—Emp. v. Santi Lal, 42 All. 130; a certificate Officer acting under B & O Public Demands Recovery Act—Jharu Lal v. Mohant Madan Das, 2 Pat 257, (but see 28 Cal. 217 cited above), a Naeb Tahsildar acting in his administrative capacity as Revenue officer and not in his judicial capacity as a Revenue Court—Crown v. Lehna Singh, 1915 P.R. 18; a District Judge in his capacity as District Registrar—Dina Nath v. Nek Ram, 21 A.L.J. 88;

Magistrate passing order under section 144 of this Code does so as a public servant and not as a Court—Natarajan v. Rangasami, 44 M.L.J. 328.

623. What Court can make complaint :—The only Courts that can make complaints for prosecution for an offence are those before which the alleged offence was committed, or the Courts to which such Courts are subordinate—Jaggut v. Kashi Chunder, 6 Cal. 440. Where a plaintiff first instituted a suit in one Court and obtained a decree for a part of his claim, and then presented a fresh claim in another Court in respect of the item disallowed by the first Court, and fraudulently obtained an ex parte decree, whereupon the first Court took action under sec. 195 Cr P C. and made a complaint in writing under sec. 210 I. P. Code, held that the action could only be taken by the second Court, and not by the first Court, because the institution of the second suit and the obtaining of a decree by fraudulent means could not be held to be an offence committed in relation to proceedings in the first Court—Wishnu v. Crown, 6 Lah. 445, 26 P.L.R. 717, 26 Cr.L.J. 1588.

As a general rule, complaints should be made by the Court before which the offence is alleged to have been committed and not by any other Court—In re Raja of Venkatagiri, 6 M.H.C.R. 92; Nga Aung v. K. E., 9 Bur. L.T. 202, 18 Cr.L.J. 97; Karim Baksh v. Mulchand, 1879 P.R. 29. But a complaint may be made in the first instance by the superior Court, even though no complaint was made by the subordinate Court before which the offence was committed—Palaniappa v. Annamalai, 27 Mad. 223; Bhadeswar v. Kampla Prasad, 35 All. 90, 11 A.L.J. 11. Thus, the High Court can make a complaint while exercising its powers of revision—Ponnusami v. Chockalingam, 25 M.L.J. 593, 14 Cr.L.J. 624, Gudala v. Jamal, 16 Cr.L.J. 740 (Mad.), and consequently the High Court can direct that its order in the revision case should issue as a complaint to the Magistrate—Syed Khan v. Nagoor, 3 Bur. L.J. 141, 26 Cr.L.J. 262.

The Court contemplated by this section is the Court before which the offence is committed. Where, therefore, the offence of perjury was committed before the Sessions Court of Ahmedabad, and subsequently a portion of the territory subject to its jurisdiction was placed under the newly constituted Sessions Court of Kaira, held that the new Sessions Judge, though having territorial jurisdiction over the accused, had no power to make a complaint regarding the offence which was committed before the Sessions Court of Ahmedabad—In re Manehlal, 28 Bom.L.R. 1296, 28 Cr.L.J. 49.

Transfer of Judge :—As a matter of convenience and expediency, the complaint should be made by the Judge who tried the case, if he is present, if he is not present, it may be made by any other Judge of the same Court—Emp. v. Molla Fuzla Karim, 33 Cal. 193; Yad Ram v. Risal, 7 A.L.J. 50. The complaint may be made by the successor-in-office of the Judge who tried the case in which the offence was committed—Begu Singh v. Emp., 34 Cal. 551; In re Lalit Mohan, 5 C.L.J. 176; Dharamdas v. Sajore, 11 C.W.N. 119; Karim Baksh v. Mulchand, 1879 P.R. 29. See sec. 559 as now amended. Under this clause, the complaint can be made only by the Court in question before whom the offence is alleged to have been committed, and not the particular public servant concerned who made the inquiry. Therefore where a Deputy Magistrate dismissed a complaint as false, and was then transferred to another district, the complaint is to be made not by that particular Deputy Magistrate but by the successor of that person in the office of the Deputy Magistrate—Ram Ajodhya v. Emp., 8 P.L.T. 674, 28 Cr.L.J. 643.

Where a Deputy Magistrate who had tried the case was transferred from the district, and the complaint was made by the District Magistrate, before whom all cases pending before the Deputy Magistrate were placed, it was held that although the cases pending in the Court of the transferred Magistrate were placed before the District Magistrate either for disposal or for re-distribution among his subordinate Magistrates, still he never became the presiding Judge of the Deputy Magistrate's Court and therefore was not competent to make the complaint—Mofizuddin v. Basanta, 16 Cr.L.J. 640 (Cal). Where there are several Deputy Magistrates at a subdivision and one of them is transferred, and another officer is appointed to the subdivision in general terms and not "in place of" the outgoing officer, the Deputy Magistrate who comes to fill the gap is not the successor-in-office of the outgoing Deputy Magistrate, and the former cannot make a complaint under this section in respect of an offence committed before the latter—Girish Chandra v. Sarat Chandra, 42 Cal 667 (669, 674), following Mohesh Chandra v. Emp., 35 Cal. 457 (460). An abetment of perjury was committed in the course of an inquiry before a committing Magistrate (who was a first class Magistrate). While the proceedings were pending before him, the Magistrate was transferred and was succeeded by a second class Magistrate (who had no power to commit). The outgoing Magistrate therefore sent the proceedings to the District Magistrate. It was held that the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to make a complaint in respect of the offence, for he was 'such Court' referred to in clause (1) (b) of this section, and was the officer on whom devolved the disposal of committal of cases in the district—In re Ram Rao 42 Bom 190, 20 Bom. L. R. 117.

Transfer of case.—Where a case is transferred to another Court, it is the Court which tries the case on the merits that can make the complaint and not the Court which took cognizance of the case and issued process—Jeeban Krista v. Benoy Kristo, 6 C.W.N. 35, Putram v. Mahomed Kasim, 3 C.W.N. 33. Where a case was transferred by a Magistrate to another Magistrate for investigation, the Court which investigated the case was the proper Court to order the prosecution and not the Court which transferred the case, since the Court which transferred the case ceased to have jurisdiction in the matter, see Emp. v. Bhiku, 39 Cal 1041, 16 C.W.N. 885. But where a false complaint against a public servant made to a Deputy Commissioner, was simply referred (and not transferred) for inquiry and report under section 202 to a Subdivisional Magistrate, the latter could not make order for the prosecution of the complainant for bringing a false case—Asmatulla v. Emp., 4 C.W.N. 366. But in another Calcutta case, an opinion has been expressed that an order for prosecution for bringing a false case can be made by the Magistrate investigating the case under sec. 202 and not by the Magistrate who sent the case to the former for investigation—Maniruddin v. Abdul Ranj, 40 Cal. 41 (44).

Commitment of case—In a case committed to the Sessions, it is the Sessions Court and not the committing Magistrate who can make a complaint for prosecution of a witness who made false statements before the committing Magistrate, because such statements are said to be made in relation to proceedings before the Sessions Court—Narayana v. Palaniappa, 5 L.W. 218, 18 Cr.L.J. 143, Anonyms, 2 Weir 160.

Court acting in a different capacity :—The Collector of a District in deciding a revenue appeal came to the conclusion that a receipt filed in the case was not genuine. He took no steps in this connection as Collector, but acting as the District Magistrate made a complaint. It was held that the act of the District Magistrate was ultra vires—Emp v Ram Sahai, 40 All. 144, 16 A.L.J. 68, 19 Cr.L.J. 201.

Temporary Court :—The Court of the City Magistrate not being a permanent one with a perpetual succession of Judges, only the Sessions Judge and not the successor of such Magistrate on his transfer is competent to make the necessary complaint for prosecution for an offence committed before such Magistrate—Jia Lal v. Phogomal, 1918 P.R. 22.

Court abolished and re-established :—Where by a notification in the Gazette, the Court of the Sub-Magistrate at B was abolished and two years afterwards the said Court was restored with its territorial limits somewhat curtailed, it was held that there was no such continuity as would enable the High Court to hold that the Court that was re-constituted was the same as the one that had ceased to exist; and consequently the new Court could not make a complaint in respect of an offence committed before the old Court—In re Appa Attia, 16 Cr.L.J. 787 (Mad.).

624. No delegation of power :—The power to make a complaint must be exercised by the Court before which the offence was committed. The Court cannot delegate that power even to the Public Prosecutor. The filing of a complaint by the Public Prosecutor, in the absence of a complaint by the Court, will not be treated as equivalent to a complaint by the Court—Crown v Gurdita, 1917 P.R. 19, 18 Cr.L.J. 543.

625. Clause (c) :—Offences under this clause :—Offences described in sec. 463 I. P. C. :—The word 'forgery' is used as a general term in sec. 463 I. P. C., and that section is referred to in a comprehensive sense in this clause, so as to embrace all species of forgery punishable under the Penal Code, including one under sec. 467 I. P. C.—Q. E. v. Tulja, 12 Bom. 36, Teni Shah v. Bolai Shah, 14 C. W. N. 479; Khairatu Ram v. Malawa Ram, 5 Lah. 550 (553), 26 Cr.L.J. 537, Ram Samujh v. Emp, 3 O.W.N. 614, 27 Cr.L.J. 969; Ismail Panj's v. K. E., 26 Cr.L.J. 1115, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 337; or an offence under sec. 469 I. P. C.—Asst Sessions Judge v. Ramammal, 36 Mad. 387; or under sec. 466 I. P. C.—Anonymous, Ratanlal 83; Bachu Behary v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 630 (Pat.); or under sec. 465 I. P. C.—Khairati Ram v.

Malawa Ram, 5 Lah. 550. But it does not include an offence under sec. 474 I. P. C.—Asrabuddin v. Kalidayal, 19 C.W.N. 125.

Since an 'offence described in sec. 463' includes an offence under sec. 467 I. P. Code, it follows that where a prosecution of an accused is ordered only under sec. 471 I. P. Code, without referring to any other section, but he is tried and convicted under secs. 471 and 467 I. P. Code, the conviction under the latter section is not sustainable, as there was no complaint in respect of an offence under that section—Ram Samujh v. Emp., 1 Luck. 523, 3 O.W.N. 614, 27 Cr L J 969 (970).

A complaint may be made by the Court for prosecuting the plaintiff for bringing a false claim on a forged document, even though the case in which the claim was held to be false was decided by consent of the parties—Emp. v. Ram Narain, 27 Cr.L.J. 1021 (All.). Cf. Narain Das v. Emp., 25 A.L.J. 559, 28 Cr.L.J. 549

Where the original complaint made by the Court was in respect of abetment by conspiracy, and the Magistrate acting on the facts disclosed in the evidence for the prosecution added a second charge of abetment of forgery in an account book produced before the Insolvency Court in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy, held that a complaint of the Insolvency Court was not necessary, for the second charge was in respect of an act done in pursuance of the conspiracy mentioned in the original complaint. Sec 235 of the Code also permits a joinder of such charges—Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 4 Bur. L J. 213, 27 Cr L.J. 669.

626. "Alleged to have been committed" :—These words have been substituted by the Select Committee of 1916 for the word "committed" in deference to the remarks made by Piggott J. in Emperor v. Bhawani Das, 38 All. 169 at page 172. "With regard to the actual wording of the sub-section under consideration it does seem to me to be somewhat lacking in precision. To forbid a Court to take cognizance of an offence committed by a party is open to the criticism that no Court can decide whether an offence was 'committed' or not until after it has taken cognizance. It seems necessary, therefore, to read the word 'committed' as equivalent to the expression "alleged to have been committed." See also Janardhan v. Baldeo Prasad, 5 P L J 135

627. Document :—The word 'document' in this section means the original document. Where the original forged document was not produced or given in evidence, but only a registration copy of it was produced in the suit, no complaint by the Court was necessary for a prosecution under secs 465 and 467 I P C—K E v Raja Mustafa, 8 O C. 313, 2 Cr.L.J. 653. The words 'produced or given in evidence' in this section refer only to the production of the original and not to the production of a copy, and this for the very reason that the Court before which a copy of the document is produced is not really in a position to express any opinion about the genuineness of the original—Girdhari Lal v. Emp., 29 O C. 1, 2 O.W.N. 174, 26 Cr L J 929

uddin v. Kalidyal, 13 C.W.N. 125, 16 Cr.L.J. 309, even though it was not given in evidence—Akhil Chandra v. Q. E., 22 Cal. 1004; In re Gopal, 9 Bom. L.R. 735. The word “or” which intervenes between the word “produced” and the words “given in evidence” shows that it is disjunctive, and that a complaint is necessary not only in cases where the document has been given in evidence, but also in cases where it has been produced—Babu Jha, 9 P.L.T. 800, 30 Cr.L.J. 236 (239). The word “produced” has been added in the Code of 1898, and did not exist in the old Codes, and therefore the decision in Abdul Khadar v. Meera Sahib, 15 Mad. 224, (in which it was held that no sanction was necessary unless the document was given in evidence) is no longer good law.

Complaint by the Court is necessary, if the document is ‘produced’ i.e. tendered in evidence, although it is not exhibited and marked nor considered by the Court—Gura Charan v. Giriya, 29 Cal. 887, Emp. v. Bansi, 51 Cal. 469, 26 Cr.L.J. 24 (26). The mere filing of the document is tantamount to production, and is sufficient to constitute the offence—Rate Jha v. K. E., 39 Cal. 463; Asrabuddin v. Kalidyal, 19 C.W.N. 125; Mobarak Ali v. Emp., 17 C.W.N. 94, 13 Cr.L.J. 449; Tularam v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 388 (Nag). Where a party to a proceeding hands up a document to the Judge who does not take the document on the file, but returns it to the party, the document is ‘produced’ all the same within the meaning of this clause—Gulab Chand v. Emp., 49 Bom. 799, 27 Bom. L.R. 1039, 27 Cr.L.J. 251.

Where a certified copy of a forged entry in an account-book was accompanied with the plaint, and then under O. 7, r. 17, C. P. Code, the account-book was produced before the Court, and the munsarim then checked the copy and marked the account-book and returned it to the plaintiff, held that as the account-book was produced before the Court, any offence committed in respect of this account-book (viz. offence under secs 467 and 471 I P. Code) has certainly been committed in respect of a document produced in Court, although it may be that the book was never called to the Court after it had been shown to the munsarim (the case having been decided on the oath of the defendant)—Rameshwar Lal v. Emp., 49 All. 898, 25 A.L.J. 555, 28 Cr.L.J. 668.

This clause is wide enough to cover a document produced or given in evidence in the course of a proceeding, whether produced or given in evidence by the party who is alleged to have committed the offence or by any one else—In re Bhau Vyankatesh, 49 Bom. 608, 27 Bom. L.R. 607, 27 Cr.L.J. 69. In other words, two things are necessary under clause (c), viz. (1) the document must be produced or given in evidence in the proceeding. (2) the offence must be alleged to have been committed by a party to the proceeding, but it is not necessary that the person who produces the document in Court must be the offender himself.

Where a document was not produced in the suit but was disclosed in an affidavit filed therein, and inspection thereof was allowed to the other side, and it was filed in the office of the Translator of the High Court for translation, held that these actions did not amount to producing the document in evidence, as it was not actually produced in Court, and therefore no complaint of the Court was necessary for prosecution under secs. 465, 467 and 474 I. P. C. in respect of that document—Munisamy v. Rajaratnam, 45 Mad. 928 (F.B.), 43 M.L.J. 375, A.L.R. 1922 Mad 495. Where in a proceeding under sec. 145 a document comes into Court attached to a police report, prior to the proceeding, the document is not said to be produced in Court, and even if it is, neither of the parties to the proceeding is a party to its production; consequently the complaint of the Court is not necessary as a condition precedent to the institution of criminal proceedings against the guilty party upon a charge under section 463 I. P. C.—Janardhan v. Baldeo Prasad, 5 P.L.J. 135

It is not using a forged document as genuine if the document is produced in obedience to a summons from the Court. An involuntary production of a document in Court cannot amount to any use of it—Asst. Sessions Judge v. Ramammal, 36 Mad. 387, 22 M.L.J. 141. Ma Ain Lon v. Ma On Nu, 3 Rang 36, 3 Bur L.J. 349

A document is said to be 'given in evidence' when it is handed over to the Court, although the Court may reject it for insufficiency of stamp or want of registration—Q. E. v. Nagin Das, Ratanlal 242

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a complaint of the Court, is necessary in respect of an offence mentioned in clause (1) (c) when such offence has been committed prior to the production of the document in Court. The Bombay High Court holds that where an offence under sec. 471 I. P. C. (using as genuine a forged document) in respect of a document produced in Court has been committed before it comes into Court, no complaint of the Court is necessary, the use complained of being prior to its production in Court—Noor Mahomed v. Kaikhosru, 4 Bom. L.R. 268. The Allahabad High Court also holds that so long as the prosecution is confined to offences connected with a document prior to its production in Court no sanction is required. All that clause (c) prohibits is taking cognizance of an offence described in sec. 463 I. P. C. when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court with respect to a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding—Lalla Prasad v. K. E., 34 All 654, 10 A.L.J. 294. So also, the Punjab Chief Court holds that no complaint by a Court is necessary where the offence of instigation of the fabrication of false evidence (under sec. 466 I. P. C.) appears to have been committed at a time when there were no proceedings whatsoever in any Court and the police were merely inquiring into the circumstances of the case—Crown v. Ajaib Singh, 1917 P.R. 34

But the Calcutta High Court is of opinion that a complaint of the Court is necessary under such circumstances, because the very fact that the document is produced in Court will bring the case within the purview of this section, and it is immaterial that the forgery is alleged to have been committed before the production of the document in Court—Tenz Shah v. Bolai Shah 14 C.W.N. 479. Nalini Kanto v. Anukul, 44 Cal. 1002. The same view has been taken in two Allahabad cases—Erip.

v. Bhawani, 38 All. 169, 14 A.L.J. 74; Kanhaiya Lal v. Bhagwan Das, 48 All. 60, 23 A.L.J. 956, 26 Cr.L.J. 1485. The Madras High Court also holds that this section is not limited to cases where the fabrication is committed pendente lite, but it extends to cases of fabrication of false evidence in advance—In re Parameshwaran, 39 Mad. 677, 18 M.L.T. 322. And recently the Lahore High Court has also expressed the view that where a document has been produced in Court by a party, the sanction (complaint) of such Court is necessary for his prosecution in respect of an antecedent forgery—Khairati Ram v. Malawa Ram, 5 Lah. 550 (552) following Nalini Kanta v. Anukul, 44 Cal. 1002 and Teni Shah v. Bolai Shah, 14 C.W.N. 479.

The Court making a complaint should specify the document in respect of which the forgery has been committed, as well as the particular act or acts of forgery—In re Brindrabun, 10 W.R. 41.

629. 'Party':—Complaint is necessary if the document is produced or given in evidence by a party to the proceeding. But no complaint is necessary to prosecute a witness in the proceeding since a witness is not a party—John Martin Sequeira v. Lujya Bai, 25 Mad. 671; In re Eadara, 3 Mad. 400; Sessions Judge v. Kondeli, 26 M.L.J. 220, 15 Cr.L.J. 242; Crown v. Jiwan Mal, 1917 P.R. 10, Debilal v. Dhajadhari, 15 C.W.N. 565; nor is a complaint necessary to prosecute the agent of a party—Chand Mal v. Emp., 1879 P.R. 9; Fatima v. Raman, 3 Bur. L.T. 108, 12 Cr.L.J. 87; or an abettor if he is not a party—Chaudhri Ghansham v. Emp., 32 All. 74. A claimant in insolvency proceedings is a party to the proceedings and a complaint is necessary for his prosecution in respect of statements contained in an affidavit filed by him before the Official Assignee in support of his claim—In re Hajee Mohamed, 36 M.L.J. 60. A complainant in a criminal proceeding is a party to the proceeding—Kanhaiyalal v. Bhagwan, 48 All. 60, 23 A.L.J. 956, 26 Cr.L.J. 1485.

When an offence of forgery is committed by more than one person, one of them only being a party to the proceedings in which the document is produced, no complaint of the Court is necessary for the prosecution of those participants in the forgery who are not parties to the proceedings—In re Ponnuswami, 28 L.W. 769, 30 Cr.L.J. 469; Anna Ayyar v. Emp., 30 Mad. 226. Contra—In re Narayan, 12 Bom. L.R. 383, 11 Cr.L.J. 368.

This clause lays down that complaint of the Court is necessary to prosecute a party who produced a forged document in that Court. But there is nothing in this section forbidding the Court to make complaint against persons other than the party to the proceeding in the Court, who are alleged to have been concerned in the offence—Emp. v. Balmuland, 9 Lah. 678, 29 Cr.L.J. 652 (655).

630. Proceeding in Court:—No sanction or complaint is necessary if the offence is not committed in relation to any proceeding in a Court. Thus, where a mahal belonging to several co-sharers having been sold under the Public Demands Recovery Act, a surplus was lying in deposit with the certificate officer, and a mukhtar filed an application to withdraw that deposit, purporting to have been signed by all the co-sharers, but the signatures of two of them were alleged to be forged, held that the surplus sale-proceeds not having been entrusted to the certificate officer in his capacity as a Court, no complaint by the Court was necessary for the prosecution of the alleged forgers—Jharu Lal v. Mahant Madan Das, 2 Pat. 257.

631. Subsection (3)—Subordination of Courts :—This sub-section applies only to subordination of Courts. Thus, where a Subordinate Magistrate acts as an executive officer, his subordination must be determined with reference to sec 17 (i.e. he is subordinate to the Subdivisional Magistrate or the District Magistrate as the case may be) and he cannot be deemed as subordinate to the Sessions Judge—Sankaran v. Sakkarappa, 2 Weir 155; Maini Misser v Emp., 6 Pat. 39, 28 Cr.L J 353

But the word 'Court' in this sub-section is not confined to the Courts mentioned in clauses (b) and (c) of subsection (1), but applies also to the public servant in clause (a) of that subsection when such public servant is acting as a Court and the offence is committed in connection with proceedings in which the public servant concerned is so acting—Arunachalam v. Ponnusami, 42 Mad 64, followed in In re Budiuddin, 47 Bom 102. Therefore, although a Sub-Magistrate is no doubt a public servant in his capacity of an administrative officer, still if he is acting in his judicial capacity, he must be deemed to be a 'Court' and is therefore subordinate to the Court to which an appeal from his order would lie, under the provisions of this sub-section—Arunachalam v. Ponnusami, 42 Mad. 64, 35 M.L.J. 454, 20 Cr.L J. 78. Similarly, a first class Magistrate is a public servant and as such subordinate to the District Magistrate, but if he acts as a Court, he must be taken to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals lie from his Court, viz., the Court of the Sessions Judge—In re Budiuddin, 47 Bom 102, 24 Bom. L.R. 810, 23 Cr L.J 578.

Every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals from the former will ordinarily lie. Thus—

The District Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge—Jivan Mal v. Beli Ram, 1917 P R. 11, In re Panchlam, 42 Mad. 96; Shankar Dial v. Venables, 19 All. 121, Ram Kishen v. Mahram, 1908 P W.R. 24. A first class Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge—Mala Ram v. Emp., 1902 P.R. 7 (overruling Soba Singh v. Lal Chand, 1901 P R. 30); Aly Md v. Emp., 1912 P R 2, 12 Cr L J. 539, as also to the Additional Sessions Judge (under the provisions of secs 408 and 409 read together)—In re Sikandar, 44 Bom 877, Nishi Chandra v Ramesh Chandra, 14 Cr.L J 195 (Cal.), Kusum v. Janak Lal, 4 P L J 374. A committing second class Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge—Anonymous, 2 Weir 160. The Assistant Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge and not to the District Magistrate—Shankar Dial v Venables, 19 All 121.

It should be noted that the latter part of subsection (3) is now restricted to civil Courts only, whereas under the old law, it applied to any Court and the words used were "the principal Court of original jurisdiction" which included a Criminal and Revenue Court, and therefore it was held that in respect of an execution proceeding in a Revenue Court under the Agra Tenancy Act, from which no appeal lay, the principal Court of original jurisdiction was the Collector—Ajudhia v Ram Lal, 34 All 197. The present law has made no provisions for such cases

632. Clause (a) :—Where appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction would be the Court to which the original Court must be deemed to be subordinate—Ram Krishna v Mohan Lal, 8 N.L.R. 57, 13 Cr.L.J. 498. Thus, the Subordinate Judge would be held to be inferior to the District Judge and not to the High Court, even though the appeal in the particular instance would lie to the High Court—Imp. v. Lakshman, 2 Bom 481, In re Anant Ramchandra, 11 Bom. 438. So also the Recorder's Court at Rangoon is subordinate to the High Court for the purpose of this section, though in the particular case the appeal may lie to the Privy Council—Maduray v Elderton, 22 Cal 487.

633. Clause (b) :—"or proceeding"—These words have been added in deference to the opinion expressed by the Judges in Ajudhia Prosad v. Ram Lal, 34 All. 197. In this case a suit was brought in the Court of the Assistant Collector for arrears of rent exceeding Rs 100, and in execution proceeding thereof certain false statements were made. The suit being one for rent exceeding Rs 100 was appealable, but the execution proceeding was not appealable according to the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act. The question arose—to which Court was the Assistant Collector subordinate? and to determine this question it was necessary to decide whether clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (7) of the old section was applicable. It was contended that since the 'case' being one for rent exceeding Rs 100 was appealable (though the execution proceeding was not), clause (b) would apply, but the Judges held that the word 'case' in clause (b) included execution proceedings, and since the execution proceeding in the present case was not appealable, clause (b) could not apply, as that clause applies only where an appeal lies. The case was therefore governed by clause (c) of sub-section (7).

634. Subsection (4) -Abetment A distinction has been drawn between the abetment of an offence mentioned in clause (b) of subsection (1) and the abetment of an offence mentioned in clause (c). Since clause (c) speaks only of offences committed by a party to the pro-

Bom. L R. 896. The Presidency Small Cause Court is subordinate to the High Court in its Appellate side. The words "principal Court of original Civil jurisdiction," when applied to the High Court, do not mean only the original side of the High Court, but apply to the appellate side also—Jamnadas v. Sabapathi, 36 Mad. 133, Kalyanjee v. Ram Deen, 48 Mad. 395, 48 M.L.J. 290. The village Munsiff is subordinate to the District Judge—Sundar Lal v. K. E., 6 A.L.J. 796, 10 Cr.L.J. 437. It should be noted that the latter part of subsection (3) is now restricted to civil Courts only, whereas under the old law, it applied to any Court and the words used were "the principal Court of original jurisdiction" which included a Criminal and Revenue Court, and therefore it was held that in respect of an execution proceeding in a Revenue Court under the Agra Tenancy Act, from which no appeal lay, the principal Court of original jurisdiction was the Collector—Ajudhia v. Ram Lal, 34 All. 197. The present law has made no provisions for such cases.

632. Clause (a).—Where appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction would be the Court to which the original Court must be deemed to be subordinate—Ram Krishna v. Mohan Lal, 8 N.L.R. 57, 13 Cr.L.J. 498. Thus, the Subordinate Judge would be held to be inferior to the District Judge and not to the High Court, even though the appeal in the particular instance would lie to the High Court—Imp v. Lakshman, 2 Bom 481; In re Anant Ramchandra, 11 Bom 438. So also the Recorder's Court at Rangoon is subordinate to the High Court for the purpose of this section, though in the particular case the appeal may lie to the Privy Council—Maduray v Elderston, 22 Cal 487.

633. Clause (b).—"or proceeding".—These words have been added in deference to the opinion expressed by the Judges in Ajudhia Prosad v Ram Lal, 34 All 197. In this case a suit was brought in the Court of the Assistant Collector for arrears of rent exceeding Rs 100, and in execution proceeding thereof certain false statements were made. The suit being one for rent exceeding Rs 100 was appealable, but the execution proceeding was not appealable according to the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act. The question arose—to which Court was the Assistant Collector subordinate? and to determine this question it was necessary to decide whether clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (7) of the old section was applicable. It was contended that since the 'case' being one for rent exceeding Rs 100 was appealable (though the execution proceeding was not), clause (b) would apply, but the Judges held that the word 'case' in clause (b) included execution proceedings, and since the execution proceeding in the present case was not appealable, clause (b) could not apply, as that clause applies only where an appeal lies. The case was therefore governed by clause (c) of sub-section (7).

634. Subsection (4)—Abetment.—A distinction has been drawn between the abetment of an offence mentioned in clause (b) of subsection (1) and the abetment of an offence mentioned in clause (c). Since clause (c) speaks only of offences committed by a party to the offence, ceeding, it follows that no complaint by Court is necessary in respect of an abetment of an offence mentioned in clause (c), if the abettor was not a party to the proceeding—Emp. v. Ghansham, 32 All 74. But in the case of offences mentioned in clause (b), an abettor cannot be prosecuted without a previous complaint by the Court, even though he was not a party to the proceeding, because no mention is made of a 'party to the proceeding' in clause (b)—Ram Bilas v. Lachmi Narain, 45 All. 140.

A Sub-Divisional Magistrate passing an order under sec. 144 Cr. P. Code and making a complaint for the prosecution of the accused under sec. 188 I P. Code for disobedience to that order, acts as a public servant under sub-sec. (1), clause (a) of this section, and not as a Court. Consequently sub-section (3) of this section does not apply. The S. D. Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate and not to the Sessions Judge (see sec 17). An application for withdrawal of the complaint under sub-section (5) is to be made to the District Magistrate, and not to the Sessions Judge—Maini Misser v Emp., 6 Pat. 39, 28 Cr L J. 353.

196. No Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under Chapter VI or IXA of the Indian Penal Code (except Section 127), or punishable under Section 108A, or Section 153A, or Section 294A, or Section 295A, or Section 505 of the same Code, unless upon complaint made by order of, or under authority from, the Governor-General in Council, the Local Government, or some officer empowered by the Governor-General in Council in this behalf.

Amendments :—The words "or IXA" have been added by sec. 3 of Act XXXIX of 1920 (Election Offences and Inquiries Act).

The words "or section 295A" have been recently added by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1927 (XXV of 1927)

634B. A complaint of an offence under section 171E (falling under Chapter IXA) of the I. P. C. requires a sanction under this section—Ponnasamy v. Emp., 42 M.L.J. 139, 23 Cr.L.J. 148.

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to inquire into a complaint in respect of a false return of election expenses, unless the complaint is made by order of the Government—Labh Singh v. Narinjan, 6 Lah. 188, 26 P.L.R. 379, 26 Cr.L.J. 1234.

635. Object of section :—The object of this section is to prevent unauthorised persons from intruding in matters of State by instituting State prosecutions, and to secure that such prosecutions shall only be instituted under the authority of the Government—Q E v Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 Bom 112 (125)

636. Complaint :—A complaint which did not set forth the concrete facts relied on as constituting the offences but merely copied out the words of the sections of the Penal Code was held to be defective—Pulin v. Emp, 16 C.W.N. 1105, 13 Cr L J 609. But a complaint is not defective merely because it does not set out the speeches or the dates of the speeches, and the alleged seditious words which are the subject matter of the charge. Even if it were defective, this is at most an irregularity curable by sec 537—Chidambaram v Emp, 32 Mad. 3 (11). It is not necessary that the complaint must consist of allegations made on oath or reduced to writing—Apurba v Emp, 35 Cal 141 (151)

A letter of the Local Government according sanction for prosecution of a certain person under sec. 121 I. P. C. is not a complaint, though it may be taken as an authority to make a complaint—Shamal Khan v. Emp., 1890 P R 16. The person who signs the letter of authority is not the complainant, and it is not necessary to take his examination under the law. The person who armed with the authority makes the application to the Court for the apprehension of the accused is the complainant and his examination is to be taken—Apurba Krishna Bose v. Emp, 35 Cal. 141 (Bande Mataram case.)

637. Order or authority :—The sanction of the Local Government must be strictly proved according to the provisions contained in sec 78, Evidence Act, and the prisoner named in the sanction must be identified—Emp v Aung Do, 1 Bur S. R. 389

Form and contents—This section does not prescribe any particular form of order and does not even require the order to be in writing. No special mode is laid down in the Code whereby the order or sanction of Government is to be conveyed to the officer who puts the law in motion—Q. E. v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 Bom. 112 (124). What the Court has to see is whether the complaint has been made by the order or under the authority of the Government—Chidambaram v Emp, 32 Mad. 3 (9); In re Narayan Menon, 25 Cr.L.J. 701, A L R 1925 Mad. 106. A telegram sent by the Government expressly authorising the Public Prosecutor to file a complaint against the accused for an offence under section 124A I P. C. is a perfectly valid authority—In re Varadarajulu Naidu, 42 Mad 180

The sanction under this section need not be very particular about its contents, provided its meaning and intention are clear. Where the letter of authority sanctioning prosecution for sedition did not specify the name of the printer of the newspaper, but he was indicated from the first and his name was supplied at the commencement of the Police Court proceedings, it was held that this was a sufficient compliance with the section—Apurba v. Emp., 35 Cal. 141. A sanction for the prosecution of the accused in the alternative for offences under section 121 or under section 121A is not defective on the ground that it does not specify with sufficient clearness the section or the offence in respect of which it is given—Puthen Veetil Kunhi v. Emp., 42 M.L.J. 108, 23 Cr.L.J. 203. Where the persons to be prosecuted were named, the offences and the period of their activity specified and the particular sections of the Penal Code set out, the mere circumstance that these persons were not described as the members of the Revolutionary society the existence of which was sought to be proved at the trial, did not affect the validity of the sanction—Pulin Behary Das v. Emp., 16 C.W.N. 1105, 13 Cr.L.J. 609. In a prosecution for sedition, if the sanction contains the name of the printer, publisher, editor etc. of the newspaper, the name of the newspaper, the offence committed and the particular section of the Penal Code, and refers to "certain articles" appearing in the newspaper, the fact that the sanction does not specify the exact article complained of does not make the sanction insufficient or invalid—Q. E. v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 Bom. 112 (124, 150). The intention of the Legislature is to ensure that no prosecution for an offence within sec. 196 should be launched except on a complaint authorised by the Government, and if this intention is given effect to, it is immaterial whether or not all the facts on which the complaint was to be based were stated in the authority with meticulous precision—Nga Aung v. K. E., 2 Bur.L.J. 196, 25 Cr.L.J. 193, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 65. Where the sanction contained a misdescription of the article on which the prosecution was based, and this was rectified by a subsequent sanction filed in the course of the trial, it was held that the petitioner was not prejudiced and the defect was cured by sec. 537—Apurba v. Emp., 35 Cal. 141.

It is not necessary that the actual words of the complaint should be sanctioned—In re Varadarajulu, 42 Mad. 180; Chidambaram v. Emp., 32 Mad. 3 (9). Where the order of the Government directing the prosecution (for sedition) states the sections under which the institution of the criminal proceedings is authorised, and, in general terms, the times when the seditious speeches were delivered, it is not necessary that the actual complaint must be expressly authorised by the Local Government—Chidambaram (supra).

Where the telegram sent by the Local Government expressly authorised the Public Prosecutor to file a complaint against V, under sec. 124A I. P. C. and to act immediately if the District Magistrate thought it advisable after consulting him, and formally enjoined the District Magistrate to submit the complaint prepared "for issue of supplemental sanction," held that the last sentence must be read apart from the first portion of the telegram and did not limit the authority given, and that a complaint filed in pursuance of that telegram but without any supplemental sanction was not illegal—In re Varadarajulu Naidu, 42 Mad. 180.

Where the authority to prosecute was not given to any determinate person, but the order sanctioning the prosecution was communicated to the District Magistrate, the Public Prosecutor and the senior special Judge, and a prosecution was initiated by the Additional Public Prosecutor, held that the fact that the order of authorisation was not given to any determinate person did not affect the legality of the trial, and that the alleged defect in the order was curable by sec. 537 of the Code—In re Kutty Moopan, 44 M.L.J. 166; Apurba v. Emp., 35 Cal. 141 (151)

Signature :—The authority under sec. 196 need not, in the case of a Local Government, be signed personally by the Lieutenant Governor; it is enough, if it is signed by one of his accredited or Gazetted officers (e.g. the Chief Secretary in this case)—Apurba v. Emp., 35 Cal. 141. The sanction must be signed by the Chief Secretary to the Government. An order signed by the Deputy Secretary on behalf of the Chief Secretary is not legal—Oziulla v. Beni Madhab, 50 Cal. 135

Local Government :—The sanction must, in order to satisfy the section, have been the act of the Local Government, and not of a single member of such Government—In re Varadarajulu Naidu, 42 Mad. 885.

Where a sanction was duly given by the de facto Local Government under this section, and no objection was made thereto at the trial, it was not open to the person convicted at the trial to challenge the sanction, in appeal before the High Court, on the ground that the Local Government granting the sanction was not legally constituted and had no authority to sanction the prosecution—Pulin Behari Das v. Emp., 16 C.W.N. 1105 (1113), 13 Cr.L.J. 609.

638. Want of sanction and complaint :—Absence of sanction under this section vitiates the whole proceedings, and the defect is not a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537. A trial without sanction under sec. 196 or 197 is illegal—Perumalla v. Emp., 31 Mad. 80, Swami Dayal v. K. E., 1908 P.R. 8, Shamal Khan v. Emp., 1890 P.R. 16. A sanction given after the filing of the complaint does not fulfil the requirements of this section—In Varadarajulu Naidu, 42 Mad. 885, Barindra v. Emp., 37 Cal. 467. Where there was no complaint or sanction of the Local Government, the whole proceedings in the trial were without jurisdiction, and the defect was not cured by the provision of sec. 537—Barindra v. Emp., 37 Cal. 467. Where the law clearly says that it is a condition precedent to the prosecution that a sanction shall be obtained from the Local Government, it is not open to any subordinate authority to override the provision of the law by saying that the offence falls under another section of the Penal Code and that no sanction is necessary for the prosecution under that section—Ram Nath v. K. E. 47 All. 268, 22 A.L.J. 1106, A.I.R. 1925 All. 230

But where the accused was prosecuted upon a sanction of the Local Government without a formal complaint, and no objection was taken to the absence or irregularity of the complaint at the trial the defect did not affect the trial, and the irregularity or insufficiency of the complaint was cured by sec. 537—Swami Dayal v. K. E. 1908 P.R. 8, 7 Cr.L.J. 353; Pulin Behari v. Emp., 16 C.W.N. 1105 (1112)

639. Prosecution for other offences not mentioned in sanction :—Where an order under section 196 authorised a particular Police officer to prefer a complaint of "offences under secs. 121A, 122 I. P. C. or under any other section of the said Code which may be found applicable to the case" and the Magistrate prosecuted the accused and committed him in respect of an offence under sec. 121 I. P. C., it was held that since the offence under sec. 121 required a sanction under this section, and it was not specifically mentioned in the sanction, the commitment in respect of an offence under sec. 121 was illegal—Barindra Kumar Ghosh v. Emp., 37 Cal 467. The reason is, that the power and discretion of determining whether cognizance shall be taken in respect of an offence mentioned in this section cannot be delegated by the Local Government to any other body of persons, and if the Magistrate is allowed to prosecute a person for an offence referred to in this section when such offence was not specifically mentioned in the sanction, it means a delegation of power to the Magistrate which cannot be sustained. In the words of Jenkins C J. : "It would be opposed to the true intentment of sec 196 for the Local Government by its order to give its legal or other advisers a roving power to determine under what sections of the Chapter proceedings should be taken, and to abandon to them the discretion and responsibility that properly belongs to itself"—Barindra v. Emp., 37 Cal. offence in respect of an act which is precisely defined in the order granting by the Local Government for the prosecution of certain persons for an offence in respect of an act which is precisely defined in the order granting the sanction, the order cannot be treated as an authority for a prosecution in respect of an offence which is absolutely distinct and is alleged to have been committed on an occasion different from that specified in the order—U Pathada v. Emp, 3 Bur L J. 178, 26 Cr.LJ 245 So also, where the Local Government gave sanction to prosecute a person for an offence under sec 121 I P. Code, the Court has no power to charge and convict him for an offence under sec. 124A I. P. Code—U. Nyan v. Emp., 4 Rang 131, 27 Cr.L.J. 1075. But a sanction under sec. 124A authorises a prosecution under secs 124A and 114 I. P. C.—Chidambaram v. Emp, 32 Mad. 3

So also, it is not illegal to prosecute without a sanction a person for an offence for which no sanction is necessary; thus, where a person has committed an offence under sec. 122 I. P. C. and by the same act abetted the offence of dacoity, the fact that the Government refused sanction for the former offence would be no bar to his prosecution for the minor offence of abetting dacoity for which no sanction is necessary—Q. E. v. Anant Puranik, 25 Bom 90 (94)

196-A. No Court shall take cognizance of the offence of criminal conspiracy punishable under Section 120B of the Indian Penal Code—

Prosecution for certain classes of criminal conspiracy.

(1) in a case where the object of the conspiracy is to commit either an illegal act other than an offence, or a legal act by illegal means, or an offence to which the provisions of Section 196 apply, unless upon complaint made by order of, or under authority from, the Governor-General in Council, the Local Government or some officer empowered by the Governor-General in Council in this behalf, or

- (2) in a case where the object of the conspiracy is to commit any non-cognizable offence, or a cognizable offence not punishable with death, transportation or rigorous imprisonment for a term of two years or upwards, unless the Local Government, or a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate empowered in this behalf by the Local Government has, by order in writing, consented to the initiation of the proceedings.

Provided that where the criminal conspiracy is one to which the provisions of sub-section (4) of Section 195 apply, no such consent shall be necessary.

640. Scope :—This section applies only to a prosecution for conspiracy punishable under section 120B of the Penal Code, and not for abetment by conspiracy punishable under section 109 of that Code—Abdul Salim v. Emp., 49 Cal. 573; Abdul Rahuman v. Emp., 3 Rang 95, 26 Cr.L.J. 1329.

Where there is no allegation of criminal conspiracy in the complaint, nor does the complaint disclose any charge of criminal conspiracy, but the allegation in the plaint merely incidentally involves a charge of conspiracy, no sanction is necessary under this section—Nune Panakalu v. Ravula, 52 Mad 695, 30 Cr.L.J. 191 (193)

Initiating a prosecution under sec. 120B, I P C without the sanction of the authority referred to in section 196A Cr P. Code, is ab initio illegal, and the subsequent addition of charges which do not require such sanction does not cure the illegality; nor are the proceedings relating to such additional charges legal—Abdul Rahuman v. Emp., supra

The proviso lays down that a sanction under this section for prosecution for criminal conspiracy to commit a non-cognizable offence (e.g. fraudulently using as genuine a forged document or dishonestly making a false claim) is not necessary where the Court before which the forged document was used or false claim was made makes a complaint in respect of the offence under sub-section (4) of section 195—Kali Singh v. Emp., 50 Cal. 461, A.I.R. 1924 Cal 53, 24 Cr.L.J. 949

If the object of the conspiracy is to commit forgery, there can be no prosecution without the sanction of the Local Government. Where, however, the main charge is that of cheating, in which it is not necessary at all to mention forgery as the object of the conspiracy (the forgery being committed not for its own sake but in order to cheat a person and obtain money from him) the entire charge does not fail in consequence of the elimination of the head of forgery as an object of the conspiracy charged. Where the trial starts for an object of the conspiracy, which is beyond the cognizance of the Court, and other objects of the conspiracy are within the cognizance of the Court, the omission of one head which is beyond the cognizance of the Court cannot affect the jurisdiction as regards the rest of the charge. The matter would be different, if commitment is made on a charge of committing criminal conspiracy for the purpose of forging documents, and subsequently on discovering that such a charge required sanction, another object, that of cheating, is substituted—Bishambar Nath v Emp., 2 O.W.N. 760, 26 Cr L J. 1602 (1604, 1606). If cheating is carried out by means of forgery, it does not follow that the provisions of sec 196A would apply—Ibid

If the sanction is obtained after the arrest of the accused, but before the examination of the witnesses and the framing of the charge, the requirements of this section are complied with—Ali Mia v. Emp., 54 Cal. 155, 28 Cr L J 466

196-B. In the case of any offence in respect of which the provisions of Section 196 or Section 196-A apply, a District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate may, notwithstanding anything contained in those sections or in any other part of this Code, order a preliminary investigation by a police-officer not being below the rank of Inspector, in which case such police-officer shall have the powers referred to in Section 155, sub-section (3).

This section has been added by sec 49 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923)

"This new section is designed to meet the difficulty which arises from the fact that cases under sections 196 and 196A cannot be properly investigated by the Police before complaints are made. Doubts have arisen as to whether investigation can be ordered under section 155 (2) by a Magistrate without his taking cognizance of the case. The new section will provide for preliminary investigation. We recognise that it does not altogether meet the case where the desirability of adding a new charge arises in the Sessions Court. It has been suggested that this difficulty might be met to some extent by substituting the word 'proceed to the trial' for the words 'take cognizance' in sections 196 and 196A. But on the whole, we prefer not to make this change and to leave the sections unaltered"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

197. (1) When any Judge or any public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Government of India or the Local Government, is accused as such Judge or public servant of any offence, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the Government having power to order his removal or of some officer empowered in this behalf by such Government or of some Court or other authority to which such Judge or public servant is subordinate, and whose power to give such sanction has not been limited by such Government.

197. (1) When any person who is a Judge with-
Prosecution of Judges and public servants. in the meaning of Section 19 of the Indian Penal Code, or when any Magistrate, or when any public servant who is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of a Local Government or some higher authority, is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the Local Government.

(2) Such Government may determine the person by whom, the manner in which, the offence or offences for which, the prosecution of such Judge, Magistrate or public servant is to be conducted, and may specify the Court before which the trial is to be held.

Change :—The whole of sub-section (1) has been re-drafted by sec 50 of the Crim Pro Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "It has been pointed out to us that difficulties with regard to section 197 have recently come to light. There are certain public servants who are only removable from office by the Secretary of State, and it is unreasonable that they should obtain no protection under the section. Further, in view of section 2 (2) of the Code, the word "Judge" has to be interpreted according to the definition given in section 19 of the Indian Penal Code, with the result that Magistrates acting in certain capacities under the Code yet constituted by Madras Act II of 1920 is a Judge—Ponnusamy v. Emp., 42 M L J. 139, 23 Cr.L.J. 148.

642. Public Servant—Any person, whether receiving pay or not, who chooses to take upon himself the duties and responsibilities belonging to the position of a public servant and performs those duties and accepts those responsibilities, and is recognised as filling the position of a public servant, must be regarded as such. A volunteer in Tahsildar's office is a public servant—Q. E. v. Parmeshar, 8 All. 201. A member of the District Board is a public servant who is not removeable except with the sanction of the Local Government—K. E. v. Krishna Kant, 28 O.C. 155, 12 O L J 498, 26 Cr.L.J. 1157. The Chairman of a Municipality is a public servant—In re Chairman of Municipal Council, Ellore, 1 Weir 243. The President of a Municipal Committee is a public servant not removeable except by the Local Government—Emp v. U. Maung Gale, 4 Rang 128, 27 Cr.L.J 1088. So also a Chairman of a Union Panchayet—Sk. Abdul Kadir v. Emp, 1916 M W.N 384, 17 Cr.L.J. 168. The President of a Taluk Board is a public servant—In re Sivasankaram, 52 Mad 446, 30 Cr L J. 164 (166). A Municipal Commissioner is a public servant—Bakshi Ram v Divan, 1890 P.R. 14, see also illustration to sec 21 I P. Code. But every Municipal Commissioner is not a public servant within the meaning of this section. The Court should not, without any reliable evidence on the record, assume that every Municipal Commissioner is not removable from his office without the sanction of the Local Government—Nathu v. Md. Baksh, 1916 P.W.R. 48, 18 Cr.L.J. 106. But a Municipal Corporation (e.g. the Calcutta Municipality) is not a public servant and may be prosecuted like a private person without a sanction—Emp. v. Municipal Corporation, Calcutta, 3 Cal. 758. So also, no sanction is necessary to prosecute a Municipal Chairman Delegate for acts done by him in that capacity, because the protection afforded by this section does not extend to a person to whom a public servant may delegate a portion of his powers—Venkatesalu v. Heeraman, 2 Weir 226. A Municipal Secretary is not a public servant and no sanction is necessary for his prosecution—Kishen v. Girdhari, 23 Cr.L.J. 750 (Lah.). If a Municipal Commissioner acts as the Honorary Secretary of the Municipality, and commits an offence in his capacity as Secretary, held that although a Municipal Commissioner cannot be prosecuted without the sanction of the Local Government, still when he was acting as secretary and committed the wrong in that capacity, no sanction is necessary—Kishen Singh v. Girdhari, A.L.R 1924 Lah. 310. A Receiver appointed by the High Court is not a public servant—Khim Chand v. Devkaran, 52 Bom. 898, 30 Cr.L.J. 465.

643. "Not removable from his office etc."—The words "not removable from his office" etc. have reference only to the expression "public servant" and not to "Judge." This is now made clear by the wording of the present section. So the sanction of the Government is necessary for the prosecution of any Judge, if a complaint is made against him as such Judge, whether he is or is not removable from office without the sanction of the Government—Anonymous, 6 B.H.C.R. App. 21.

A Police Patel in Bombay is a public servant removable without the sanction of the Government, and no sanction is necessary in respect of his prosecution—Imp. v. Bhagwan, 4 Bom. 357; so also, a Sub-overseer in the Madras Presidency—In re Reddy Venkayya, 12 M.L.T. 351, 13 Cr.L.J. 770. A Forest Ranger in the C. P. is not a public servant not removable without the sanction of the Local Government—Kripa Singh v. Emp., 23 Cr.L.J. 397 (Nag). A Revenue Patel is a public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Local Government—Emp. v. Kalu, 29 Bom. L.R. 707, 28 Cr.L.J. 534.

The elected Chairman of a Municipality is a public servant not removable from his office except with the sanction of the Local Government, under the Bengal Municipal Act—Ram Narayan v. Parsua Nath, 56 Cal. 227, 32 C.W.N. 1035 (1037). A Chairman of a Union Committee who can, under certain circumstances, be removed by the Commissioner, is not a person removable from his office only by the Local Government, and no sanction of the Local Government is necessary for his prosecution—Mahmad Yasin v. Emp., 52 Cal. 431, 29 C.W.N. 650, 26 Cr.L.J. 1178. The Chairman of a Union Panchayet is a public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Local Government, even though the power to remove him has been delegated by the Government to the President of the District Board. The delegation of the power of removal means only that the Local Government itself performs that act through the medium of a particular officer (President of the District Board) as the channel through which it is done. It is an ordinary case of qui facit per alium facit per se—In re Abdul Kadir, 1916 M.W.N. 384, 17 Cr.L.J. 169. But the Allahabad High Court is of opinion that where the Local Government has delegated the power of removal of a public servant to some other authority, as for instance, where the Government by a notification has delegated to the Excise Commissioner the power to suspend, remove or dismiss any Excise Inspector, held that the sanction of the Local Government is not necessary for the prosecution of an Excise Inspector—Jalaluddin v. Emp., 43 All. 264, 24 A.L.J. 230, 27 Cr.L.J. 345 (dissenting from In re Abdul Kadir, supra). In a Lahore case, it has been held that where the accused, a public servant (viz. a Zilladar) was appointed at a time when the powers of appointment and removal of a Zilladar were vested in the Local Government alone, and subsequently the Local Government delegated the power of appointment, suspension and removal of the Zilladars to the Chief Engineer, held that the prosecution of the Zilladar instituted without the sanction of the Local Government but with the sanction of the Chief Engineer, was illegal. The sanction of the Local Government was necessary under sec. 197—Crown v. Lal Khan Chand, 24 Cr.L.J. 411, A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 337.

644. "Acting in the discharge of official duty":—

These words have been substituted for the words "as such Judge or public servant" occurring in the old section; and from a comparison of the old and the new sections it seems that the language of the present section has been made simpler. Under the Code of 1872, the language used in the section (466) was "committed in his capacity of a public servant" i.e., the section applied only to those acts which could have no special significance except as acts done by a public servant—Imp. v. Lakshman, 2 Bom. 481. It applied only to those offences committed by a public servant which were peculiar to his position as a public servant (per Pontifex J.), the section was intended to apply to those cases in which the offence charged was an offence which could be committed by a public servant only i.e., those cases in which the fact of his being a public servant was a necessary element in the offence (per Field J.)—Sreemanta Chatterjee, (unreported case of the Calcutta High Court, 9-12-1881) cited in 26 Cal. 852 at p. 860. Under the Codes of 1882 and 1898, the language of the section was "as such Judge or public servant" and it indicated that the offence charged must involve as one of its elements that it was committed by a person filling that character, and therefore where a Magistrate used insulting and defamatory language towards a pleader in the course of a trial, no sanction was held to be necessary for the prosecution of the Magistrate, as the position of his being a Magistrate was not a necessary element in the offence of defamation—Nando Lal v. Mitter, 26 Cal. 852. Where a Judge or Magistrate or public servant commits an offence which could be committed by anybody and which entails consequences neither in the way of penalty nor anything else in the least different from what it would entail if committed by anybody else, sanction is not required under this section for his prosecution. Therefore, where the Chairman of a Union Panchayet was prosecuted for the offence of criminal breach of trust in respect of Union funds, held that the offence was not one which was committed by him in his capacity of a public servant, and no sanction was necessary for his prosecution—In re Abdul Kadir, 1916 M.W.N. 384, 17 Cr.L.J. 168. Where a Magistrate used abusive language towards another Magistrate while both of them were trying a case as members of a Bench, it was held that no sanction was necessary to prosecute the former, because the offence was not committed as Magistrate, i.e., the fact of his being a Magistrate was not a necessary element of the offence—In re Harlekar, 2 Bom. L.R. 1079. So also, where the superintendent of the Gun Carriage Factory in Madras caused timber to be brought within the city of Madras without a license as required by section 341 of the Madras Act I of 1884 (City of Madras Municipal Act), held that no sanction was necessary to prosecute him as the offence was not one which could be committed by a public servant only, nor did it involve as one of its elements that it had been committed by a public servant—Municipal Commissioners v. Major Bell, 25 Mad. 15. Where a Union Chairman, while removing an obstruction to a public thoroughfare caused by the complainant, used insulting and abusive language towards the latter, no sanction was held to be necessary for the prosecution of the Chairman, as it could not be said to be a part of the functions of a Union Chairman to use abusive language in a public street—In re Rahiman, 4 L.W. 556, 17 Cr.L.J. 462. A Magistrate or a public servant who was holding a trial could not be said to be acting in a public city, if he abused or defamed a witness or a legal practitioner appearing before him—Baishnab Charan v. Sukhomoy, 25 C.W.N. 957, 22 Cr.L.J. 585.

These cases, though correctly decided under the old Codes, would be of no authority now, as the language of the present section materially differs from the language of the old law. Under the present section it will not be necessary to decide whether the fact of the accused being a Judge or a public servant was a necessary element in the offence or whether the offence was one which could not have been equally committed by a private person. These nice questions would no longer arise; if it is found that the Judge, Magistrate or public servant has committed an act at a time when he was doing an official duty, this will be sufficient to attract the provisions of this section. In other words, the Legislature has now given a greater protection to the officers concerned than it did under the old section. This view has been endorsed by the Madras High Court in the very recent case of Gangaraju v. Venki, 52 Mad. 602, 30 Cr.L.J. 864 (865). This is also the view of Sir J. G. Woodroffe (Criminal Procedure, p. 229). But in two other Madras cases it has been held that the expression "offence alleged to have been committed while acting in the discharge of his official duty" does not mean any offence committed by him while he is in office; the 'acting' refers to the specific action which comprises the offence. An offence arising out of abuse of official position, by an act not purporting to be official does not necessitate sanction under sec. 197. And so, a complaint against the Chairman of a Municipal Council of having threatened a voter with injury to his property with intent to induce such voter to vote for any candidate or to abstain from voting, is not one in respect of which sanction is necessary under sec. 197, in as much as the act complained of is not committed in the discharge of his official duty, although the incident of his official position might have given him the opportunity to do it—Kamisetty Rama Rao v. Ramaswamy, 50 Mad. 754, 52 M.L.J. 647, 28 Cr.L.J. 539 (following 25 Mad. 15 and 1916 M.W.N. 384 cited above); Nune Panakalu v. Ravula, 52 Mad. 695, 30 Cr.L.J. 191 (194). A similar view has been taken recently by the Calcutta High Court, viz. that in order to make sec. 197 applicable it is essential that the act constituting the alleged offence should have itself taken place as an official act, or at least under the cloak of what purported to be an official act, i.e. something in the nature of an official character should have attached to the act itself; it is not enough that his capacity of a public servant put him in a position to commit the offence. Therefore, where certain moneys were paid to a Deputy Collector as selami for certain khas mahal lands, but no settlement was given, and the Deputy Collector misappropriated the moneys, held that this section did not apply—Amanat v. K. E., 33 C.W.N. 1058 (1060), 1929 Cr.C. 360. In these three cases it has been remarked that the Amendment has not made any change in the policy of the Code nor given any greater protection to the public servants, but has simply altered the language to make the sense clear, which was formerly subject to misinterpretation.

- Where a village Magistrate uses his authority and position as a public servant to constrain a person to give a bribe, sanction is necessary for his prosecution—In re Mangapathu Naidu, 2 Weir 221. Where a Judge used defamatory language to a witness during the trial of a suit, a complaint against the Judge could not be entertained without a sanction under this section, as the Judge was then acting in his official capacity—In re Ghulam Muhammad, 9 Mad. 439. Where the Administrator-General of Bengal was appointed administrator to the estate of a deceased person, and was charged with an offence under the Calcutta Municipal Act for not removing the privy on certain premises belonging to that estate, it was held that although he held the office of the Administrator-General, still the offence was committed in his private capacity as administrator to the estate of a private person and not in his public capacity as Administrator-General, and no sanction was necessary for his prosecution—Corporation of Calcutta v Administrator-General of Bengal, 30 Cal. 927. If a Magistrate or a Judicial officer, in order to examine a witness, detains him until the time of his re-examination comes or until he makes inquiries as to the failure of the witness to appear before him, his acts are purely judicial, and if any offence is committed by the Magistrate exceeding his powers in doing those acts, it is necessary that there should be a sanction for his prosecution—Baishnab Charan v Sukhomoy, 25 C.W.N. 957, 22 Cr.L.J. 585. These cases though decided under the old law would still hold good.

The question whether a person committed an act while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, is a question of fact. Where it was alleged that a member of a Municipal Committee and a Sub-committee, by exercising undue influence on a sub-overseer stopped him from purchasing bricks of a certain person and compelled him to give his assent to the purchase of bricks from the accused himself, but there was no allegation in the complaint that the accused obtained this advantage to himself, acting or purporting to act as a member of the Municipal Committee, and in fact the suggestion in the complaint was that taking advantage of his position he went outside his official duty altogether to obtain the contract himself, held that the sanction of the Local Government was not necessary for his prosecution. The case would have been otherwise if the accused in obtaining the contract held himself out to be acting as a member of the Municipal Committee or Sub-committee—Id. Ismail v. Emp., 8 Lah. 647, 29 Cr.L.J. 511 (512). If an officer conducting an auction sale himself purchases a thing in the name of his servant for his own benefit, it is an act done by him in the discharge of his official duty—K. E. v. Krishna Kani, 28 O.C. 155, 26 Cr.L.J. 1157. Where the President of a Municipal Committee received brokerage or commission on goods ordered by the Municipality, held that he could not be prosecuted for that offence without the sanction of the Local Government, as he was acting in the discharge of his duty as public servant—Emp. v. U. Maung Gale, 4 Rang. 128, 27 Cr.L.J. 1088.

Where a village Magistrate prepared a false record (in order to provide evidence for use in future) to the effect that a certain person was convicted of theft and sentenced by him to detention for 2 hours, where as a matter of fact such person was never convicted or sentenced for such offence, and that person thereupon made a complaint for the prosecution of the village Magistrate for making the false record, it was held that as the village Magistrate was not bound to make a record, he was not acting "as a Judge" when he made a record; the act was merely purported to be done by him as Judge, and no sanction was therefore necessary—Palaniandy v. Arunachellam, 32 Mad. 255. But the case would now fall under the present section by reason of the words "purporting to act" occurring in the section. These words would include not only the cases where the official has jurisdiction to take cognizance of a matter and in professedly exercising that jurisdiction commits an offence or acts ultra vires, but also cases where the initial jurisdiction is wanting and a jurisdiction is assumed by an official who in such assumed capacity acts to the prejudice of a person. See Subbia Pillai v. Emp., 1920 M.W.N. 7, 21 Cr.L.J. 223, in which the correct view of the law was taken, though it was decided under the old section. See the recent case of Sivarama-Krishna v. Seshappa, 52 Mad. 347, 30 Cr.L.J. 396 (399), in which it is laid down that fabrication by a Judge of the records of a suit is an offence committed by him while acting or purporting to act in his official duty, and it makes no difference whether the record is wholly false or partly false and partly true, or whether the suit is wholly fictitious or fictitious only in part.

A Government officer, e.g. a Tahsildar, who is appointed by the Chairman of a Municipal Council as a Polling officer, does not, while he is acting as a Polling officer, act in the discharge of an official duty as Tahsildar. No sanction is necessary for his prosecution for an offence committed by him while acting as a Polling officer—Jagannadhaswami v. Manikyam, 51 Mad. 259, 28 Cr.L.J. 1038 (1039).

645. "Taking cognizance":—This section prohibits taking cognizance of an offence committed by the Judge or public servant in his public capacity, without a sanction. But the preliminary examination of the complainant is not such cognizance as is meant by this section; and therefore such examination is not invalid in the absence of sanction. In fact it is often necessary to examine the complainant before his complaint can be understood, and the complaint must be understood before sanction can be given—Narayanadasami, Petitioner, 7 M.H.C.R. 182 (187), Satya Charan v. Chairman, 3 C.W.N. 17. The question as to whether section 197 applies to a complaint against a public servant must be postponed till after the examination of the complainant—Satya Charan v. Chairman, Uttarpara Municipality 3 C.W.N. 17 (18). But summoning the accused or taking any evidence against him amounts to taking cognizance, and this should not be done until the necessary sanction has been obtained—Reg. v. Parshram, 7 B.H.C.R. 61.

646. Sanction:—Who can give sanction:—Under the previous law (i.e. before the Amendment of 1923), sanction could be given by the Government or by the officers empowered by the Local Government, or by the Court or the authority to which the Judge or public servant was subordinate. Thus, sanction for prosecution of a Tahsildar could be given by the District Magistrate—Indar Singh v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 4. The President of the Taluk Board could give sanction for the prosecution of the Chairman of a Union Panchayet—In re Abdul Kadir, 1916 M.W.N. 384, 17 Cr L J 168. These cases are no longer of any authority. Under the present law, sanction can be given only by the Local Government. Under the old law the Local Government could empower an officer (e.g. the District Magistrate or Additional District Magistrate), to give sanction. The present section, however, contemplates no such delegation.

Offence must be specified in sanction:—The authority empowered to grant sanction cannot delegate to another the task of determining which offence the sanction should relate to. Thus, an order passed by the Board of Revenue sanctioning the prosecution of a Deputy Tahsildar for "bribery or other charges as the District Magistrate thinks likely to stand investigation by a Criminal Court" was held to be invalid because the order ought to have specified what other offences the accused should be charged with, and to leave this matter to the District Magistrate means a delegation of power not intended by the Legislature—Q. E. v. Savarier, 16 Mad. 468. See also Reg. v. Vinayak, 8 B H C.R. 32 cited in Note 648 below. But where the order granted sanction for an "offence under sec. 161 I. P. C. or any other section of the Code that may be found applicable with respect to the offence briefly described in the schedules hereto annexed" it was held that the order was no delegation, because the order granting sanction had specified the acts committed by the accused, and had also specified the offence and the section of the I. P. C. and it merely left it open to the Court to convict the accused under any other section if in the opinion of the Court some other section of the I. P. C. was more relevant than section 161—Girdhari Lal v. Emp., 1911 P.R. 11.

Sanction for abetment:—Where a sanction has been granted to prosecute a person for a substantive offence, no fresh sanction is necessary to prosecute him for abetting that offence, when the conviction for abetment is based on the same facts as those on which the charge for the substantive offence is founded—Profulla v. Emp., 30 Cal. 905.

Form of sanction:—The Code does not prescribe any particular form of sanction under this section—In re Kalagava, 27 Mad. 54. A letter addressed to the Magistrate is a sufficient sanction—Reg. v. Narayan Ramchandra, Ratanlal 32; Profulla v. Emp., 30 Cal. 905. Non-specification of the place in which and the occasion on which the offence was committed does not affect the validity of the sanction—In re Kalagava, 27 Mad. 54. The order granting sanction need not specify the offence with the same precision as is necessary in a charge—Girwardhari Lal v. K. E., 13 C.W.N. 1062; Emp. v. Jehangir, 29 Bom. L.R. 996. Thus, where the Kulkarni and the Patel of a village were charged with cheating in as much as they conspired to levy extra amounts of money from three persons who came to pay the land assessment, and the sanction was given for prosecution for 'cheating or for such other offence with which it may be necessary to prosecute them in connection with obtaining money from the ryots'; it was held that the sanction was not invalid for vagueness, in as much as it had sufficiently designated the offence or offences the power of granting or refusing sanction lies only with the Local Government, and the High Court will have no power to interfere even under the Charter Act.

Even under the old law, it was held in a Lahore case that the granting of sanction being an executive rather than a judicial act, the High Court had no power to interfere with the proceeding of a District Judge granting sanction for the prosecution of a Sub-Judge—Ali Hussain Khan v. Harcharan, 2 Lah. 305, 1922 P.L.R. 35, 23 Cr.L.J. 113.

198. No Court shall take cognizance of an offence falling under Chapter XIX or Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code or under Sections 493 to 496 (both inclusive) of the same Code, except upon a complaint made by some person aggrieved by such offence:

Provided that where the person so aggrieved is a woman who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public, or where such person is under the age of eighteen years or is an idiot or lunatic or is from sickness or infirmity unable to make a complaint, some other person may, with the leave of the Court, make a complaint on his or her behalf.

Chapter XIX (comprising sections 490-492) of the I. P. Code relates to criminal breach of contracts of service. Chapter XXI (comprising sections 499-502) relates to Defamation. Sections 493-496 deal with offences relating to marriage.

Change—The proviso has been added by section 51 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923.

650. Necessity of complaint:—A Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he takes cognizance of a charge of defamation without complaint. So, where a postcard written by the accused to the complainant, containing a defamatory matter, was privately handed over by the latter to the Magistrate without a complaint, held that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in starting a criminal prosecution thereupon—Abdulla v. Clarke, 1909 P.W.R. 3, 9 Cr.L.J. 154.

Magistrate's power to add or alter charge:—When a complaint presented to the Magistrate contained only charges under sections 352 and 504 I. P. C. but did not contain a charge under section 500 I. P. C. (defamation), but that charge was subsequently added by the Magistrate on statements made by the complainant, it was held that the Magistrate could not add the charge of defamation or take cognizance of it, as there was no formal complaint in respect of it, such as is required by this section—Q. E. v. Deoki Nandan, 10 All 39. So also, the Magistrate cannot alter a charge under section 501 I. P. C. to one under section 500 I. P. C. when there was no formal complaint by the person aggrieved in respect of the latter offence—Crown v. Uma Shankar, 1889 P R 18.

But a more liberal view has been taken in the cases noted below. Thus in a Punjab case, where a complaint was made to the Magistrate under sec 211 I. P. C. that the accused had made a false charge against him (complainant) of poisoning his daughter-in-law, with a view to injure his reputation, but the Magistrate treated the case as one under sec. 500 I P C and tried it so, it was held that having regard to the substance of the complaint, the Magistrate was competent to alter the complaint under sec 211 I P C to one under sec 500 I. P. C. when in fact the complaint was preferred by the aggrieved person—Nur Aslam v. Emp, 1884 P R. 24. The principle is that a complaint need not state precisely the section of the Penal Code under which the accused shall be charged; it is enough if the complainant lays before the Magistrate the facts which if proved would warrant a commitment under any of the sections referred to in this section—Emp v. Ali, 25 All 209. A complaint need not quote any section of the Indian Penal Code but must contain a statement of the facts relied on as constituting the offence, and it is for the Magistrate to determine on these facts what offence has prima facie been committed, the nature of the charge will be determined by him. All that is necessary for him to see is that the inquiry into the charge is within his competency, and that in the case of certain offences, the complaint has been made by the proper person. Therefore, though the complainant did not complain in so many words of having been defamed and did not mention sec. 500 I. P. Code, still if it contained a statement of the facts constituting the offence and he asked the Court to take action under that section or under any other section which the facts disclosed might justify, the Magistrate was competent to frame a charge of defamation and to try the offence—Naurati v Emp, 6 Lah 375, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 631. Where the husband of a woman who had committed bigamy made a complaint to the Magistrate alleging facts which seemed to constitute an offence under sec. 498 I. P. C. but in the subsequent inquiry it appeared that an offence under sec 494 I. P. C. was committed, it was held that the Court could take cognizance of the offence under sec. 494 I. P. C. without a fresh complaint formally preferred under that section—Emp. v. Ali, 25 All 209; In re Ujjala, 1 C.L.R. 523. This section is clearly designed to prevent Magistrates from inquiring on their own motion into a case connected with marriage unless the husband or other person authorised moves them to do so, but when the case is once properly instituted before the Magistrate, he can proceed in respect of any other offence proved or against any other person implicated—In re Ujjala. 1 C.L R. 523.

Power of Appellate Court to alter charge:—An appellate Court can under sec. 423 alter a conviction under one section into one under another section, and in doing so it is not bound by such restrictions as, for instan

tion—Q. E. v. Deoki Nandan, 10 All 39 So also, the Magistrate cannot alter a charge under section 501 I. P. C. to one under section 500 I. P. C. when there was no formal complaint by the person aggrieved in respect of the latter offence—Crown v. Uma Shankar, 1889 P.R. 18

3 C.L.J. 38. (This is now expressly provided by the recent amendment). Where a Hindu lady is living with her father, brother or son, she is a member of that family and her reputation is bound up with the reputation of the person in whose house and under whose charge she is living, and any imputation as to her character will affect as much the relative with whom she is living as herself. Therefore the brother of a Hindu widow, with whom she has been living, is an aggrieved person in respect of an imputation of unchastity made against the woman—Thakur Das v Adhar Chandra, 32 Cal. 425. In Masuria Din v. Jagannath, 1893 A.W.N. 207, however, it was held that the son was not an aggrieved person in respect of a defamation of his mother. In a Bombay case also it was held that only the female herself, and not a male relative of hers, could make a complaint for defamation under this section—Q. E. v. Kustantin, Ratanlal 327. But under the proviso newly added by the Amendment Act of 1923, any friend or relative of the female will now be able to make the complaint with the leave of the Court.

Where certain allegations made in a newspaper against A and certain others were true as regards A but untrue as regards the others, it was held that A was not the person aggrieved by the publication of the allegations—Subraya v. Kader Rowthen, 1914 M.W.N. 351, 15 Cr.L.J. 357.

The complaint in respect of defamation must be made by the person aggrieved and cannot be preferred by his official superior. Thus, where a police officer has been defamed, a complaint by his official superior on the ground that the good name of the police force has been attacked, cannot be entertained—Gaya v. K. E., 26 O.C. 44, 23 Cr.L.J. 641. Where a newspaper published statements, which were alleged to be defamatory, of specific acts of negligence on the part of the Health Officer and his subordinates, it was held that the President of the Municipality was not a person aggrieved within the meaning of this section merely because he had a control over those officers, and that by the imputation made against his subordinates, his own conduct and administration had not been impugned—Beauchamp v. Moore, 26 Mad. 43.

Death of complainant in defamation:—The death of the complainant, during the course of the criminal proceedings for defamation, necessarily terminates those proceedings—Ishar Das v. K. E., 1908 P.R. 10.

Person aggrieved by bigamy:—In the case of an offence of bigamy committed by the wife, the husband is the only person aggrieved by such offence, and he alone can make the complaint. The father of the husband is not the "person aggrieved"—K. E. v. Lala, 32 All. 78; so also, the brother of the husband is not the person aggrieved—Emp. v. Imtiazan, 25 All. 132; Q. E. v. Bai Rukshmoni, 10 Bom. 340; Hanuman v. K. E., 11 O.C. 148, 7 Cr.L.J. 457.

Prior to the present amendment, it was held that if the husband of the girl who committed bigamy was a minor, his mother was not competent to make a complaint, as she was not the person aggrieved—In re Sessions Judge, 2 Weir 231; it was also held that if the husband was a lunatic, his brother could not make a complaint on his behalf—Dy. Leg Rem. v. Sarna, 26 Cal. 336 These two cases are now rendered obsolete by the proviso newly added in this section.

199. No Court shall take cognizance of an offence under Section 497 or Section 498 of the Indian Penal Code, except upon a complaint made by the husband of the woman, or in his absence, made with the leave of the Court by some person who had care of such woman on his behalf at the time when such offence was committed :

Provided that, where such husband is under the age of eighteen years, or is an idiot or lunatic, or is from sickness or infirmity unable to make a complaint, some other person may, with the leave of the Court, make a complaint on his behalf.

Sec. 497 I P C—Adultery Section 498—Enticing or taking away or detaining with criminal intent a married woman.

Change—The italicised words have been added by sec 52 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

Object of section—The restriction imposed in this section (empowering only the husband or the guardian to make the complaint) is not to afford immunity or protection to the offender, but to prevent a person unconnected with the woman from giving publicity to a matter which neither the husband nor the guardian is willing to agitate—In re Rathna Padayachi, 17 Cr L J 363 (Mad.).

653. Scope of section.—The only offences referred to in this section are offences under secs. 497 and 498 I P. C., but a charge of house trespass with intent to commit adultery is not contemplated by this section, and such an offence may be inquired into without complaint by the husband of the woman concerned, although a prosecution for the offence of adultery must be instituted by the husband alone—Anonymous, 1 Weir 531 Where the complainant charged the accused with house-trespass with intent to commit theft but it appeared that he committed house-trespass with intent to commit adultery with the complainant's wife, he could be convicted of the latter offence, although the complainant had not made a formal complaint for that offence—Q. E. v. Kangla, 23 All 82; Emp. v. Dhauntua Lodhi, 19 Cr.L.J. 881. So also, where the accused admitted that he had entered the house at night for the purpose of carrying on an intrigue with the complainant's wife, but the complainant refused to charge the accused with having entered the house with intent to commit the offence of adultery but founded his complaint solely on the entry having been with intent to commit theft, which was found to be false, it was held that the Magistrate had the power to convict the accused.

of house-trespass with intent to commit adultery even though the husband refused to make that charge—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R App. 5, 1 Weir 532

But in another Allahabad case, where the complainant charged the accused with house-trespass with intent to commit theft but the accused stated that he had gone there to have sexual intercourse with a woman, and the accused was convicted for house-trespass with intent to commit adultery, held that the conviction was injudicious, in the absence of a complaint by the husband of the woman—Emp. v Harcharan, 1886 A W N 42

654. Complaint.—The complaint referred to in this section means a complaint as defined in sec. 4 (h) A Magistrate is not competent to entertain a case under sec 498 I P C on the report of a police officer, and in the absence of a complaint by the husband or guardian of the woman alleged to have been enticed away by the accused—Bhana v. Crown, 1910 P.R 32 Information lodged by the complainant before the police is not a complaint sufficient to warrant a conviction under secs. 497 and 498 I. P. C.—Tara Prosad v. Emp., 30 Cal 910, Emp. v Khushal Singh, 17 C P.L.R. 105, In re Chidambara, 2 Weir 235, Arumuga v. Gangabai, 43 M L J 564, 23 Cr.LJ 592 But where on a charge under sec 366 I. P. C the Police took up the proceeding in which the husband appeared as a witness and he asked the Magistrate to drop the proceeding thereunder but said that he intended to prosecute the accused under sec. 498 I. P. C. and to get him punished, it was held that there was a complaint,—in as much as he made an allegation before the Magistrate that the offence should be inquired into—Bhawani v. Emp., 38 All. 276, 14 A L.J. 233, 17 Cr.L.J. 72.

If the husband brings a complaint of any other offence, and from certain statements in his deposition it appears that an offence mentioned in this section has been committed, no conviction for the latter offence can be sustained, because the husband has not made a formal complaint of that offence. Thus, where the husband preferred against the accused a complaint of rape on his wife, but not of adultery, and certain statements in his deposition disclosed an offence of adultery, a conviction for the latter offence was illegal, in as much the husband had not preferred a formal complaint of adultery; even the circumstance of the husband appearing as a witness in the case could not be regarded as amounting to the institution of a complaint for adultery—Emp. v. Kali, 5 All. 233; Cheman v. Emp., 29 Cal. 415; Rahmatulla v. Emp., 1883 P.R. 10. Similarly, where the accused was charged with offences under secs. 366 and 379 I. P. C., but from statements in the deposition of the husband of the woman concerned an offence under sec. 498 I. P. C. was made out, and the judge convicted him of that offence, it was held that the conviction was illegal in the absence of a formal complaint by the husband in respect of that offence; and the statements made by the husband in his deposition could not be said to be a complaint under sec. 4 (h) of this Code—Emp v. Iramkhan, 14 Bom. L.R. 141, 13 Cr.L.J. 287. Even the formal assent of the husband to a charge of adultery, added at the end of his deposition, would not probably be a formal compliance with this section—Q v Lucky Narain, 24 W R 18. Where a husband charged the accused persons with theft and theft only, they could not be convicted of an offence under sec 498 I P C, as there was no complaint preferred by the husband under this section in respect of the latter offence—Roda Singh v Crown, 1918 P R 2, 19 Cr.L.J. 300.

But a contrary view has been taken in several cases. Thus in Sheikh Mahomed, Ratanlal 584 (585), it was held that the word 'complaint' must be taken as including not only a written complaint but also the examination of the complainant, at any rate, prior to the issue of process; therefore where the written complaint specifically mentioned section 497 I P C only, but did not mention an offence under sec 498 I P C., but the complainant's examination made out such an offence, the Magistrate had jurisdiction to frame a charge under sec 498 I P C. and to try such offence. And in Jutra Seikh v Reazet, 20 Cal 483, it was laid down that upon a complaint in respect of an offence under section 368 I P C a conviction under sec 498 I P C could stand, even in the absence of a complaint by the husband, if his evidence was such as to justify the conviction for the latter offence. In a recent case the Madras High Court is also of opinion that for the purpose of ascertaining the 'complaint' under this section, the written complaint as well as the sworn statement may be read together—In re Arunachalam, 45 M L J 44, 24 Cr L J 137.

The complaint referred to in this section is a complaint of the specific offence mentioned in this section and not a complaint of any offence. Where a person was charged with kidnapping or with abduction, and the Judge convicted the accused on the evidence, of an offence under sec. 498 I P C, held that the conviction was wrong as there was no specific complaint of an offence under sec 498 I P C—Banguru Asari v. Emp, 27 Mad 61. Where the accused was charged only with the offence of kidnapping a minor girl and theft of jewels and there was no complaint that the accused's purpose was to have illicit intercourse with the girl, the Magistrate could not take cognizance of an offence under sec 498 I P C—In re Arunachalam supra. So also, where a complaint was made of an offence under secs. 494 and 498 I P C., the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the accused for an offence under sec. 497 I P C—Q. E v Nalja, Ratanlal 531, Emp v Badan, 1881 A W N 112. Similarly, a Magistrate cannot convict a person of an offence under sec 498 I P C when the complaint was for an offence under sec 497 I P C.—Korap Ali v Hadi Molla 12 C W N cxvi. A committing Magistrate cannot alter a charge of rape into one of adultery on the representation of the accused, without any request on the part of the husband of the woman—Emp v Ram Balsh 1882 A W N 165. Where a charge of rape brought against the accused was found untrue, held that in the absence of a complaint by the husband the Court cannot on the same evidence take cognizance of the offence of adultery—Nga Po v. K. E., U.B.R. (1912) 4th Qr. 155, 14 Cr L J 284. But the Punjab Chief Court has laid down that though the offence charged in the complaint made by the husband is one under section 371 I. P. Code, still if the facts set forth in the complaint are sufficient to support a conviction under sec. 498 I. P. C., the Magistrate has jurisdiction to frame a charge under the latter section. If, in the opinion of the Magistrate, the offence disclosed falls under section 498 I. P. Code, the Magistrate is at liberty to proceed and frame a charge under that section, provided the complainant satisfies the conditions of sec. 199 Cr P Code, whatever may have been the section of the I. P. Code recited in the complaint—Piran Ditta v Q E., 23 P.R. 1895.

It has also been laid down that the Court cannot add a charge of an offence referred to in this section without a formal complaint in respect of that charge by the person specified. Where the accused was committed to the Sessions on charges under secs 363 and 366 I. P. C., and at the conclusion of the evidence, to establish these charges the Sessions Court added a charge under sec. 498 I. P. C. and convicted the accused on all the three charges, held that the procedure was not regular, that the additional charge was prejudicial to the accused and that the conviction under section 498 I. P. C. must be set aside—Emp. v. Isap Md, 31 Bom 218.

655. Who can complain —The only person who can prefer a complaint of an offence referred to in this section is the husband of the woman. The husband is entitled to make the complaint even though the marriage has been dissolved before the complaint, if the offence was committed before the marriage was dissolved—Dhanna Singh v. Crown, 1922 P.W.R. 18, 23 Cr L.J. 462.

In the absence of the husband, the complaint may be made by any person having the care of the woman. Thus, the mother of the husband, who was in charge of the wife during the absence of the husband, is competent to prefer a complaint of an offence under sec. 498 I. P. C. against the person who abducts the wife—Madhub Ali v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 780 (Lah). Where at the time of the offence the wife was left under the care of her father, the fact that the husband stands by will not prevent the father from preferring the complaint—In re Rathna, 17 Cr.L.J. 363 (Mad); Mir Alam v. Emp., 5 Lah. L.J. 183, 23 Cr.L.J. 690. The absence must be from the place, and therefore where the complaint was preferred by the nephew of the husband, when the latter was bed-ridden with paralysis, it was held that the Court could not take cognizance of the offence—Crown v. Tikomal, 3 S.L.R. 15. But this ruling is no longer correct in view of the words "sickness or infirmity" occurring in the proviso newly added.

The complaint may be preferred by any person having the care of the woman, during the absence of the husband, even though the absence be temporary, e.g. for two days. It may sometimes be absolutely necessary that when the husband is away, a complaint should be preferred, whether the absence be for two days or more, when there is a probability that unless prompt action is taken, the offence may be committed.

*Acquittal for want of proper complaint—Fresh complaint:—*Where the brother of the husband of the woman instituted a complaint under sec. 498 I. P. C. alleging that he had authority from the husband to prefer the complaint, but after taking evidence the Magistrate held that the complainant had no authority and acquitted the accused, and subsequently the husband himself instituted the complaint, it was held that the previous acquittal was no bar to a fresh trial—Umeruddin v. Emp., 31 All. 317; Emp. v. Tikaram, 17 Bom. L. R. 678, 16 Cr. L. J. 657.

199A. When in any case falling under Section 198

Objection by lawful guardian to complaint by person other than person aggrieved.

or Section 199, the person on whose behalf the complaint is sought to be made is under the age of eighteen years or is a lunatic, and the person applying for leave has not been appointed or declared by competent authority to be the guardian of the person of the said minor or lunatic, and the Court is satisfied that there is a guardian so appointed or declared, notice shall be given to such guardian, and the Court shall, before granting the application, give him a reasonable opportunity of objecting to the granting thereof.

This section has been added by sec. 53 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

"We have added a new section 199A in order to safeguard the rights of a legally appointed guardian"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

CHAPTER XVI.

OF COMPLAINTS TO MAGISTRATES.

It is most desirable that Magistrates should follow the procedure which is quite clearly laid down in this chapter dealing with complaints to Magistrates—Balai Lal v. Pasupati, 21 C.W.N. 127.

Magistrates should also be prompt in disposing of complaints under this chapter. They have no right whatever to keep complaints instituted before them without passing orders for several months. Such action is in the highest degree improper and shows want of proper understanding as to what their duties are—Salimullah v. Birjhan, 18 Cr. L. J. 271 (All.).

200. [* * *] A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence on complaint shall at once examine the complainant upon oath, and the substance of examination shall be reduced to writing and shall be signed by the complainant, and also by the Magistrate:

Provided as follows:—

(a) when the complaint is made in writing, nothing herein contained shall be deemed to require a Magistrate to examine the complainant before transferring the case under Section 192;

(aa) when the complaint is made in writing, nothing herein contained shall be deemed to require the examination of a complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court or by a public servant acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties;

(b) where the Magistrate is a Presidency Magistrate such examination may be on oath or not as the Magistrate in each case thinks fit, and where the complaint is made in writing, need not be reduced to writing; but the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, before the matter of the complaint is brought before him, require it to be reduced to writing;

(c) when the case has been transferred under Section 192 and the Magistrate so transferring it has already examined the complainant, the Magistrate to whom it is so transferred shall not be bound to re-examine the complainant.

Change —This section has been amended by section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The words "subject to the provisions of section 476" which occurred at the very beginning of the old section have been omitted, and proviso (aa) has been newly added. "We would add to this clause a provision that in the case of a complaint under sec 476, the examination of the complainant shall be dispensed with"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

The words "where the complaint is made in writing" have been inserted in proviso (b), by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act II of 1926. The reason has been thus stated.—"At present a Presidency Magistrate need not record the substance of an examination even if the complaint is not in writing. It is desirable that where there is no complaint in writing the Magistrate should record the examination in writing"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925, Part V, p. 214).

657. Taking cognizance :—A Magistrate is bound to take cognizance of an offence upon complaint; see Note 586 under sec. 190 ante. "A Magistrate is bound to receive all complaints, whether they may be preferred orally or in writing"—Cal G R & C O, p. 8.

If a pardanashin lady sends a complaint to a Magistrate, he is entitled to take cognizance of it, but before he takes cognizance he must be satisfied that it is her complaint. It is comparatively unimportant by what means the complaint reaches the Magistrate if it is really her complaint—Abhoyeswari v. Kishori Mohan, 42 Cal 19 (23), 18 C.W.N. 1020

658. Complaints.—See notes under sec. 4 (h)

It is clear from the wording of sections 200 and 201 that a complaint need not be in writing—J. R. Das v. King Emp, 1 Rang 549

Presentation of complaint—Since the complainant is to be examined "at once" it follows that ordinarily a complaint must be presented in person and a complaint shall not be accepted which is not signed by the complainant and is not preferred by a person duly authorised to prefer that specific complaint—Abhoyeswari v. Kishori, 42 Cal 19 (23), 15 Cr.L.J. 348. But a complaint not presented in person is not bad in law; and if a complaint is not so presented, the Magistrate may call upon the complainant to appear before him on a date to be fixed by him, and may examine him on that day—Chuhermal v. Emp., 23 S L R. 285, 30 Cr.L.J. 732 (733)

659. Examination of complainant:—The object of requiring the Magistrate to examine the complainant possibly is that the facts constituting the offence may be ascertained when in a written complaint they are not given—Sukumar v. Mofizuddin, 25 C.W.N. 357, 22 Cr.L.J. 455. The object of the examination is further to see whether there is a prima facie case against the accused, and to prevent the issue of process in cases where the examination of the complainant would show that the complaint was false, frivolous and vexatious and intended merely to harass the accused—Girdhari Lal v. Crown, 1911 P R. 11. The object of the examination is to find out whether there is any matter which calls for investigation by a Criminal Court—Bai; Nath v. Raja Ram, 10 A L.J. 79, 13 Cr.L.J. 704.

The examination of the complainant is not to be a mere form but an intelligent inquiry into the subject-matter of the complaint, carried far enough to enable the Magistrate to exercise his judgment as to whether there is or there is not sufficient ground for proceeding—Cal. G R. & C. O., p. 9

A Magistrate cannot refuse to take cognizance of an offence on receipt of a complaint, but he is bound to examine the complainant—Umer Ali v. Safer Ali, 13 Cal 334. Even if a Magistrate finds a complaint to be false and groundless, he cannot refuse to examine the complainant—In re Ramchurn, 3 N.W.P. 272. Although it is competent for him to dismiss the complaint, still he cannot dismiss it without examining the complainant—Jalaluddin v. Md. Khalil, 1884 A.W.N. 47; Satya Charan v. Chairman, 3 C.W.N. 17.

Mode of examination:—On presentation of a complaint the shall examine the complainant on oath; the substance of that te

signed by him is to make use of it, in case of need, as against the complainant's subsequent deposition as a witness, for starting against him a prosecution for perjury on the ground that the two statements contradict each other—Bhagirathibai v Emp., 26 Cr L J 1401 (Nag)

660. Omission to examine—Effect:—The examination of the complainant is not a mere matter of formality, and when a Magistrate dismisses a complaint without making such examination himself, the omission is a material one and cannot be cured by sec. 537—Pangu Koeri v Emp., 1 P.L.T. 346; In re Ramasami, 43 M.L.J. 710; Moolchand v. Kessoomal, 15 S.L.R. 200, Loke Nath v. Sanyasi, 30 Cal. 923; Kartik v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 142, Fazlar Rahman v. Abidhar Rahaman, 23 C.W.N. 392; Haladhar v. Sub-Inspector, 9 C.W.N. 199; Satya Charan v. Chairman, 3 C.W.N. 17; Jaliluddin v. Md. Khalil, 1884 A.W.N. 47; Q. E. v. Harrak Chand, 8 W.R. 12 No investigation can be ordered under sec. 202 without examining the complainant—20 Cr L.J. 552 (Pat.); Jitan v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 564, Mahadeo v. Q. E. 27 Cal 921 (924); In re Budh Nath, 4 C.W.N. 305, Virabhadrayya v. Vyricherla, 2 Weir 244; Ali Muhammad v. Crown, 1912 P.R. 2. (This is now expressly provided in the proviso of sec. 202) No process can be issued against the accused unless and until the Magistrate has examined the complainant—Abhoyeswari v. Kishori Mohan, 42 Cal. 19 (23)

But in several cases it has been held that the omission to examine the complainant on oath before issuing process is a mere irregularity and does not invalidate the conviction in the absence of any prejudice to the accused by reason of such irregularity—Phagu Shahu v. K. E., 1 P.L.J. 592 (595); Emp. v. Heman Gope, 21 Cr.L.J. 779, 1 P.L.T. 349; Sk. Abdul Ali v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 446; Bhairab v. Emp., 46 Cal. 807 (818); Q. E. v. Monu, 11 Mad. 443; In re Molaiappa, 55 M.L.J. 715, 30 Cr.L.J. 432; Bateshar v. Emp., 37 All. 628; Gopichand v. Emp., 1 Rang. 517; Muso v. Crown, 8 S.L.R. 41, 15 Cr.L.J. 649 Thus, where the complainants made a complaint to the Police that the accused beat them causing grievous hurt, but the police did not send up the case, and the complainant applied to the Magistrate, who sent for the police papers and summoned the accused without examining the complainants, it was held that the irregularity did not vitiate the proceeding—Bateshar v. Emp., 37 All. 628, 13 A.L.J. 840. The omission to examine the complainant under sec. 200 is a mere irregularity and not an illegality. The person prejudiced by such an irregularity is the complainant, and when the case ends in a conviction he has no grievance. The accused cannot in general complain of the irregularity, as the omission to take a sworn statement from the complainant cannot prejudice the accused—Ambayara v. Pachamuthu, 19 L.W. 461, 25 Cr.L.J. 730, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 587. In a recent Patna Full Bench case it has been held that omission to examine the complainant is an irregularity only, and not an illegality, and it is only where the Magistrate intends to take proceedings (e.g. to order investigation or issue process) that it is incumbent on him to examine the complainant, but not otherwise—Bharat v. Judhistr., 10 P.L.T. 779 (F.B.), 30 Cr.L.J. 1056 (1058).

661A. If a complaint in respect of an offence of murder is presented to a second-class Magistrate, the proper procedure is to return the complaint under sec. 201 for presentation to the proper Court with an endorsement to that effect—Bengall Gope v. Emp., 5 Pat 447, 27 Cr.L.J. 704.

202. (1) If the Chief Presidency Magistrate or any other Presidency Magistrate whom the Local Government may from time to time authorize on this behalf or any Magistrate of the first or second class, is not satisfied as to the truth of a complaint of an offence of which he is authorized to take cognizance, he may, when the complainant has been examined, record his reasons, and may then postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the person complained against, and either inquire into the case himself or direct a previous local investigation to be made by any officer subordinate to such Magistrate, or by a police-officer, or by such other person, not being a Magistrate or police-officer, as he thinks fit, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint.

202. (1) *Any Magistrate on receipt of a complaint of an offence of which he is authorised to take cognizance, or which has been transferred to him under Section 192, may, if he thinks fit, for reasons to be recorded in writing, postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the person complained against, and either inquire into the case himself or, if he is a Magistrate other than a Magistrate of the third class, direct an inquiry or investigation to be made by any Magistrate subordinate to him, or by a police officer or by such other person * * * as he thinks fit, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint : Provided that, save where the complaint has been made by a Court, no such direction shall be made unless the complainant has been examined on oath under the provisions of Section 200.*

(2) If such investigation

(2) If any inquiry or i is made by some person not being a Magistrate or a police-officer, he shall exercise all the powers conferred by this Code on an officer in charge of a police-station, except that he shall not have power to arrest without warrant.

vestigation under this section is made by a person not being a Magistrate or a police officer, such person shall exercise all the powers conferred by this Code on an officer in charge of a police-station, except that he shall not have power to arrest without warrant.

(2A) Any Magistrate inquiring into a case under this section, may, if he thinks fit, take evidence of witnesses on oath.

(3) This section applies also to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay.

(3) This section applies also to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay.

Change :—This section has been amended by sec 55 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

The main changes introduced are the following :—

"(1) Third class Magistrates have been given power to make preliminary inquiries personally. (2) Authority to make a preliminary inquiry has been given in any case in which the Magistrate thinks fit for reasons to be recorded in writing. The only ground contemplated by the old section was 'if the Magistrate is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint.' This is thought to be undesirably narrow. (3) The words 'inquiry or investigation,' have been substituted for the expression 'previous local investigation,' and power is given to take evidence upon oath in the case of such a preliminary inquiry. (4) Presidency Magistrates are enabled to act under this section without special authorisation"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

'Or which has been transferred to him under section 192' :—"We have made a small amendment in sec. 202 (1) to cover cases which have been transferred to a Magistrate under sec. 192 as well as cases of which he has taken cognizance himself"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916. This amendment supersedes the ruling in 18 C.W.N. 95

The present proviso to subsection (1) has been substituted by the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act II of 1926 in place of the old proviso which was added by the Amendment Act of 1923, and which ran thus :—

plainant has been examined on oath under the provisions of section 200, or (b) where the complaint has been made by a Court under the provisions of this Code "

Thus, this proviso laid down that a Magistrate receiving a complaint need not direct an inquiry or investigation if the complaint was made by a Court. "This has caused difficulties in the case of a Court complaining under sec 476 of the Code Under that section, the Court has only to record a finding that it is expedient that an inquiry should be made into an offence which appears to have been committed, and it seems clear that cases will arise in which an inquiry or investigation should be made before a person is put on his trial The difficulty was brought to light by the Bombay High Court, and the Local Government; and the other High Courts have all agreed that some provision is required. This clause gives effect to this proposal"—Statement of Objects and Reasons, (Gazette of India, 1925, Part V, p 214)

The present proviso lays down by implication that an inquiry or investigation may be directed in any case, including the case of a Court complaining under sec 476, but that in such a case the examination of the complainant is not necessary before the inquiry or investigation.

662. Scope and application of section—This chapter deals with the procedure to be followed by a Magistrate upon taking cognizance of an offence upon complaint, i.e., when he takes cognizance under sec. 190 clause (a), and not when he takes cognizance upon a Police report or other information mentioned in clauses (b) and (c) of sec. 190. See Rangachari, 2 Weir 241 (242). This section applies only to cases where there is a "complaint" as distinguished from a mere information. A Magistrate acting upon second-hand information cannot be said to be acting upon complaint—Narain v. Emp., 1883 P.R. 24. So also, a Magistrate taking cognizance of a case upon a police report cannot proceed under this section and cannot therefore refer the case to a subordinate Magistrate for local investigation—Abdulla v. Emp., 40 Cal. 854; Imp. v. Shoukatmal, 7 S.L.R. 75, Sarba Mahton v. Emp., 17 C.W.N. 824; Tiloki v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 220, 22 Cr.L.J. 735.

Under the old section, the investigation could be ordered only in those cases where the Magistrate was not satisfied as to the truth of a complaint—Jhumuck v. Pathuk, 27 Cal. 798, Ranga Chari, 2 Weir 241 (242); Mahadeo v. Q. E., 27 Cal. 921 (924), Narain v. Emp., 1888 P.R. 24. Under the present section, the Magistrate can direct inquiry on any ground. See notes under "Change" above

If the complainant is not speaking from personal knowledge, a Magistrate taking cognizance would exercise a wise discretion in making the inquiry under this section—Sukumar v. Mofizuddin, 25 C.W.N. 357.

This section applies to a complaint of an offence. A petition for maintenance under Sec 488 is not a complaint of an offence; and therefore this section is inapplicable to proceedings in maintenance. The Magistrate to whom a maintenance petition is preferred has no power refer it to a Subordinate Magistrate for inquiry and report, but must inquire into it himself—Sardaran v. Amir Khan, 1905 P.R. 29.

This section does not in terms authorise a Magistrate to refer a petition under sec. 107 to a police officer for investigation, as a petition under sec. 107 does not allege the commission of an offence and does not amount to a complaint. But as the Magistrates have control over the police whose assistance they can seek in the discharge of their duties, it is perfectly open to a Magistrate to avail himself of the help of the police, apart from sec. 202, and to refer the matter of the petition under sec. 107 to a police officer for investigation—Sonjivi v. Koneri, 49 Mad. 315, 50 M.L.J. 460, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 521.

663. Recording reasons :—If the Magistrate on examining the complainant, distrusts the statement of the complainant, he is bound to record his reasons before directing a local investigation—Baidyanath v. Muspratt, 14 Cal. 141. If the Magistrate refers a case to the police for inquiry and report, without recording any reasons for distrusting the truth of the complaint, and then on receiving the report from the police, dismisses the complaint under sec. 203, held that the order of dismissal must be set aside—Virabhadrayya v. Vyricherla, 2 Weir 244; Balai Lal v. Pasupati, 21 C.W.N. 127, 17 Cr.L.J. 396. But in some cases it has been held that omission to record the reasons is at most an irregularity which will be cured by section 537 unless it has occasioned a failure of justice—Anonymous, 2 Weir 244 (245); K. E. v. Alagirisami, 25 Mad 546; In re Arula, 10 M.L.T. 120, Madho v. Rashid Ahmed, 18 Cr.L.J. 765, 15 A.L.J. 642, Ram Prasad v. Moti, 11 A.L.J. 754, 14 Cr.L.J. 493; Ram Saran v. Md Jan Khan 26 Cr.L.J. 1394, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 34; Balai Lal v. Pasupati, 21 C.W.N. 127, 17 Cr.L.J. 396.

664. "Postpone the issue of process" :—The process shall ordinarily issue after the examination of the complainant, unless the Magistrate has reason to doubt the truth of the complaint, when only he is authorised to postpone the issue of process and order an inquiry or local investigation—Jhumuck v. Pathuk, 27 Cal. 798.

The procedure prescribed by this section can be adopted when no process has been issued to compel the attendance of the accused. A Magistrate who after issue of process directs an inquiry and report acts in contravention of the procedure prescribed by law—Q. E. v. Khurram, 1896 A.W.N. 140. Once a process has been issued against the accused, the Magistrate cannot exercise his option of holding a preliminary inquiry. He must proceed with the trial—Gan v. Jumanshah, 6 S.L.R. 83, 13 Cr.L.J. 749; Bishan Dial v. Ghaziuddin, 1901 A.W.N. 44. Thus, it is illegal to order a preliminary inquiry after the accused has been brought before the Court under a warrant—Ramkant v. Jadub, 21 W.R. 44. When a Magistrate has accepted a complaint and issued process upon it and taken evidence for the complainant, he or his successor cannot refer the case to the Police for inquiry and report—Sadappaachariar v. Ragavachariar, 9 Mad. 282. Where a subordinate Magistrate has taken cognizance of a case and has issued process, the District Magistrate has no power to interfere and order an inquiry—Jhumuck v. Pathuk, 27 Cal. 798, and it is doubtful whether he can make such order even after withdrawing the case to his own Court for trial—Ibid. On the other hand, if a Magistrate directs a local inquiry, he cannot issue process before he receives the report of the inquiry—Krishna Bala v. Nirodabala, 41 C.L.J. 170, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 989. But where after the Magistrate had issued processes against two accused persons, one of them appeared and laid a cross-complaint, and then the Magistrate rescinded the order of issue of process and sent forth the cases to a subordinate Magistrate for local inquiry and report, held that the action of the Magistrate was right and proper—Lalit Mohan v. Nani Lal, 39 C.L.J. 329, 25 Cr.L.J. 464.

665. If the accused appears.—This section speaks of postponement of issue of process. If, however, the accused appears of his own accord without a summons he is entitled to require that the complaint shall be proceeded with or dismissed. If no evidence is offered against the accused, he must be formally discharged—In re Lakshman, 26 Bom. 552.

666. Inquiry.—Under the old section, the inquiry was to be conducted by the Magistrate himself who tried the case, he could not direct the inquiry to be held by a subordinate Magistrate or a police officer. These persons could only hold a local investigation. See Haricharan v. Girish Chandra, 38 Cal. 68 (72), Gangadhar v. K. E., 43 Cal. 173, 20 C.W.N. 63; Md. Imamuddin v. Debendra, 18 C.W.N. 95, Mohar Khan v. Gayzuddin, 18 C.W.N. 399. The present amendment now empowers these persons to hold an inquiry as well as an investigation. See also Amrit Majhi v. K. E., 46 Cal. 854, 23 C.W.N. 623, in which the order referring the complaint to a subordinate Magistrate for inquiry and report was held to be legal.

The inquiry contemplated by this section does not necessarily mean an inquiry by the Magistrate himself by examining witnesses or holding investigation into the case. It is open to the Magistrate to investigate into the matter in order to ascertain the truth or falsity of the complaint, in any way he thinks proper. Where an investigation has been made by the police and witnesses had been examined by the investigating police officer, there is nothing in law to prevent the Magistrate from looking into the police papers for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint. If upon looking into the police papers the Magistrate is satisfied that this is not a fit case in which process should issue, he can dismiss the complaint—Ramanand v. Ali Hassan, 26 Cr.L.J. 129 (Pat.).

Before the present amendment, the only Magistrate who could make an inquiry under this section was the Magistrate taking cognizance of the case, a Magistrate to whom a case was transferred could not hold an inquiry under sec. 202. See Md. Imamuddin v. Debendra, 18 C.W.N. 95. Under the present amendment, such Magistrate is empowered to hold the inquiry by reason of the addition of the words "or which has been transferred to him under section 192."

Under this section, the Magistrate has the option of only one of two alternatives, viz., either to inquire into the case himself or to direct a local investigation. He cannot have recourse to both the alternatives; and if he, after partially inquiring into the case himself, makes an order directing local investigation, the procedure is irregular—Emp. v. Durga Prasad, 44 All. 550, 20 A.L.J. 355, 23 Cr.L.J. 279.

The police inquiry contemplated by this section cannot take the place of such evidence as the complainant may desire to produce before an adjudication is made of his complaint. Such inquiry can be ordered, before evidence is recorded, to enable the Magistrate to determine how far the complaint was prima facie well-founded. When the Magistrate decides to record the evidence himself, he should complete the inquiry and determine upon the evidence adduced how far the complaint is borne out—Mahadevi v. Ram Sahai, 22 O.C. 321. The inquiry under this section cannot take the place of hearing, the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the case cannot refer the case under this section to a subordinate Magistrate for calling upon the accused to show cause against prosecution and for submitting a report thereon—Bhairab v. K. E., 46 Cal. 807, 23 C.W.N. 484, 29 C.L.J. 318.

This section makes no provision for the manner in which the evidence in an inquiry should be recorded. The failure to take down the deposition of the witnesses by the Magistrate, in a case in which he had before him the final report of the police containing a detailed account of the statements of witnesses examined by the police, and the witnesses repeated the same statements before him, is not an error of law—Tilakdhari v. Musri, 26 Cr.L.J. 1346, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 584.

Second inquiry—A Magistrate may hold an inquiry even after a local investigation has been made by a subordinate officer, if he is dissatisfied with the result of such investigation—Haricharan v. Girish Chandra, 38 Cal. 68. But in Ram Prasad v. Moti, 11 A.L.J. 754, it has been held that the Magistrate taking cognizance cannot hold a further inquiry after the holding of a local investigation.

667. Local investigation—The object of the local investigation is to ascertain the truth or falsehood of the complaint; a local investigation was not intended by the Legislature to supersede a regular trial. The object of this section is to prevent the issue of process where there is some initial ground for doubting the truth of the complaint and where on a local investigation there appears no evidence to support it. Where it is found that there is some evidence in support of the complainant's charge, the function of the officer making the local investigation is fulfilled. Process should then be issued and the truth or falsity of the complaint should be determined in a regular manner—Nga Tha Pu v. K. E., U.B.R. (1910) 1st Qr. 73, 11 I.C. 249, 12 Cr.L.J. 385.

A local investigation can be ordered when there is a quarrel about boundaries or any matter of that kind. Otherwise, the Magistrate taking cognizance should make an inquiry himself—Baij Nath v. Raja Ram, 10 A.L.J. 79, 13 Cr.L.J. 704.

The words "local investigation" are not restricted to the investigation of the physical features only but they mean an inquiry into the truth or falsity of the allegations made in the complaint-petition. The word "local" is used with a view to hold the investigation in the locality for the convenience of the parties and their witnesses, and also it may in certain cases necessitate an inspection of the place of occurrence, but certainly it is not confined only to the inspection of the locality—Munshi Mian v. Emp., 19 Cr.L.J. 126 (Pat.).

668. Who can investigate :—If the offence is one triable only by a Court of Session, the local investigation must be directed to some Magistrate who is competent to deal with a case triable by the Court of Session. It should not be directed to a second class Magistrate—In re Budh Nath, 4 C.W.N. 305. But see Sarjya v. K. E., 6 C.W.N. 293, where it has been held that a Magistrate holding a local investigation under this section need not be competent to entertain the complaint which he is asked to investigate.

A local investigation can be directed to a subordinate Magistrate and not to a superior Magistrate—Emp. v. Bhiku Hossein, 39 Cal. 1041, 18 C.W.N. 885. This section does not contemplate the subordination of a 1st class Magistrate to a District Magistrate. Both are first class Magistrates, and the latter cannot direct the investigation to be held by the former—Aly Mohd. v. Emp., 1912 P.R. 2. A Deputy Magistrate attached to the sub-division is subordinate to the Sub-Divisional officer—Munshi Mian v. Emp., 19 Cr.L.J. 126 (Pat.)

The investigation may be made by any person subordinate to the Magistrate, even though he be a clerk—Kanchun v. Ram Kishen, 36 Cal. 72.

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a local inquiry by a pleader in the nature of a commission in a civil case—Mohan Khan v. Gayzuddin, 18 C.W.N. 399.

Investigation by Police :—It is not a proper course to make indiscriminate use of police agency for investigating complaints. The object of law is to give persons who have been injured an access to justice independent of Police, and it is improper for the Magistrate, when a complaint is made to him, to refer the complaint to a Police officer. Such a course would foster abuses and defeat the purpose of the law—In re Jankidas, 12 Bom. 161. In petty cases of assault and the like, the Police ought not to be directed to make inquiries, because in petty matters the Police are under a strong temptation of making money out of the complaint. In such matters the proper course for the Magistrate is to take action at once upon the complaint—Ganesha v. Q. E., 1894 P.R. 19. "Magistrates are cautioned against the indiscriminate use of Police agency for the purpose of ascertaining matters as to which a Magistrate is bound to form his own opinion upon evidence given in his presence. This caution is specially needful in respect of all cases regarding offences not cognizable by the Police"—Cal. G. R. & C. O., p. 9

Under this section, the Magistrate has the option of only one of two alternatives, viz., either to inquire into the case himself or to direct a local investigation. He cannot have recourse to both the alternatives, and if he, after partially inquiring into the case himself, makes an order directing local investigation, the procedure is irregular—Emp. v. Durga Prasad, 44 All 550, 20 A L J 355, 23 Cr L J. 279.

The police inquiry contemplated by this section cannot take the place of such evidence as the complainant may desire to produce before an adjudication is made of his complaint. Such inquiry can be ordered, before evidence is recorded, to enable the Magistrate to determine how far the complaint was prima facie well-founded. When the Magistrate decides to record the evidence himself, he should complete the inquiry and determine upon the evidence adduced how far the complaint is borne out—Mahadevi v. Ram Sahai, 22 O C. 321. The inquiry under this section cannot take the place of hearing, the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the case cannot refer the case under this section to a subordinate Magistrate for calling upon the accused to show cause against prosecution and for submitting a report thereon—Bhairab v. K. E., 46 Cal. 807, 23 C.W.N. 484, 29 C.L.J. 318.

This section makes no provision for the manner in which the evidence in an inquiry should be recorded. The failure to take down the deposition of the witnesses by the Magistrate, in a case in which he had before him the final report of the police containing a detailed account of the statements of witnesses examined by the police, and the witnesses repeated the same statements before him, is not an error of law—Tilakdhari v. Misri, 26 Cr L.J. 1346, A I R 1925 Pat. 584.

Second inquiry —A Magistrate may hold an inquiry even after a local investigation has been made by a subordinate officer, if he is dissatisfied with the result of such investigation—Haricharan v. Girish Chandra, 38 Cal. 68. But in Ram Prasad v. Moti, 11 A L J. 754, it has been held that the Magistrate taking cognizance cannot hold a further inquiry after the holding of a local investigation.

667. Local investigation :—The object of the local investigation is to ascertain the truth or falsehood of the complaint, a local investigation was not intended by the Legislature to supersede a regular trial. The object of this section is to prevent the issue of process where there is some initial ground for doubting the truth of the complaint and where on a local investigation there appears no evidence to support it. Where it is found that there is some evidence in support of the complainant's charge, the function of the officer making the local investigation is fulfilled. Process should then be issued and the truth or falsity of the complaint should be determined in a regular manner—Nga Tha Pu v. K. E., U.B.R. (1910) 1st Qr 73, 11 I C. 249, 12 Cr L.J. 385.

A local investigation can be ordered when there is a quarrel about boundaries or any matter of that kind. Otherwise, the Magistrate taking cognizance should make an inquiry himself—Baij Nath v. Raja Ram, 10 A.L.J. 79, 13 Cr.L.J. 704.

be false—Kanchan v. Ram Krishun, 36 Cal. 72. Contra :—Kachi Madar v. Emp, 21 M.L.J. 795, 12 Cr.L.J. 323, where it was held that a preliminary investigation made by a Magistrate under this section was not a judicial proceeding and therefore a person could not be prosecuted for an offence brought to the notice of the Court during such investigation. This ruling is no longer correct.

The Magistrate holding the investigation is not disqualified thereby from afterwards trying the case, when there is nothing to indicate that he initiated or directed the proceedings or took any personal interest in the matter of the complaint presented before him—Anand v. Basu Meah, 24 Cal. 167. The fact that the investigating Magistrate expressed an opinion in submitting the report is no bar to his holding the trial—Bani Madhab v. Rosaraj, 4 C.W.N. 604. But where a Magistrate took an active part in forwarding the police inquiries and collecting evidence against the accused, he is disqualified from trying the accused—Sudhama v. Q. E., 23 Cal. 328. So also, where a Magistrate, during a local investigation, himself discovered the evidence of crime, and collected or ascertained the evidence in support of it, and thereafter directed, recommended or invited the institution of criminal proceedings, it is undesirable that he should try the case—Bhop Singh v. Kermolt, 8 N.L.R. 1, 13 Cr.L.J. 236.

In a recent Patna case it has been held that if a Magistrate sends a cognizable case to the police to investigate under this section, the police officer making the investigation can arrest and sent up a charge sheet. The Magistrate's order under this section does not debar the police from exercising their general powers of arrest and investigation in regard to the same matter as formed the subject of the complaint "It is possible to conceive of cases where, although the Magistrate may distrust a complaint or delay in passing orders, (i.e., postpone the issue of process and order an investigation under this section), the police would be failing in their duty if they did not arrest an offender against whom a cognizable offence has been made out. Much more so would this be the case where the Magistrate after recording the complaint finds that regular police investigation would be more suitable and intentionally keeps the complaint pending in order that the police may exercise their powers of investigation and arrest independently of the Magistrate"—K E v. Bhola Bhagat, 2 Pat. 379 (382, 383), 4 P.L.T. 521, 24 Cr.L.J. 375.

671. Position of the accused—A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to require the presence of the accused at an inquiry or investigation, under sec. 202, into a complaint of which he is empowered to take cognizance under sec. 190 or which has been transferred to him under sec. 192—Appa Rao v. Janakiammal, 49 Mad. 918 (F.B.), 51 M.L.J. 605, 28 Cr.L.J. 129. Magistrates are in the habit of giving a person against whom a charge is formulated at least an option to come before him if he so desires at the earliest stage. Such a procedure is entirely unwarranted by the Code. The object of this section is to prevent accused persons being harassed at all or asked to appear if in the opinion of the Magistrate no prima facie case is made out, and the Code never contemplated that at that stage they should be either asked or permitted to state their cases—Ibid. An accused person is not to be called upon under sec. 202 to appear unless and until the Magistrate has satisfied himself from the complainant and his witnesses that there is a prima facie case against him. It is highly irregular for a Magistrate, when a complaint is put in and sworn to, without hearing the complainant's case or his witnesses, to issue notice to the accused to appear and show cause against the issue of process, hear what the accused has to say, examine any witnesses he wishes to have examined and then decide whether the complaint shall be received or not—Varadarajulu v. Kuppusami, 49 Mad 926, 51 M.L.J. 602, 28 Cr.L.J. 113; Sheikh Meeran v. Ramavelu, 37 Mad 181 (183).

A person complained against does not become an 'accused' person or a 'person against whom any proceedings have been instituted' within the meaning of sec. 340, until it has been decided to issue process against him under Chapter XVII, Sec. 340, therefore, does not entitle him to be represented by a pleader during the preliminary inquiry held under this section—Shaikh Chand v. Mahomed Hanif, 4 N.L.R. 81; Golap Jan v. Bholanath, 38 Cal. 880 (887), or during the proceeding when the Magistrate is considering the report of the local investigation ordered by him—Bala Lal v. Pasupati, 21 C.W.N. 127, 17 Cr.L.J. 396 (397). If he chooses to attend the proceedings he may do so like any other member of the public, but has no locus standi as a party, the purpose of the law being clearly to exclude him until sufficient ground for joining him has been made out by the complainant. Therefore the Magistrate can refuse him permission to cross-examine the complainant's witnesses—Shaikh Chand v. Md. Hanif, 4 N.L.R. 81. See also Chandi Charan v. Manindra, 27 C.W.N. 196, 24 Cr.L.J. 333. The accused has no right to be present when a Magistrate is holding an inquiry under sec. 202. Proceedings under this section are not inter partes, but merely to satisfy the Magistrate whether there is or is not any ground for issuing process. Allowing a legal practitioner to attend the proceedings is only a matter of grace and not of right—Atmaram v. Topandas, 20 S.L.R. 43, 27 Cr.L.J. 494. In a proceeding under this section the Magistrate acts illegally in sending for the accused person and calling for a report from him as to the truth or falsity of a charge preferred against him—Harnarain v. Kariman, 21 Cr.L.J. 621, 5 P.L.J. 61; Baidyanath v. Muspratt, 14 Cal. 141. A preliminary inquiry should not be held in the presence of the person complained against and he should not be allowed to cross-examine the complainant's witnesses—Bhimlal v. Emp., 40 Cal. 444, 17 C.W.N. 290; Ram Manihari v. Raj Kishore, 19 Cr.L.J. 527 (Pat.). When a Magistrate holds an inquiry under this section, he should not hear arguments on behalf of the accused—Bachoo Mia v. Anwar, 30 C.W.N. 312, 26 Cr.L.J. 305. Contra—In Ram Baran v. Mohd Jan, 26 Cr.L.J. 1394, the Patna High Court did not object to the action of the Magistrate in calling the accused to the inquiry; and in Sheikh Akbar v. Prance, 12 Cr.L.J. 207 (Cal.) it was held that the accused should be permitted to watch the proceedings, and his pleader should be allowed to act as amicus curiae. In a recent Bombay case it has been held that the Magistrate may, if he deems it desirable, give opportunity to the accused to appear in the inquiry and state what he has to say about the accusation, and the Magistrate may even accept and consider the documentary evidence which the accused produces—In re Virbhan, 52 Bom 448, 30 Bom.L.R. 642.

Statements made by the person complained against during an inquiry under this section cannot be regarded as having been recorded under sec. 164 or sec. 364. Such person does not stand in the position of an accused person during the inquiry, and such statements cannot be admitted in evidence against him—Sat Narain v. Emp., 32 Cal. 1085

672. Evidence in the inquiry :—The Magistrate conducting the preliminary inquiry need not confine himself to the evidence of the complainant alone, but he may examine such witnesses as he thinks fit—In re Kankuchand, Ratanlal 669. There is nothing in section 202 to prevent the investigating officer from making a full inquiry by obtaining information from the complainant and his witnesses, and the defendant and his witnesses, if any—Debi Bux v. Jutmal, 33 Cal 1282

673. Submission of report :—The officer who conducted the investigation must submit the report of his investigation to the same Magistrate who had originally ordered him to investigate, he is not authorised to submit it to another Magistrate for the purpose of dismissing the complaint and declaring that no offence had in reality been committed—Thakur Singh v. Kirpal, 1918 P.L.R. 53, 19 Cr.L.J. 438.

674. Revision .—If an irregularity in procedure has not resulted in any miscarriage of justice, the High Court will not make an order which can result only in harassment and waste of public time. In a case in which a perfunctory inquiry has been made by the Police and the report considered in a perfunctory manner by the Magistrate, the High Court will interfere and insist on the provisions of this section being strictly enforced. But where the inquiry has been carefully made and carefully considered, the High Court will refuse to re-open the matter—Sheonandan v. Emp., 4 P.L.W. 114, 19 Cr.L.J. 263.

in his judgment no sufficient ground for proceeding. In such case he shall briefly record his reasons for so doing.

This section has been amended by sec. 56 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The word "the investigation or inquiry (if any)" have been substituted recently by the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act II of 1926, for the words 'any investigation or inquiry' occurring in the Amendment of 1923. See Note 677 below.

675. Dismissal of complaint :—Where on a complaint made against several persons the Magistrate proceeded against only one of them and convicted him, but refused to issue process against the others, held that the order of refusal was to all intents and purposes an order of dismissal of complaint against those persons under sec. 203—Girish Chandra v. Emp., 29 Cal. 457; Hari Lal v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 835 (Pat.). Where, on a complaint being filed, the Magistrate called for a police report, and subsequently on a consideration of that report passed the order "Enter mistake of law" and refused to issue processes, held that the order must be regarded as an order dismissing a complaint—Shaik Siddik v. Shaik Chakuri, 17 C.W.N. 451, 14 Cr.L.J. 123, 17 C.L.J. 608. When a Magistrate passes an order under this section, he should say plainly that he dismisses the complaint. The practice of Magistrates passing an order "Notice is discharged" is to be deprecated—In re Virbhan, 52 Bom. 448, 30 Bom.L.R. 642.

An application under Sec. 107 does not fall within the definition of a 'complaint,' and therefore, sec. 202 does not apply to it; but every Magistrate has the inherent power of refusing an application which he finds to be groundless, and so, if he is satisfied after making an inquiry that the apprehension of a breach of the peace complained of does not exist, he can refuse the application under sec. 107, without taking any evidence which the applicant wanted to produce—Shamsuddin v. Ram Dayal, 25 Cr.L.J. 89, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 630.

Dismissal when can be made—This section gives very large powers to the Magistrate to dismiss a complaint without issuing process, but certain conditions are laid down, and those conditions must be strictly fulfilled in making an order under this section. A Magistrate may dismiss a complaint (1) if upon the statement of the complainant reduced to writing under sec. 200 he finds that no offence has been committed, (2) if he distrusts the statement made by the complainant; (3) if he distrusts that statement, but his distrust not being strong enough to warrant him to act upon it, he directs further inquiry as provided by sec. 202 and after considering the result of the investigation he finds there is no sufficient ground for proceeding—Baidyanath v. Muspratt, 14 Cal. 141; In re Ganesh Narain, 13 Bom. 600, Subul Chandra v. Ahadulla, 53 Cal. 606, 30 C.W.N. 546, 27 Cr.L.J. 788.

There can be no dismissal of complaint under sec 203, after process has issued. This section refers to cases falling within Chapter XVI where there has been no issue of process. Where the accused has been summoned to answer a charge, there is a proceeding within the meaning of Chapter XVII and the complaint cannot be dismissed under sec. 203—Q. E. v. Budhumbhar, Ratanlal 544. Even an order directing withdrawal of process issued against the accused will not amount to an order of dismissal of complaint—Panchoo v Khoosdel, 12 C W N. 68.

Who can dismiss complaint—The complaint can be dismissed either by the Magistrate who took cognizance of it, or by the Magistrate to whom it was transferred for local investigation. The District Magistrate has no power to pass any order for dismissal of complaint, unless he first removes the case to his own file—Mrinal Kanti Ghosh v. Emp., 6 C.W N 843. When a case has been transferred to a subordinate Magistrate and is pending on his file, the District Magistrate has no power to pass an order of dismissal of complaint—Sheikh Kutab Ali v Emp., 3 C.W N 490. Unless he withdraws the case to his own file, the District Magistrate cannot pass any orders in the case, and the only person who can deal with the case is the subordinate Magistrate—Q v Beluas, 12 W R 33. A complaint was originally made before a Deputy Magistrate. The Deputy Magistrate sent the case to the District Magistrate with a view to the Dt. Magistrate transferring it to another Court, but the Dt Magistrate instead of transferring the case to another Court, examined the record, and came to the conclusion that the complaint was wholly without foundation, and so he dismissed it; held that the District Magistrate was sufficiently seized of the case and the order passed by him was not without jurisdiction—Govind v. Ram Das, 25 Cr.L J 555, A I R 1924 All. 686.

The village Munsiff is not a recognised tribunal under this Code, and the dismissal of a complaint by a village Munsiff does not fall under this section—Rama Naidu, 53 M.L J. 102, 28 Cr L J 507.

Duty of Magistrate before dismissal—Before a Magistrate can dismiss a complaint, he must, according to the words of this section, examine the complainant and consider the result of the investigation (if any) made under sec. 202. In other words, a Magistrate cannot dismiss a complaint without complying with the provisions of law as laid down in sections 200 and 202. Where there was no previous local investigation ordered under sec. 202 nor any examination of the complainant as directed by sec 200, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to dismiss the complaint under this section—Lokanath v. Sanyasi, 30 Cal. 923.

If a Magistrate holds an inquiry under sec. 202, he should not dismiss the complaint without giving the complainant an opportunity to adduce evidence in support of his case—Dr Sandyal v Kunjeswar, 16 C W N 143. It is improper for a Magistrate to dismiss a complaint while sitting in his private room, and without giving the complainant or his pleader an opportunity of being heard—Fani Bhushan v. Kemp, 10 C W N 1086.

676. Examination of complainant—Before dismissing complaint, the Magistrate is bound to examine the complainant. Until has at least examined the complainant, he is not in a position to exercise the discretionary power to issue process or to dismiss the complaint. Therefore, an order dismissing the complaint without examining the complainant is illegal—In re Ningappa, 48 Bom. 360; In re Ganesh Narain, 13 Bom 590. A complainant who challenges the police investigation must be examined on oath before the complaint is dismissed and the accused discharged—Kartik Pathak v. Emp., 2 P L T. 142

When a deposition in the shape of a complaint is made orally or in writing and is sworn to, the requirements of this section as regards examination of complainant are fulfilled—Q. E. v. Murphy, 9 All 666, Thakoor Das v. Bhagvan Das, 4 Bom L R 609. But merely cross-examining the complainant or taking the deposition of certain witnesses in the preliminary inquiry held under sec. 159 is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—Lokenath v Sanyasi, 30 Cal. 923

Where a Magistrate examined the complainant and only one of his witnesses, and without examining the rest of the witnesses dismissed the complaint, it was held that the entire evidence for the prosecution should have been received by the Magistrate unless for some very strong reasons he considered the evidence unnecessary—Gokul Chand v. Mahabir, 11 A.L.J 451, 14 Cr.L.J. 412

In the case of a complaint of a serious offence like murder, the dismissal of the case without any judicial examination of the complainant or his witnesses is extremely illegal—Fuzlar Rahman v. Abidhar, 23 C W N 392, 20 Cr L J 175, 29 C.L.J. 50.

There is nothing in this section to show that the Magistrate must at once consider the complaint, and may not take time to consider the complaint-petition and the examination on oath—Nawazi v Jadu, 19 Cr L.J 228 (Pat.)

677. "Investigation or inquiry (if any)" :—This section empowers a Magistrate to dismiss the complaint without any investigation under sec. 202, if after examining the complainant he considers there is no sufficient ground for proceeding—Nawazi v Jadu Dhanuk, 19 Cr.L.J 228 (Pat.). The Amendment of 1923 contained the words "any investigation or inquiry" and the words 'if any' were omitted. This led to the view that an investigation or inquiry under sec 202 was compulsory before dismissing a case under sec 203. Hence the recent amendment made in 1926 in which the words 'if any' have been restored. "The Calcutta High Court in a recent decision (in the case of Srish Chandra Bose v. Madan Lal Surena) has held that under sec. 203 an investigation or an inquiry under sec 202 is necessary in all cases, because the words 'if any' have been omitted from Sec 203 after the words 'investigation or inquiry' No such change was intended by the amendment made by Act XVIII of 1923, and the proposed addition is to make this matter clear"—Statement of objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925 Part V, p. 215). See also Dukhiram v. Jamuna, 6 P L T. 727, 26 Cr.L.J. 921, A I R. 1925 Pat. 704

Where an investigation has been ordered under sec. 202, the Magistrate is not bound, after receipt of the report of such investigation, to examine any witnesses or hold any inquiry before he dismisses the complaint. It is sufficient that he takes into consideration the result of the investigation arrived at by the subordinate officer—Munshi Mian v. Emp., 19 Cr.L.J. 126 (Patna).

678. Grounds of dismissal—A complaint can be dismissed if the Magistrate thinks that there is not a sufficient ground for proceeding. The expression "sufficient ground" in this section points exclusively to the facts which the complainant brings to the knowledge of the Magistrate and to their establishing a prima facie case against the accused. In exercising his discretionary power of summary dismissal of complaint, the Magistrate should not allow himself to be influenced by considerations altogether apart from the facts adduced by the complainant in support of the charge nor by a consideration of the motive by which the complainant is actuated. What he has to consider is whether there is a prima facie evidence of a criminal offence which in his judgment calls upon the alleged offender to answer—In re Ganesh, 13 Bom 590. The decision whether there is sufficient ground must be reached by the exercise of discretion based upon judicial considerations. That the Magistrate considered the probable result of the proceeding undesirable or the motives and conduct of the complainant discreditable, are not relevant considerations—Ganga v. Samarapathi, 38 Mad. 512. In the absence of any finding that the complaint was false or unsustainable on the evidence likely to be available, the passing of an order of dismissal under this section constitutes an irregularity with which the High Court can interfere in revision—Ganga Reddi v. Samarapathi, 38 Mad 512, 25 M.L.J. 510, 14 Cr.L.J. 633.

The reasons for dismissing a complaint should be based on inference of facts arising from or disclosed by (1) the complaint, (2) the examination of the complainant, and (3) the investigation, if any, made under Sec. 202. This provides a wide field. Anything outside it is extra-judicial and must be discarded—Mustafa v. Motilal, 9 Bom L.R. 742.

A Magistrate ought to dismiss a complaint where the subordinate Magistrate to whom the case was made over for inquiry and report under sec. 202 held an elaborate inquiry, examined a number of witnesses and submitted a report that there was no case against the accused. In such a case the trying Magistrate acts wrongly in disregarding the report and ordering issue of summons against the accused—Abdullah v. Emp. 40 Cal. 854 (1857).

What are not proper grounds of dismissal—If the allegations contained in the complaint disclose a criminal offence, a Magistrate should not dismiss the complaint simply because the case is one in which a civil remedy is obtainable.—Koshal Singh v. Toolshee, 10 W.R. 40. A complaint cannot be dismissed on the ground that the entertainment of the complaint would encourage hundreds of such complaints and would stir up old religious feelings of animosity between the Hindus and Mussalmans.

—Q. E. v. Ram Chandra, Ratanlal 562, or on the ground that a more responsible person ought to have preferred the complaint—Boodhoo v Ram Dayal, 18 W.R. 55; or on the ground that the complainant is a man of low caste, and the alleged offence is theft of a goat which is merely a harm under sec 95 I. P. C. rather than an offence—Q. v. Pochun, 2 W.R. 35; or on the ground that the complaint is actuated by a malicious feeling and that the alleged offence was committed six years ago, and that if the act of the accused was held criminal, a large part of the population would go to jail—Q. E. v. Manji, Ratanlal 549; or on the ground that the complainant had no personal knowledge of the facts alleged in the complaint (in such a case the Magistrate should allow the complainant to bring forward evidence to prove those facts)—In re Kankuchand, Ratanlal 669, or on the ground that the person complained against has been exonerated in a previous departmental inquiry into the facts alleged in the complaint—Ratia v. Ahsan, 1887 P.R. 33.

679. Recording reasons:—The Magistrate is bound to record his reasons for dismissing the complaint, for if that is not done, it would be impossible for the High Court to consider whether the discretion vested in the Magistrate under this section has been properly exercised or not—Baidyanath v. Muspratt, 14 Cal. 141; Kartik Pathak v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 142; Harnandan v. Atul, 7 P.L.T. 481, 26 Cr.L.J. 1502. An order of a Magistrate dismissing a complaint under this section without recording any reasons for dismissal but merely stating that he agrees with the police report, is improper and will be set aside—Ahmed v. Ameena, 7 M.L.T. 175, 11 Cr.L.J. 331.

The words in this section are "he shall record"; i.e., the provisions of this section are imperative, and a failure to record reasons is a direct disobedience of law and not a mere irregularity—Maniruddin v. Abdul Rauf, 40 Cal. 41 (43). Where a Magistrate did not record reasons for dismissing a complaint, but directed that the complainant should be prosecuted under sec. 211 I. P. Code, held that the order of dismissal was without jurisdiction and altogether bad, that there must be a further inquiry, and that there cannot be any proceeding under sec. 211 I. P. Code until such further inquiry has been made—Maniruddin v. Abdul Rauf, 40 Cal. 41 (44), 13 Cr.L.J. 482.

680. Effect of dismissal—A dismissal of a complaint after hearing the complainant and after considering the result of an investigation ordered under sec. 202 amounts to a legal determination of the complaint, and the complainant can be prosecuted for making a false charge under sec. 211 I. P. C.—Surya v. K. E., 6 C.W.N. 295. Until a complaint is dismissed under this section or is otherwise disposed of, no proceedings can be taken under sec. 211 I. P. C. against the complainant—Gunamony v. Q. E., 3 C.W.N. 758, followed in Gali Mandal v. Emp., 4 C.L.J. 88. Where a complaint has been illegally dismissed (e.g. without examining the complainant), the complainant cannot be prosecuted under sec. 182 or 211 I. P. C. for bringing a false charge—In re Ningappa, 48 Bom. 360, 26 Bom.L.R. 183; Mahadeo v. Q. E., 27 Cal. 921; Aly Mohd. v. Emp., 1912 P.R. 2; Ram Sarup v. K. E., 4 O.C. 127.

When a complaint has been dismissed under this section, before the issue of process to the accused, no compensation to the accused (sec. 250) can be awarded—Azam v. Mir Abdulla, 1897 P.R. 14; Harphul v. Manku, 1906 P.R. 3. It can be awarded only when the accused being summoned to attend Court is discharged or acquitted, and the complaint is found to be frivolous or vexatious—Har Phul v. Manku, 1906 P.R. 3.

So also, no suit for malicious prosecution will lie against the complainant when the complaint is dismissed under this section, because there has been no prosecution of the accused. Prosecution commences only after the issue of process, and not where the complaint has been dismissed without any issue of process—Sheik Meezan Saib v. Ratnavelu, 25 M.L.J. 1, 21 I.C. 703.

681. Power to rehear complaint or hear fresh complaint :—A dismissal under this section is a dismissal without a trial; it is therefore open to a Magistrate to rehear a complaint which he has dismissed under sec. 203, or to hear a fresh complaint, though the order of dismissal has not been set aside by a higher Court—Emp v. Chinna Kaliappa, 29 Mad 126 (F.B.); Subbareddi v. Kamal, 16 Cr.L.J. 814 (Mad.); Q. E. v. Dolegobind, 28 Cal 211, Q. E. v. Puran, 9 All 85; Jyotindra v. Hemchandra, 36 Cal. 415, Makhatambi v. Hassan Ali, 1 N.L.R. 18, Emp., v Keyner, 36 All. 53, Bhagwan v. Dibia, 5 A.L.J. 137, Emp v. Mehrban, 29 All 7, Jai Kishen v. Kalia, 21 Cr.L.J. 379 (All); Uttam Chand v. Emp., 1902 P.R. 9, Emp v. Kuru, 1911 P.R. 10, 12 Cr.L.J. 364, 11 I.C. 132, K. E. v. Nga Pu, 2 L.B.R. 27 (F.B.). (Contra—Kamal Chandra v. Gour Chand, 24 Cal 286; Niratan v. Jogesh, 23 Cal. 983, Mahomed Abdul v. Pandu, 28 Mad. 255, where a fresh complaint was held to be barred). Where a Magistrate dismisses a complaint under this section, it is open to him at a later stage to issue summons and revive the proceedings. The fact that in the meanwhile the Sessions Judge has in revision refused to direct further inquiry is immaterial—Janakdhari v. Emp., 8 Pat. 537, 1929 Cr.C. 353, Jyotindra v. Hemchandra, 36 Cal 415. In Jaswa v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 215, it has been held that the Magistrate cannot reopen the same case, but there is no bar to the entertainment of a second complaint on the same facts.

Where a first complaint has been dismissed under sec. 259, it is not a sufficient ground for refusing to entertain a second complaint and dismissing it again under sec. 203—Bulchand v. Chandoomal, 8 S.L.R. 196, 16 Cr.L.J. 174.

When a Magistrate has dismissed a complaint, his successor or any other Magistrate can entertain a fresh complaint on the same facts—Ram Bharos v. Baban, 36 All. 129, 15 Cr.L.J. 158; Subbareddi v. Kamal, 16 Cr.L.J. 814 (Mad.); Byoo v. K. E., 2 P.L.J. 34 (35), 18 Cr.L.J. 296; Sheogovind v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 293; In re Mahadco, 27 Bom. L.R. 352, 26 Cr.L.J. 991. But in Q. E. v. Adam Khan, 22 All 106, and Tirathbai v. Sugribai, 23 S.L.R. 43, 29 Cr.L.J. 1097 (1098), it has been held that a Magistrate of co-ordinate authority cannot entertain a fresh complaint on the same facts or re-open the old complaint as if it were an appeal or matter of revision. In Inderjit v. Thakur Sing, 2 C.W.N. 290, it is laid down that a complaint once dismissed by a Magistrate cannot be revived by his successor-in-office.

But although a previous order dismissing the complaint or discharging the accused is no bar to the institution of a fresh case against the same accused, still a new complaint on the same facts should not be entertained, unless new facts, which could not with reasonable diligence have been brought forward in the previous proceedings, would be adduced, or unless there was some manifest error or manifest miscarriage of justice in the previous proceedings—U Shwe v Ma Sein, 26 Cr.L.J. 284, A L.R. 1925 Rang 114

682. Further inquiry.—Where a complaint has been dismissed under this section, the High Court or Sessions Judge may direct further inquiry. See sec 436. Where a further inquiry having been ordered under sec. 436, the Magistrate, after taking some evidence, again dismissed the complaint under sec. 203, and the Sessions Judge, being moved, was of opinion that the Magistrate could not dismiss the complaint under sec. 203 for the second time but was bound to issue process against the accused, held that the Sessions Judge's view was wrong and the second order of dismissal by the Magistrate was perfectly legal—Nibaran Chandra v. Sital Chandra, 25 C W N. 312 But see Birj Kishore v Gopal Rai, 11 C W.N. 316

It has been held in some Calcutta cases that if an order of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused is passed by a Presidency Magistrate, the High Court has no power to direct further inquiry under any of the provisions of this Code. Sec 436 does not apply to orders of dismissal or discharge passed by a Presidency Magistrate; sec. 439 confers on a High Court all the powers of an Appellate Court under sec. 423 but that section does not enable a Court of Appeal to direct that further inquiry be made into a case in which an order of dismissal or discharge may have been passed, but it confers a power to direct further inquiry only in respect of a case of an appeal from an order of acquittal. Hence it follows that the High Court cannot order further inquiry under this Code after discharge or dismissal of complaint by a Presidency Magistrate; but the High Court can do so only under sec 15 of the Charter Act. And its powers of interference under the Charter Act are very limited. It cannot interfere on the ground of any error of law but only on a ground affecting jurisdiction i.e., where the subordinate Court refused or failed to exercise jurisdiction or erred in the exercise of its jurisdiction—Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126 (129); Debi Bux v Jufmal, 33 Cal. 1282; Kedar Nath v. Khetranath, 6 C.L.J. 705 But in several other cases it has been laid down that secs 435 and 439 of this Code confer upon the High Court the power of sending for the records of Presidency Magistrates, and of reversing the order of the Magistrates and ordering a further inquiry in the case of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused—Colville v. Krishito Kishore, 26 Cal. 746; Dwarka Nath v. Beni Madhab, 28 Cal. 652 (F.B.); Malik Pratap v. Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal. 994; and the High Court can direct further inquiry, if there are good reasons for doing so, although no question of jurisdiction arises in the case—Malik Pratap v. Khan Md, 36 Cal. 994.

683. Death of complainant—Effect :—As there is no abatement of a criminal case on the death of the complainant, a fresh complaint on the same facts need not be made but the old complaint must be treated as pending and proceeded with to its disposal—In re Ramasamier, 16 Cr.L.J. 713 (Mad).

CHAPTER XVII.

OF THE COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS BEFORE MAGISTRATES.

204. (1) If in the opinion of a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence there is sufficient ground for proceeding, and the case appears to be one in which, according to the fourth column of the second schedule, a summons should issue in the first instance, he shall issue his summons for the attendance of the accused. If the case appears to be one in which, according to that column, a warrant should issue in the first instance, he may issue a warrant, or, if he thinks fit, a summons, for causing the accused to be brought or to appear at a certain time before such Magistrate or (if he has not jurisdiction himself) some other Magistrate having jurisdiction.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the provisions of Section 90.

(3) When by any law for the time being in force any process-fees or other fees are payable, no process shall be issued until the fees are paid, and if such fees are not paid within a reasonable time, the Magistrate may dismiss the complaint.

685. Magistrate taking cognizance :—Where a joint Magistrate who took cognizance of a case made over the case to a Deputy Magistrate for disposal, the former ceased to have any control over the case. The case having been transferred to the Deputy Magistrate, that officer alone had jurisdiction to deal with an application for summons, until the case was withdrawn from his cognizance. Therefore if he refused to issue process as unnecessary, the Joint Magistrate had no jurisdiction to order for its issue—Ajab Lal v. Emp., 32 Cal 783; Fani Bhusan v. Kemp, 10 C.W.N. 1086

"Offence".—Process can issue only for an offence already committed. It is not competent for the Magistrate to issue process in anticipation of an offence, where there is no complaint against any one. Such a case is for the interference of the Police and not of the Magistrate—In re Fateah, Ratanlal 90 (91).

A neglect to maintain a wife is not an offence; therefore an application for maintenance under sec. 488 should not be dismissed under subsection (3) of this section owing to the applicant's failure to comply with an order for the payment of process fees—In re Ponnammal, 16 Mad. 234.

686. Sufficient ground.—The only condition requisite for the issue of process is that the complainant's deposition must show some sufficient ground for proceeding. Unless the Magistrate is satisfied that there is sufficient ground for proceeding with the complaint or sufficient material to justify the issue of process, he should not issue process—Jogesh v. Abdul, 18 Cr.L.J. 626 (Cal.). Where the complainant who instituted the prosecution had no personal knowledge of the allegations made in the complaint, the Magistrate should satisfy himself upon proper materials that a case had been made out for the issue of process—Thakur Prosad v. Emp., 10 C.W.N. 1090; Chamroo v. Emp., 11 C.W.N. 170.

Under the Cr. P. Code, a wide discretion is given to Magistrates with respect to the grant or refusal of process against accused persons. This discretion should be exercised with caution, and an accused person ought not to be dragged into Court to answer a charge merely because a complaint has been lodged against him. In determining whether process ought to issue, a Magistrate must proceed according to the provisions of the Code, and if, after carrying out the instructions therein contained, he is of opinion upon the materials before him that a prima facie case has been made out, he ought to issue process, and in such circumstances he is not entitled to refuse to issue process merely because he thinks that it is unlikely that the proceedings will result in a conviction. If the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the facts alleged by the complainant disclose an offence, and in his opinion there is no ground for distrusting the complainant, the Magistrate would not be justified in refusing the issue of process merely because some other person has been tried and acquitted upon the same charge and upon the same facts, for inter alia it may be that at the previous trial the Magistrate has not correctly appraised the value of evidence or for some other reason the order of acquittal cannot be supported—Sabal Chandra v. Ahadulla, 53 Cal. 606, 30 C.W.N. 546, 27 Cr.L.J. 788.

In exercising the discretion under this section as to whether a process should issue, the Magistrate must be guided by his own independent judgment and not by the judgment of others, e.g. an expression of opinion by the Police—Rangasawmy v. Sabapathi, 4 M.H.C.R. 162.

687. Issue of process :—Proceedings are said to commence under this chapter when processes are issued against the accused; after the issue of process, a complaint cannot be dismissed under sec. 203—Q. E. v. Budhunbhai, Ratanlal 544. See Note 675 under sec. 203.

If the Magistrate issues a warrant in a case in which he ought to have issued a summons, the error of the Magistrate is not a ground for questioning the proceedings—Aneel v. Ramsundar, 1 W.R. 16. Under such circumstances the Magistrate can cancel the warrant and issue summons instead—Imp. v. Janat, 1 S.L.R. 69, 8 Cr.L.J. 187, Crown v. Zali Khan, 7 S.L.R. 40, 14 Cr.L.J. 604.

An order directing issue of process is not a judgment within the meaning of sec. 369, and therefore a Magistrate making the order of issue of process can rescind the order on sufficient grounds—Lalit Mohan v. Nani Lal, 27 C.W.N. 651, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 662.

Refusal to issue process—Where the Police report is true, and the Magistrate has directed the case to be entered as such, he cannot refuse to issue process simply because there is no chance of conviction and no useful purpose would be served by an inquiry, the complainant is entitled to a process against the accused and for the attendance of his witnesses—Kuldip v. Budhan, 29 Cal 410.

When from the examination of the complainant, it appears that there is reason for the issue of process against all the accused, the Magistrate exercises a wrong discretion in issuing process against some of the accused and in refusing to issue process against the others. He must issue process against all—Bishan Dayal v. Chedi Khan, 4 C.W.N. 560.

But where two counter complainants preferred complaints before a Magistrate, and he issued process in one case and postponed the issue of process in the counter case until after the disposal of the first case, held that the action of the Magistrate was not illegal—Lalji v. Naurangli, 3 P.L.T. 764, 24 Cr.L.J. 120, A.I.R. 1922 Pat 618.

688. Sub-sec. (3)—Process fee .—An application for maintenance under sec 488 cannot be dismissed for default to pay process-fee. See In re Ponnammal, 16 Mad 234 cited in Note 685 above.

If the case is adjourned, the witnesses should be told to appear on the adjourned date, and the party should not be required to repeatedly summon his witnesses on payment of fresh process-fees. A dismissal of complaint on failure to pay such fees, in such a case, is not proper—Balmakund v. Nanak Chand, 1912 P.L.R. 60, 13 Cr.L.J. 176.

205. (1) Whenever a Magistrate issues a summons,

Magistrate may dispense with personal attendance of accused.

he may, if he sees reason so to do, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused, and permit him to appear by his pleader.

(2) But the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case, may, in his discretion, at any stage of the proceedings, direct the personal attendance of the accused, and, if necessary, enforce such attendance in manner hereinbefore provided.

689. Scope of section :—Although this section speaks of issue of summons, it is not confined to summons cases only. If in a warrant case, the Magistrate issues a summons instead of a warrant to a pardanashin lady he can dispense with her personal attendance—Basumati v. Budhram, 21 Cal. 588, Prem Kuar v. Mai Sham, 1908 P.W.R. 20, 8 Cr.L.J. 454.

Again, the section applies only where a summons has been issued to the accused, if however, a warrant is issued against him, his personal attendance cannot be dispensed with, unless he is too ill to attend the Court—Sashi Mukhi v. Asutosh, 13 C.W.N. cl. In a Patna case, where the accused had been arrested by warrant, the High Court held that it was illegal to dispense with his personal appearance and to allow him to be represented by a pleader even though he was ill—Abdul Hamid v. K. E., 2 Pat. 793, 4 P.L.T. 648, 24 Cr.L.J. 872. Where the accused absconded after the charge had been framed against him, and he was convicted and sentenced in his absence, held that as in this case a warrant had been issued for his arrest in the first instance, the Magistrate could not dispense with his personal attendance—Crown v. Sardar, 1917 P.R. 36, 18 Cr.L.J. 975.

690. Pardanashin lady :—A pardanashin lady cannot as of right claim exemption from personal attendance in Court, and the Magistrate cannot dispense with her appearance simply because she is a pardanashin lady—In re Faridunnissa, 5 All. 92. But in a summons case, the Magistrate should use his discretion under this section by dispensing with her personal attendance and allowing her to appear by a pleader, until he has before him clear, direct and prima facie proof of an offence committed by her—In re Rahim Bibi, 6 All. 59; Prem Kuar v. Maisham, 1908 P.W.R. 20, 8 Cr.L.J. 454, Habboo v. Crown, 1909 P.W.R. 5; Crown v. Bachal, 7 S.L.R. 161, 15 Cr.L.J. 539, Crown v. Zulukhan, 7 S.L.R. 40, 14 Cr.L.J. 604. If a woman is admitted to be a pardah lady, the Magistrate should not refuse to excuse her personal attendance on the ground that other ladies belonging to the same class that observed pardah had appeared in Court out of their own free will—Tirbeni v. Bhagwati, 28 Cr.L.J. 94 (All). If he refuses, the High Court will interfere, although ordinarily such matters are left to the discretion of the Magistrate—Ibid. In a Sessions case she may be permitted to appear by a pleader before the committing Magistrate as well as before the Sessions Court, but she will have to appear before that Court to hear the sentence in case of conviction—Raj Rajeswari v. K. E., 17 C.W.N. 1248; In re Kandamani, 45 Mad. 359, 42 M.L.J. 337, 23 Cr.L.J. 266.

691. Appearance by pleader:—On service of summons the accused need not personally attend but may appear by a pleader. Such appearance is a valid appearance, and the Magistrate cannot prosecute the accused under section 174 I. P. C. for non-appearance (disobedience to summons)—Durga Das v. Umesh Chandra, 27 Cal. 985; nor can the Magistrate proceed ex parte and decide the case—Tarince Churn v. Municipal Commissioner, 24 W.R. 25. If, however, the Magistrate requires personal attendance, he should direct such appearance on a fixed date, and in default, may issue a warrant—Durga Das v. Umesh, 27 Cal. 985. But the discretion under this section should be liberally exercised—Emp. v. Mahomed, 3 S.L.R. 167, 4 I.C. 1152.

Under sec. 205, whenever a Magistrate issues a summons, he may, if he sees reason to do so, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused, and permit him to appear by his pleader. A Magistrate can, therefore, at the time of issuing a summons direct that the personal attendance of the accused shall be dispensed with. He can also do this after the issue of summons, and if the person summoned takes the risk of not attending in person and sends a pleader to represent him, provided the Magistrate gives him the necessary permission under this section, the Code does allow representation of the accused by his pleader. In a case where the Court has allowed an accused person to appear by a pleader, it must be taken that such appearance involves the performance of all acts that devolve upon the accused in the course of the trial, unless the Magistrate thinks it necessary or desirable that the accused himself should be present for any particular purpose. Therefore, under secs. 242 and 243, the pleader of the accused may make the necessary answers and plead guilty or not guilty on his behalf—Dorab Shah v. Emp., 50 Bom. 250, 28 Bom. L.R. 102, 27 Cr.L.J. 440. The pleader appearing for the accused may perform all the acts which devolve upon the accused in the course of the trial; thus, he can answer the questions put to him by the Court in his examination under sec. 342; he can plead or refuse to plead to a charge under sec. 255—Crown v. Jamal Khatun, 6 S.L.R. 206, 14 Cr.L.J. 272.

Although the Magistrate can, under sub-section (2), revoke the permission to appear by pleader and enforce the personal attendance of the accused, still the Magistrate ought not to do so in a trivial case (e.g. a case under the Income Tax Act) and on a trivial ground, e.g. merely on the ground that the accused objects to the case being tried by that Magistrate and wants it to be transferred to some other Magistrate—Dwijendra v. Emp., 38 C.L.J. 9, 24 Cr.L.J. 902.

Appearance by other persons:—Where the accused was represented by her mother-in-law and the Magistrate proceeded with the case and convicted the accused, the conviction was set aside by the High Court, as there was no proper representation of the accused in the case—Q. E. v. Vithi, Ratanlal 205; but where in an extremely trivial case, the accused was represented by her father-in-law and convicted, the High Court refused to interfere—Q. E. v. Chandrabhaga, Ratanlal 206.

Where an accused person is permitted to appear by pleader, it is open to the accused to appoint a private person to appear in his stead, under sec. 4 (r), and it is equally open to the Court to permit such private person to represent the accused. Where this is allowed, there should be clearly on record something (e.g. power of attorney) to show that the private person who represents the accused has been duly appointed by him, just as an ordinary pleader has to file a vakalatnama. The Court should also note on the record that he has given the requisite permission to such person to represent the accused, and should not leave the matter to mere implication (The omission to record it is, however, a mere irregularity). Where there is no power of attorney or letter of authority to show that a person has been appointed by an accused person to appear and plead on his behalf, the Court is not entitled to accept a plea of guilty put forward by such person and to convict the accused upon such plea—Dorabshah v. Emp., 50 Bom. 250, 28 Bom.L.R. 102, 27 Cr.L.J. 440.

CHAPTER XVIII.

OF INQUIRY INTO CASES TRIABLE BY THE COURT OF SESSION OR HIGH COURT.

692. Object of preliminary inquiry:—The object of the law in requiring an inquiry before a trial in the Court of Session is to prevent the commitment of cases in which there is no reasonable ground for conviction. This provision of law, while it saves the accused persons from detention in custody and prolonged anxiety of undergoing trials for offences not brought home to them, also saves the time of the Court of Session from being wasted over cases in which the charge is obviously not supported by such evidence as would support a conviction—Lachman v. Juala, 5 All. 161. A preliminary inquiry also affords the accused an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the circumstances of the offences imputed to him and enables him to make his defence—Rama Varma v. Q., 3 Mad. 351.

No accused can be committed to the Sessions without a preliminary inquiry under this chapter—Emp. v. Bai Mahalaxmi, 17 Bom.L.R. 910, 16 Cr.L.J. 747.

206. (1) [] Any Presidency Magistrate,

Power to commit for trial.

District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class, or any Magistrate (not being a Magistrate of the third class) empowered in this behalf by the Local Government may commit any person for trial to the Court of Session or High Court for any offence triable by such Court.

(2) But, save as herein otherwise provided, no person triable by the Court of Session shall be committed for trial to the High Court.

Change :—The words "Subject to the provision of sec. 443" occurring in the old section at the very beginning have been omitted by section 9 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XII of 1923), because the old section 443 which specified the Magistrates competent to inquire into or try a charge against an European British subject has now been repealed and substituted by an entirely new section. See Chapter XXXIII.

The italicised words have been added by sec. 57 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). "This amendment is on the same lines as that of section 144 (1) We do not think that the powers under this section should be granted to a Magistrate of the third class"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

693. Committal by Magistrate without jurisdiction :—Where the committing Magistrate has authority to commit but has no territorial jurisdiction in the place where the offence is committed, the irregularity will be cured by sec. 531 unless it has occasioned a failure of justice—Rayan Kuti v Emp, 26 Mad. 640; Q. E. v. Abbi Reddi, 17 Mad 402. In Emp v Alim Mandal, 11 C.L.R. 55, Emp. v. Tika Singh, 3 All 251 and Q. E. v. Lagma, Ratanlal 922 (923) such a committal was held to be void.

Committal to wrong sessions —See Note 549 under sec. 177.

694. "Offence triable by such Court" :—The procedure to be adopted under this chapter is not confined to cases exclusively triable by the Court of Session, but is also applicable to cases which, in the opinion of the Magistrate concerned, ought to be tried by such Court—Ramsundar v. Nirodam, 6 All. 477, as, for instance, cases in which the Magistrate cannot inflict adequate punishment upon the accused—Q E v. Kayemulla, 24 Cal. 429; K. E. v Pema Ranchod, 4 Bom. L.R 85 In such cases the Magistrate must state his grounds in the order of commitment, so as to enable the High Court in revision to judge whether he has exercised a proper discretion—Emp v. Mahamad Khan, 11 Bom L.R. 18, 9 Cr.L.J. 163, 1 I.C. 104; Diwani Chand v. Crown, 8 S L.R 23, 15 Cr.L.J. 664.

If the case is one which the Magistrate can try and in which he can inflict adequate punishment, he cannot commit it to the Sessions, but should try it himself—Diwani Chand v. Crown, 8 S L.R 23, Emp v. Asha Bhatil, 15 Bom. L.R 998, K E v Dharam Singh. 3 A L J 14, Emp v. Ram Jatan, 21 A.L.J 420

If the offence is one triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Magistrate is bound either to discharge the accused or commit him for trial, but he cannot make over the case for trial to a Deputy Commissioner with special powers under sec. 30—Amir Khan v. K. E., 7 C.W.N. 457; nor can he try it himself—Q. E. v. Bhikhi, Ram Lal 953.

Where a Magistrate is inquiring into a case which is triable both by the Court of Session and by himself, he has a discretion to commit the case to the Court of Session or to try it himself—B. N. Ry. Co. v. Makbul, 7 P.L.T. 343, 27 Cr.L.J. 313.

It is illegal to commit summons cases to the Sessions—K. E. v. Dharam Singh, 3 A.L.J. 14.

207. The following procedure shall be adopted in Procedure in inquiries inquiries before Magistrates where preparatory to com- the case is triable exclusively by a mitment, Court of Session or High Court, or, in the opinion of the Magistrate, ought to be tried by such Court.

695. "Ought to be tried" :—The words "ought to be tried" in this section and sec. 347, must be read with sec. 254. A case which ought to be tried by the Court of Session is one which the Magistrate is not competent to try or one in which, in his opinion, adequate punishment cannot be inflicted by him—K. E. v. Pema, 4 Bom. L.R. 65; Q. E. v. Abdul Rahman, 16 Bom. 580; Emp. v. Behari, 1886 A.W.N. 258; Emp. v. Hanuman, 20 Cr L J. 97 (Nag.); Imp. v. Ismail, 11 S.L.R. 79; Diwanichand v. Crown, 8 S.L.R. 23; Q. E. v. Kayemulla, 24 Cal. 429. See also Emp. v. Jagmohan, 6 A.L.J. 989, Emp. v. Bindeshri, 41 All. 454. If the case is one which he has jurisdiction to dispose of, i.e. if he can inflict adequate punishment, he should not send up the case for trial to the Court of Session—Diwanichand v. Crown, 8 S.L.R. 23, 15 Cr.L.J. 664, K. E. v. Dharam Singh, 3 A.L.J. 14; Emp. v. Asha Bhatti, 15 Bom. L.R. 998, 14 Cr L J. 657; if he can try it himself, he should not commit the case on the sole ground that the accused had been committed in another case—Emp. v. Hanuman, 20 Cr.L.J. 97 (Nag.). But in Crown v. Ali, 1917 P R 13 and Crown v. Bhagavathi, 42 Mad 83 (dissenting from the above cases) it has been held that the incompetency of the Magistrate to try the case or to pass adequate sentence is not the only ground for committal. The Magistrate may commit for any other sufficient reason. Thus, where the Magistrate committed certain persons to the Sessions on charges under sec. 147 I. P. C., not because he could not pass adequate punishment but because other persons on the other side have been committed to the Court of Session on charges under secs. 304, 325, 148 and 149 I P C., it was held that the committal was not illegal—Crown v. Ali, 1917 P.R. 13, 18 Cr.L.J. 524

208. (1) The Magistrate shall, when the accused

Taking of evidence appears or is brought before him, produced. proceed to hear the complainant
 (if any), and take in manner hereinafter provided all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution or in behalf of the accused, or as may be called for by the Magistrate.

(2) The accused shall be at liberty to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution, and in such case the prosecutor may re-examine them.

(3) If the complainant or officer conducting the prosecution, or the accused, applies to the Magistrate to issue process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of any document or thing, the Magistrate shall issue such process unless, for reasons to be recorded, he deems it unnecessary to do so.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to require a Presidency Magistrate to record his reasons.

696. Remand of accused before taking evidence :—

A person arrested under a warrant should be brought promptly before the Magistrate, and the Magistrate has then no authority to further detain him in custody or remand him to prison, without sufficient cause—Abdul Kadir v. Magistrate, 20 W.R. 23 If from the absence of the witness or from any reasonable cause, it becomes necessary or advisable to defer the inquiry, the Magistrate instead of immediately examining the complainant and his witnesses, as required by this section, may remand the accused person. If there is some evidence available and further evidence is forthcoming, it may be desirable to postpone the inquiry for a short period in order that when commenced it may be continuous. But the fact that there is or may be a great body of evidence forthcoming against the accused, is not a ground of detention for an inordinate period—Manikam v. Q., 8 Mad. 63. Similarly, where there is no evidence at all to begin with, a Magistrate will not be justified in remanding the prisoner, in the expectation that evidence might turn up—Q v. Purna Chandra, 4 B L R App 1.

697. Taking evidence produced :—

A commitment made without taking any evidence on a preliminary inquiry is illegal—Reg. v. Sita, Ratanlal 100 (101). Under this section it is the duty of the Magistrate to take all evidence tendered by both sides before framing a charge—Crown v. Po Nyan, 1 L B.R. 348 In every inquiry into a Sessions case, it is the duty of the committing Magistrate to make a full and careful inquiry and to record the whole evidence in the case. He should do so even when the accused has made a confession, as confessions are in many cases retracted at the trial—Q. E. v. Mahadu, Ratanlal 842 The Magistrate is bound to take all such evidence as may be produced (1) in support of the prosecution, (2) on behalf of the accused and (3) as may be called for by the Magistrate—Durga Dutt v. K. E., 10 A.L.J. 144, 13 Cr.L.J. 443 A commitment or discharge without examination of all the witnesses for the prosecution is illegal—Q. v. Chinna Vedagiri, 4 Mad. 227; Q. v. Parasurama, 4 Mad. 329. The prosecutor is bound to produce all evidence in his favour directly bearing on the charge, and to call those witnesses who prove their connection with the transaction in question and are able to give important information, unless there is reasonable belief that they will not speak the truth—Emp. v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121. The prosecutor should not refuse to call or put into the witness box any witness for the prosecution merely because the evidence of such witness might in some respects be favourable to the defence—Q. E. v. Durga, 16 All. 84 (F.B.). It is his duty to call all witnesses who can throw any light on the inquiry, whether they support the prosecution theory or the defence theory—1 P.L.T. 161. But if the prosecutor is of opinion that a witness is a false witness or is likely to give false testimony, he is not bound to call that witness—Q. E. v. Durga, 16 All. 84; Q. E. v. Stanyon, 14 All. 521; Q. E. v. Bankhandi, 15 All. 6.

If all the witnesses are not called for the prosecution without sufficient cause, the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution—Emp. v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121. But no corresponding inference will be drawn against the accused for non-production of his witnesses. He may rely on the witnesses for the prosecution or call his own witnesses or meet the charge in any other way he chooses—Emp. v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121, Ashraf Ali v. K. E., 21 C.W.N. 1152, 19 Cr.L.J. 81. In a recent Patna case it has been laid down that if the prosecution did not send up all the material witnesses, it is the duty of the committing Magistrate to call and examine them himself in order to determine which side was speaking the truth—Pershad v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1589 (Pat.).

The Magistrate is competent to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses in order to consider whether the witnesses are credible or not—Emp. v. Bai Mahalaxmi, 17 Bom. L.R. 910, 16 Cr.L.J. 747.

Evidence for the accused:—The Magistrate is not empowered to frame a charge or make an order for commitment until he has taken all such evidence as the accused may produce or is prepared to produce before him for hearing—Q. E. v. Ahmed, 20 All. 264; Emp. v. Muhammed Hadi, 26 All. 177; Jaswant Singh v. Emp., 46 All. 137, 21 A.L.J. 911. Where the committing Magistrate failed to examine the witnesses named by the accused, held that the commitment must be quashed—Emp. v. Nga Khaing, 6 Rang 531. The accused must be given an opportunity of adducing evidence on his behalf, and the Magistrate cannot refuse to take it without recording his reasons—Reg. v. Sita, Ratanlal 100.

698. Sub-section (2)—Right of cross-examination:—

Under this sub-section the accused has a right to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution. Refusal by a Magistrate to allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses during the inquiry is arbitrary and improper. The depositions of the prosecution witnesses during the inquiry are not to be deemed as duly taken if the accused had not an opportunity to cross-examine them, and cannot be treated as evidence at the Sessions trial—Q. E. v. Sagal, 21 Cal. 642.

Under this section the accused has the right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses before the proceedings have reached the stage in which it may be necessary to draw up a charge—In re Surya Narain, 5 C.W.N. 110, Q. E. v. Sagal, 21 Cal. 642; Durga Dutt v. K. E., 10 A.L.J. 144; Baldeo v. K. E., 19 O.C. 239, 18 Cr.L.J. 105. Where an application to cross-examine was made before the charge was framed and before the Magistrate had decided to commit the case to the Court of Session, he was bound to allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses—Jyotsna Nath v. Emp., 51 Cal 442 (445). The proper time for cross-examination of a witness in an inquiry under this chapter is in the ordinary course immediately after the examination-in-chief of that particular witness; and it is not a convenient procedure to allow cross-examination to be reserved until after the examination-in-chief of all the prosecution witnesses has been finished—Durga Dutt v. K. E., 10 A.L.J. 144, 13 Cr.L.J. 443; In re Mohamed Kasim, 14 M.L.T. 532, 15 Cr.L.J. 29, Emp. v. Arnold, 6 L.B.R. 129, 5 Bur. L.T. 239, Tambi v. Emp., 11 Bur.L.T. 144, 19 Cr.L.J. 327. A Magistrate does not act illegally if he asks the accused to cross-examine each prosecution witness after his examination-in-chief, and on the accused's refusal to do so, refuses the accused's prayer for cross-examination after the end of the examination-in-chief of all the prosecution witnesses—Raman v. Emp., 33 C.W.N. 535 (dissenting from Jogendra v. Motilal, 39 Cal 885, 16 C.W.N. 1155, where it has been held that it is open to the Magistrate to allow cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses even after a charge is drawn up) See this last case cited under sec 213 (2).

The ordinary rule is that the witnesses will be examined-in-chief, cross-examined and re-examined, and not to postpone the cross-examination till all the prosecution witnesses are examined-in-chief. A special provision has been made under certain circumstances with respect to trials under warrant cases, entitling the accused to postpone the cross-examination of witnesses till a certain stage. No such provision has been made with respect to an inquiry under Chapter XVIII. The Magistrate, however, has the discretion to allow the accused to postpone the cross-examination of witnesses in suitable circumstances. He cannot, of course, throw any obstacle in the exercise of the liberty by an accused to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution. Thus, where the accused have applied for copies of statements made by prosecution-witnesses to the Police during the investigation, with a view to cross-examine the witnesses, and the Magistrate has ordered such copies to be furnished under the proviso to sec 162 (1), the Magistrate is bound to postpone the cross-examination of the witnesses until such copies are furnished to the accused and to afford the accused an opportunity to cross-examine after receiving such copies. Omission to do so constitutes a direct violation of the statutory provisions of sec. 208 (2) and vitiates the commitment—Saadat Alian v. Emp., 6 Pat 329, 28 Cr.L.J. 709.

Where a case was at first begun as a warrant case and the accused had not cross-examined the witness, because in a warrant case he could reserve his rights to do so until after the framing of the charge, but after hearing the prosecution evidence the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the case was a Sessions case, and thereupon converted the proceeding into one under this chapter, held that the accused had a right to have the witnesses recalled for cross-examination, as he had been prejudiced by the sudden change of procedure—Dhamarcha v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 463, 23 Cr.L.J. 496.

The procedure of this section is to be followed in cases under sec 347. See sec. 347 as now amended 699. Sub-section (3)—Summoning witnesses:—Before committing the accused to the Sessions, the Magistrate should, if so required by the accused, compel the attendance of witnesses for the defence. If he commits an accused to the Sessions without examining the witnesses applied for under this sub-section, the order of commitment is invalid—Emp. v. Muhammad Hadi, 26 All. 177. But the Magistrate has also a discretion to refuse to issue process, if he thinks it unnecessary to do so. He may refuse process where there has been an inordinate delay in asking for it, e.g., when the accused made the application for process not until the charge was about to be drawn up—Sessions Judge v. Kangaya, 36 Mad. 321, 23 M.L.J. 368. The Magistrate may reject the application for summoning witnesses if it is made on the date fixed for passing the order of commitment—Emp. v. Sarath, 42 Cal. 608, 19 C.W.N. 335.

If the Magistrate refuses to issue process he must record his reasons for so doing; if he rejects the application for process without recording reasons, he acts illegally, and the order that is passed subsequently is unsustainable in law—Kanda Raja v. Sangaraja, 24 L.W. 713; In re Sat Narain, 3 All 392. If he records his reasons for exercising his discretion in rejecting the application of the accused to summon the defence witnesses, the order of the Magistrate cannot be held to be illegal and therefore the order of commitment cannot be set aside under sec. 215, as no point of law arises—Saadat Mian v. Emp., 6 Pat. 329, 28 Cr.L.J. 709.

But if the Magistrate issues process for the attendance of witnesses, he is bound to examine them and cannot refuse to do so. Therefore, where on the application of the accused the Magistrate summoned witnesses for the defence and consented to make a local inspection, but under a direction from the Sessions Judge committed the accused for trial without examining those witnesses and without making the local inspection, it was held that the commitment was illegal and should be set aside—Emp. v. Mathura, 1906 A.W.N. 306, 4 Cr.L.J. 451.

The provisions of this clause must be read subject to the provisions of sec. 204 (3). In a private prosecution the complainant is under a legal obligation to pay the process-fees before summons are issued, and the Court has a right to insist upon those fees being paid in advance before issue of process—Ram Dulari v. Mushtaq, 3 Luck. 363, 29 Cr.L.J. 664.

209. (1) When the evidence referred to in Section 208, sub-sections (1) and (3), has been taken, and he has (if necessary) examined the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, such Magistrate shall, if he finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial, record his reasons and discharge him, unless it appears to the Magistrate that such person should be tried before himself or some other Magistrate, in which case he shall proceed accordingly.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case, if, for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless.

700. Examination of the accused :—The object of examining the accused is to enable a Judge to ascertain from time to time, particularly if the accused is undefended, what explanation he may offer regarding any facts stated by a witness appearing against him, so that these facts should not stand unexplained—Ex parte Virabudra, 1 M.H.C.R. 189; Hussein Buksh v. Emp., 6 Cal. 96. But the accused should not be examined for the purpose of making him confess his guilt or admit facts which may go to incriminate him—Q. E. v. Bhairab, 2 C.W.N. 702; In re Chinibash, 1 C.L.R. 436; Q. E. v. Rangi, 10 Mad. 295; Behari Lal, 6 C.L.R. 431. See Note 974, under sec. 342.

Moreover, the accused should not be examined for the purpose of filling up gaps in the evidence for the prosecution—Basanta Kumar v. Q. E. 26 Cal. 49, nor for the purpose of supplementing the evidence where it is deficient—In re Chinibash, 1 C.L.R. 436. The accused must be examined as an accused and not as a witness. Where on a complaint against two persons for an offence, the committing Magistrate inquired into the case against one of them and examined the other as a witness, the second accused could not be committed to the Sessions in the absence of a preliminary inquiry into his case and without examining him as an accused—Emp. v. Bai Mahalaxmi, 17 Bom. L.R. 910, 16 Cr.L.J. 747.

It is not left to the discretion of the committing Magistrate as to whether he should examine the accused or not, he is bound to examine. It is the duty of the Magistrate, before committing the accused, to examine him for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. If the Magistrate commits the accused without examination, the commitment should be quashed if it has occasioned a failure of justice—Q. E. v. Pandara, 23 Mad. 636.

The accused should not be ordered to file any written statement—Chinnasami v. Veeriah, 2 Weir 255, but if he chooses to make any statement the Court should not refuse to allow him to do so—In re Abdul Guffoor, 10 C.L.R. 54.

701. Duty of Magistrate—‘sufficient grounds’ :——The words “sufficient grounds of commitment” are ambiguous, and have led to a difference of opinion among the High Courts as to whether the Magistrate should weigh the evidence and decide whether the conviction of the accused is certain, or whether the Magistrate should merely see if a prima facie case has been made out and there is a possibility of conviction

On the one hand, it has been laid down that in deciding whether there are sufficient grounds for commitment, the Magistrate is to see whether there are credible witnesses to facts which, if believed by a jury, would justify the conviction of the accused, but it is not the duty of the Magistrate to weigh the evidence. If he proceeds to weigh the evidence, to accept some statements and reject others, to deal with probabilities or to draw inferences as to knowledge or intention, and to decide whether the guilt of the accused has or has not been conclusively proved, he is in reality dealing with the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused and is usurping the functions of the trial Court. He must not in any way encroach upon the functions of the jury—National Bank v. Kothandarama, 14 M.L.T. 200, 14 Cr.L.J. 529; Akbar Ali v. Raja Bahadur, 24 A.L.J. 133, 27 Cr.L.J. 2 (4); Chinnammal v. Konda Reddi, 28 Cr.L.J. 120, 38 M.L.T. 135. The Magistrate has not to pronounce a definite judgment on the question whether the accused is guilty or innocent. The only question he has to decide is whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, i.e. whether there is or is not sufficient legal evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion—Fattu v. Fattu, 26 All 564. The words ‘sufficient grounds of commitment’ do not mean sufficient grounds of conviction, but evidence which is sufficient to put the accused on his trial, and such a case arises when credible witnesses make statements which if believed would sustain a conviction. The weighing of their testimony with regard to improbabilities and apparent discrepancies is more properly a function of the Court which is to try the case than that of the committing Magistrate—Q. E. v. Namdev, 11 Bom 372, Emp v. Varjivandas, 27 Bom. 84; Hazara Singh v. Bishen Singh, 1908 P.R. 14. When the Legislature speaks of sufficient grounds for committing for trial, it should not be supposed to have spoken of sufficient grounds of conviction. The intention of the legislature is to make a distinction between grounds of commitment and grounds for conviction. Satisfactory proof of the guilt of the accused is the ground for conviction. Satisfactory evidence to go to trial must be regarded as the ground for committing for trial. What the inquiring Magistrate has got to try and determine is not whether the case has been made out by the prosecution but only whether there is a case for trial. There is always a case for trial when the evidence is of such a nature that the guilt of the accused can be held to be proved or disproved only as the result of the valuing and the weighing of evidence. But if the evidence be of such a nature that no reasonable person and no tribunal, Judge, or jury would ever on the evidence hold the accused guilty, it follows that there is no case for trial, and it is then a case for the enquiring Magistrate to discharge—In re Mania Manicka, 48 Mad. 874, 49 M L.J. 155, 26 Cr.L.J. 1570, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1061. What the Magistrate has to consider is not whether the conviction of the accused is reasonably certain, but whether there is evidence on which a conviction is possible in law—Emp. v. Varjivandas, 27 Bom. 84. Where the prosecution produced a good deal of direct evidence, it is no function of the Magistrate to weigh the evidence, but he should commit the accused person for trial. It is the duty of the Magistrate to commit when the evidence for the prosecution is sufficient to make out a prima facie case against the accused—Maulu v. Crown, 4 Lah. 69, 5 Lah L.J. 276

On the other hand, there are some cases in which it has been laid down that a Magistrate is competent to weigh the evidence and to decide whether it is credible or not. Thus, in an earlier Allahabad case it has been held that the power given to Magistrates under this section extends to weighing of evidence, and the expression "sufficient grounds" must be understood in a wide sense, so as to indicate such evidence as would justify a conviction—Lachman v. Juala, 5 All 161. Notwithstanding direct evidence adduced against the accused, it is not incompetent to a Magistrate to examine the credibility of the evidence to see whether the prosecution case is improbable and the evidence unreliable—Rash Behari v. Emp., 12 C.W.N. 117, In re Bai Parbati, 35 Bom 163, Munshi Mander v. Karu, 6 P.L.T. 146, 25 Cr L.J. 1089, Tinkowru v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 153, 21 Cr L.J. 328, In re Naramban, 15 L.W. 552, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 195; Sultani v. Crown, 1909 P.R. 10, Mir Abdulla v. Crown, 1910 P.L.R. 215, 11 Cr.L.J. 751. The Magistrate has discretion and power to weigh the evidence in order to see whether the case is a fit one for the jury to decide or whether there is no prima facie case for the accused to meet—Thiru Vandaya Trevar v. Emp., 42 M L.J. 49, 23 Cr L.J. 209, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 43. It is open to the committing Magistrate to form his opinion with regard to the credibility of the witnesses called before him; but of course it is not his duty to closely criticize their evidence—Tarapada v. Kalipada, 51 Cal 849 (852), 28 C.W.N. 587. Where charges exclusively triable by a Court of Session are brought before a Magistrate and some evidence is offered in support thereof, it is not his duty in all cases to commit the accused to the Sessions. The Magistrate should exercise his discretion, and after weighing the evidence decide whether or not he should try the case himself—Emp. v. Hari Das, 37 C.L.J. 34, 24 Cr L.J. 674, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 108; In re Kalyan Singh, 21 All. 265

In a recent case the Rangoon High Court has considered all the above cases and has laid down the following propositions that a Magistrate is competent to consider the credibility and weigh the probabilities of the evidence; that in this consideration his discretion is limited; that in a matter of reasonable doubt, he must not rely upon his own opinion, in fact he must not encroach upon the functions of a Court of trial. Further more, he must keep before him the question whether there are fair grounds for concluding that the accused is guilty upon the evidence. In other words, where there is a prima facie case, upon evidence reasonably credible by a Court of trial, he should commit—Maung Htin v. 2

Maung Po, 4 Rang. 471, 28 Cr.L.J. 219 (221, 223). The Rangoon High Court has also expressed the opinion that it is impossible to lay down any general rule or rules which must be applied in every case and that it is extremely difficult to arrive at a formula which will be of assistance in all circumstances. Each case must be decided upon its own particular facts—Ibid.

702. When Magistrate should commit :—(1) Where there is credible evidence which if believed shows that there is a prima facie case which ought to be tried at the Sessions, the Magistrate should commit the case to the Sessions and not try it himself—Q. E. v. Manisami, 15 Mad. 39; Tarapada v. Kalipada, 51 Cal. 849 (852); Hazara v. Bishen Singh, 1908 P.R. 14; National Bank v. Kothandarama, 14 M.L.T. 200, 14 Cr.L.J. 529; Jamal Mahomed v. Moideen, 9 M.L.T. 71, 12 Cr.L.J. 20; Anonymous, 2 Weir 652 (653); Q. E. v. Namdev, 11 Bom. 372; Makhni v. Farzand Ali, 18 A.L.J. 232, 21 Cr.L.J. 318

(2) Where the question of discharge or commitment turns on probabilities, the Magistrate ought rather to leave the decision to the Sessions Court, than to order a discharge on the improbabilities of the case by giving the benefit of doubt to the accused—Fattu v. Fattu, 28 All. 564; Chiranji Lal v. Ram Lal, 1904 A.W.N. 5; Akbar Ali v. Raja Bahadur, 24 A.L.J. 133, 27 Cr.L.J. 2; Emp. v. Allah Mahr, 49 All. 443, 25 A.L.J. 191, 28 Cr.L.J. 281, Makhni v. Farzand Ali, 18 A.L.J. 232; In re Bai Parvati, 35 Bom. 163, Q. E. v. Namdev, 11 Bom. 372; Emp. v. Burjorji, 30 Bom. L.R. 639; Q. v. Kisto Doba, 14 W.R. 16; Nga Hmyin v. K. E., 19 Cr.L.J. 102; Aidas Tekchand v. Saban, 15 S.L.R. 1, 22 Cr.L.J. 570.

(3) Where a person is charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session and there is some evidence to support the story of the complainant, it is the duty of the Magistrate to commit the accused for trial by that Court, and not to disregard the graver charge, merely because he considers the prosecution story to be an exaggeration, and to convict the accused of other minor offences immediately connected with the graver offence—Mir Moze Ali v. K. E., 23 C.W.N. 1031, 21 Cr.L.J. 10.

(4) Where the evidence discloses a circumstance of aggravation which makes the offence one cognizable by a higher Court, it becomes the duty of the Magistrate to use the proper procedure for sending the case to the higher Court and not to try it himself. It is an evasion of law to treat an aggravated offence as an ordinary offence, and thus to introduce a different jurisdiction or a lower scale of punishment—Q. E. v. Gundaya, 13 Bom. 502; Jamal Mahomed v. Moideen, 9 M.L.T. 71, 12 Cr.L.J. 20; Emp. v. Paramananda, 10 Cal. 85, K. E. v. Ayyan, 24 Mad. 675

703. When Magistrate should not commit :—(1) Where no prima facie case has been made out—Q. E. v. Munisami, 15 Mad. 39; Chinnasami v. Veeriah, 2 Weir 255.

(2) When the Magistrate is clearly of opinion that the evidence for the prosecution is on the whole untrustworthy and that there is no reasonable probability of the case ending in a conviction—Harbans v. Fakir Das, 7

C.W.N. 77; Tarapada v. Kalipada, 51 Cal. 849; Fattu v. Fattu, 26 All. 564; In re Bai Parvati, 35 Bom. 163; Lachman v. Juala, 5 All. 161; Thirumalai v. Emp., 42 M.L.J. 49; In re Naramban, 1922 M.W.N. 326; Maulu v. Crown, 4 Lah. 69; Dharam Singh v. Jyoti Prosad, 37 All. 355; Md. Abdul v. Baldeo, 44 All. 57; Akbar Ali v. Raja Bahadur, 24 A.L.J. 133, 27 Cr.L.J. 2; Emp. v. Ganpat, 46 All. 537 (538), 22 A.L.J. 411; Tinkowri v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 153; Aidas Tikchand v. Saban, 15 S.L.R. 1; Nga Hmyin v. K. E., 1917 U.B.R. 3rd. Qr. 29, 19 Cr.L.J. 102. If the Magistrate is satisfied that the charge is without foundation he is entitled, and indeed it is his duty, to discharge the accused, even though the statements of the prosecution if accepted at their face value might make out a prima facie case against the accused—Emp. v. Ganpat Lal, 46 All. 537 (dissenting from Chiranjil Lal v. Ram Lal, 1904 A.W.N. 5). Though in case of doubt the Magistrate may be justified in leaving the case for the jury to decide, still if he is convinced that the evidence is false, it is his duty to discharge the accused—Kasim Ali v. Sarada, 30 C.W.N. 336. But the Magistrate must exercise a proper discretion in ordering the discharge of any person charged with a sessions offence. It is not enough for the Magistrate merely to doubt some portions of the prosecution evidence. He must be satisfied that the prosecution will fail and rightly fail in the sessions Court—Chheda v. Emp., 1 O.W.N. 402, 11 O.L.J. 664, 25 Cr.L.J. 1189.

(3) Where no evidence is forthcoming against the accused, owing to the absence of the prosecutor and his witnesses, and the case is not one in which the Magistrate ought to adjourn the inquiry—Tuki Mahomed v. Kisto Lal, 15 W.R. 53.

In all the above cases the Magistrate should discharge the accused.

(4) When the charge is not so serious as to justify a committal, the Magistrate should not shirk the responsibility of trying the case by committing it to the Sessions—Crown v. Ahmed Shah, 1 S.L.R. 103.

704. Recording reasons :—A Magistrate discharging an accused person under this section should record his reasons for so doing. But if he omits to record reasons, it cannot be said that the order of discharge is illegal—Aung Min v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 362. In all cases where a Magistrate discharges or commits, he should give his reasons for so doing, and it will be proper for the High Court to consider these reasons when deciding whether he has exercised his discretion correctly—Maung Htin v. Maung Po, 4 Rang. 471, 28 Cr.L.J. 219 (223). But the Magistrate is not authorised to write a judgment. All that he is empowered to do is to record reasons for a discharge, if he makes such an order, and to pass the order of discharge—Hait Ram v. Ganga Sahai, 40 All. 615, 16 A.L.J. 486, 19 Cr.L.J. 706.

705. Effect of discharge—fresh proceedings :—An order of discharge does not amount to an acquittal. The discharge of a person accused of an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session is no bar to his being apprehended and brought before a Magistrate with a view to his commitment—Q. v. Telkoo, 8 W.R. 61, Q. E. v. Krishnabhat, 10 Bom. 319. See sec. 437. Even if the Magistrate purports to acquit the accused, such an acquittal is really a discharge, and is no bar to fresh commitment. Thus, where a complaint was made of an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session, and the Magistrate took evidence and framed a charge for a minor offence and acquitted the accused, the order of acquittal was in effect an order of discharge in respect of the original offence complained of, and the Sessions Judge in revision could order the commitment of the accused on the original charge under sec. 436 (now sec. 437)—Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma, 24 Mad. 136, followed in Khanu v. Emp., 19 S.L.R. 353, 25 Cr.L.J. 1368. Contra—Balnath v. Gouri Kanta, 20 Cal. 633, Q. E. v. Hanumantha, 23 Mad. 225. See these cases cited in Note 1190 under sec. 437.

The District Magistrate or Sessions Judge directing further inquiry or commitment under sec. 437 is bound to consider all the grounds upon which the order of discharge has been passed, including a consideration of the evidence which has been disbelieved or held to be insufficient to establish a prima facie case—Harbans Singh v. Fakir Das, 7 C.W.N. 77.

Compensation:—No compensation should be awarded to the accused person discharged under this section, on the ground that the charge is vexatious, if the case is one triable exclusively by the Court of Session—Q. E. v. Lalbu, Ratanlal 961. See sec. 250.

706. Sub-section (2)—Discharge at early stage:—Sub-section (2) relieves a Magistrate from the necessity of going on with an inquiry or trial when he is reasonably convinced on what has been already deposed to, that a criminal charge cannot be sustained—Dhanubhai v. Pyarji, Ratanlal 201, Thirumalai Vandaya v. Emp., 42 M.L.J. 49, 23 Cr L.J. 209

707. Revision of order of discharge:—See secs 436, 437. An order of discharge under this section is not a final order, and the offence against an accused person who has been discharged may be further inquired into by a Magistrate upon further evidence if it be forthcoming—Maung Htin v. Mg. Po, 4 Rang. 471, 28 Cr L.J. 219 (221). If an order of discharge is passed by a Presidency Magistrate, the High Court can interfere and direct a committal not merely by virtue of the power given by sec. 15 of the Charter Act but also by the powers conferred by sec. 439 of this Code—Emp. v. Varjvandas, 27 Bom. 84 (following Colville v. Kristo Kishore, 26 Cal 746 and dissenting from Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126). See Note 682 under sec. 203.

210. (1) When, upon such evidence being taken and such examination (if any) being made, the Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, he shall frame a charge under his hand, declaring with what offence the accused is charged.

When charge is to be framed.

(2) As soon as such charge has been framed, it shall be read and explained to the accused, and a copy thereof shall, if he so requires, be given to him free of cost.

Charge to be explained, and copy furnished to accused.

Change :—The words "such charge" have been substituted for the words "the charge" by section 58 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 "We have made this verbal amendment to meet a suggestion of the Bengal Government"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

708. "Upon such evidence".—See section 208. It is illegal to commit an accused without taking any evidence in the preliminary inquiry—Reg v. Sita, Ratanlal 100. So also, it is illegal to frame a charge or order commitment without taking all the evidence produced by the accused—Q. E. v. Ahmadi, 20 All 264 If the case is transferred from the Court of one Magistrate to another, the latter can commit the case to the Sessions, acting upon the evidence recorded by the former—K E v. Nanhua, 36 All. 315, 12 A L.J. 467, 15 Cr L.J. 354

709. Sufficient grounds.—See Note 701 under section 209. A commitment can be made only when there are sufficient grounds for committing, that is to say, not merely sufficient allegations as to the offence which may or may not be credible, but such grounds as satisfy the Magistrate as being sufficient to support a charge. A District Magistrate cannot therefore order a Subordinate Magistrate to commit a case unless it appears that the latter had no good reason to discredit the prosecution witnesses and that their evidence was sufficient in law to form the basis of a conviction—Emp. v. Rawji, 9 Bom L.R. 225, 5 Cr.L.J. 213.

The discretion given to Magistrates to decide whether there are sufficient grounds for commitment is a judicial discretion and must be exercised with care and on some proper ground. It is an improper exercise of discretion to add a grave charge, without sufficient evidence, for the mere purpose of committing the case to the Sessions—Emp. v. Mahomed Khan, 11 Bom L.R. 18, 9 Cr L.J. 163

710. Commitment of case triable by Magistrate :—A Magistrate is competent to commit a case not exclusively triable by the Court of Session, if he cannot inflict adequate punishment in the case. See Notes under sections 206 and 207

But a Magistrate going on leave does not exercise proper discretion if he commits a case triable by himself to the Sessions simply because the witnesses for the accused are not in attendance and it would be inconvenient for his successor to begin the trial afresh—Anonymous, Ratanlal 110; so also, a Magistrate ought not to commit the accused in a case of theft merely because the case was connected with another case which he was bound by law to commit—Emp v Asha Bhatti, 15 Bom L.R. 998, 14 Cr.L.J. 657.

When two or more persons are jointly indicted and the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is ousted in the case of one of them by reason of the offence committed by him being one triable only by the Court of Session, the proper course is to commit all of them to the Sessions, and not to try the others himself and commit that one person to the Sessions—Anonymous, 1 Weir 448; Probodh Kumar v. Mohini, 22 Cr.L.J. 480 (Cal.).

711. Frame of charge :—See section 226 as to the procedure in case of commitment without any charge or with an erroneous or imperfect charge.

When a Magistrate has given his reasons for committing the case for trial, the Sessions Judge must either accept the charge as framed or frame others himself. But the Code does not authorise him to insist on a re-drawing of the charge by the Magistrate, unless he specifies the charge which he wishes to be sent up—In re Ramdhone, 25 W.R. 17.

The framing of a charge does not amount to an order of commitment, and after the charge is framed the Magistrate does not become functus officio in respect of the case. He can amend the charge or can proceed with the case himself, he can consider whether he ought to commit or not—Emp. v. Venkatesh, 12 Bom.L.R. 521, 11 Cr.L.J. 486. He can even discharge the accused. See sec. 213 (2) and notes thereunder. But once an order of commitment is passed under sec. 213, the Magistrate has no power to proceed any further with the case—Emp. v. Venkatesh, 12 Bom.L.R. 521.

211. (1) The accused shall be required at once to give in, orally or in writing, a list of the persons (if any) whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on his trial.

List of witnesses for defence on trial.

(2) The Magistrate may, in his discretion, allow the accused to give in any further list of witnesses at a subsequent time; and, where the accused is committed for trial before the High Court, nothing in this section shall be deemed to preclude the accused from giving, at any time before his trial, to the Clerk of the Crown a further list of the persons whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on such trial.

Further list.

712. Magistrate's duty to require list :—The Magistrate is bound under this section to require the accused to give a list of the witnesses he desires to call. It is not enough to put him the question: "Have you any evidence?"; such a question is ambiguous, and might suggest to the accused only an inquiry as to whether he had witnesses ready in Court—Emp. v. Kondi, 7 Bom.L.R. 723, 2 Cr.L.J. 601.

Refusal of accused to give list of names of witnesses.—If an accused person, on being called upon under sec. 211, declines to give the list, he cannot compel the Magistrate, after committal, to issue any summons for witnesses on his behalf. He is of course entitled to call any witnesses in the Sessions Court, whom he may have in Court, whether or not he has caused such witnesses to be summoned. The Sessions Judge may in his discretion cause any witnesses to be summoned on the application of the accused, and is bound to summon them if he considers that their evidence may be material—Q. E. v. Shakir Ali, 19 All 502.

The accused is entitled before the committing Magistrate to refuse to disclose the names of the witnesses he wishes to call at the trial, and the Magistrate cannot force him to disclose their names or the nature of the evidence they would be called upon to give—Q. E. v. Hargovind, 14 All 242.

Refusal of Magistrate to summon and examine witnesses.—On receipt of the list of witnesses, the Magistrate is bound to exercise his discretion and state distinctly whether he would summon the witnesses or not. If he is of opinion that the witnesses were included in the list for the purpose of vexation, delay or of defeating the ends of justice, he ought to proceed under the second proviso of section 216—Q. v. Rajeswar, 16 W. R. 14

But a Magistrate should not refuse an application for summons on the ground that the witnesses are implicated in the offence with which the accused is charged—Ram Sahai v. Sankar, 15 W. R. 7; or on the ground that the number of witnesses is very large—Hurendra v. Bhabani, 11 Cal. 762; or on the ground that he entertains doubts as to the value of their evidence—In re Mohima Chunder, 15 W. R. 15.

212. The Magistrate may, in his discretion, summon and examine any witness named in any list given in to him under Section 211.

Power of Magistrate to examine such witnesses.

713. Discretion of Magistrate.—This section gives the Magistrate the widest possible discretion to summon and examine any of the witnesses named in any list given under sec. 211, even in cases where the accused has reserved his defence for the Sessions trial. The Magistrate is not bound to record reasons before exercising his powers—In re Rudra Singh, 18 All. 380. The Magistrate is not bound to examine any witness named in the list—Sessions Judge v. Kangaya, 36 Mad 321, 23 M. L. J. 368, 13 Cr. L. J. 718, Saadat Alian v. Emp. 6 Pat 329, 23 Cr. L. J. 709

The discretion of the Magistrate ought not to be interfered with by the Sessions Judge. Therefore where the Magistrate intended to summon some witnesses for the accused and to make a local inspection, but had to commit the case to the Sessions at the direction of the Sessions Judge, it was held that the Sessions Judge's direction was ultra vires as it unduly interfered with the discretion of the Magistrate, and the committal was bad in law—Emp. v. Mathura, 1906 A.W.N. 306, 4 Cr.L.J. 451.

213. (1) When the accused, on being required to give in a list under Section 211, has declined to do so, or when he has given in such list and the witnesses (if any) included therein whom the Magistrate desires to examine have been summoned and examined under Section 212, the Magistrate may make an order committing the accused for trial by the High Court or the Court of Session (as the case may be), and (unless the Magistrate is a Presidency Magistrate) shall also record briefly the reasons for such commitment.

(2) If the Magistrate, after hearing the witnesses for the defence, is satisfied that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused, he may cancel the charge and discharge the accused.

714. Commitment:—As to when the Magistrate should or should not commit, see Notes 702 and 703 under sec. 209.

A commitment made in the absence of the accused is illegal—In re Surya Narain, 5 C W N. 110; but where the accused was allowed to appear by an agent under section 205, a commitment made in the absence of the accused, but in the presence of the agent, is not illegal—Q v. Hurnath, 2 W R 50.

Commitment after discharge—Where a Magistrate, after examining four witnesses for the prosecution, discharged the accused, but subsequently becoming aware that there was a fifth witness, he cancelled his order of discharge, examined the witness and committed the accused to the Sessions, it was held that the commitment was not illegal—Anonymous, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 40, 2 Weir 258.

Commitment to wrong Sessions:—See Note 549 under section 177.

Signature of Magistrate:—The signature of the Magistrate to the warrant of commitment should not be impressed with a stamp. But such a signature is only an irregularity and does not vitiate the proceedings—Subramanya v Queen, 6 Mad. 396.

Reasons for commitment:—The Magistrate shall briefly record the reasons for commitment. If a Magistrate commits a case triable by himself, he is bound to record his reasons for commitment, so as to enable the High Court to judge whether the committal is a sound exercise of discretionary power—Emp. v. Md Khan, 11 Bom. L.R. 18, 9 Cr L.J. 163; Emp. v. Nanji, 38 Bom. 114; he must state why the case was not disposed of by himself—Diwani Chand v Crown, 8 S.L.R. 23, 15 Cr L.J. 664. The High Court has jurisdiction to quash the commitment, if the Magistrate gives no reasons whatever for the commitment—Emp. v. Nanji, 38 Bom 114; or gives reasons which are bad in law—Emp. v. Achaldas, 28 Bom.L.R. 293, 27 Cr.L.J. 479; Emp. v. Bhimaji, 42 Bom. 172, 19 Cr.L.J. 342.

The Magistrate in his grounds of commitment should specify exactly and precisely the proof against each particular prisoner and the manner in which it is supported—Q. v. Kodai Kahar, 5 W.R. 6.

Commitment of some, trial of others:—Where several persons are jointly charged with the same offences, and it is considered necessary to commit one of them to the Sessions, the most convenient course is that all the prisoners should be committed, and not that one person should be committed and the others tried by the Magistrate himself. If however the Magistrate adopts the latter course, he does not act illegally—In re Kathu Chanchugadu, 2 Weir 258; Anonymous, 1 Weir 448.

Joint commitment.—Where several persons are jointly charged with having committed an offence, especially in cases of rioting etc., where there are two hostile parties, each person should be committed for trial separately and not all together, and the trial should also be separate—Q. v. Sheikh Bazoo, 8 W R 47, but a commitment is not to be set aside as illegal, because all the accused were jointly committed. The sections of the Code relating to joinder of charges, and the Privy Council ruling in Subramania Aiyar v K E., 25 Mad 61 refer to trials only and not to commitments—In re Govindu, 26 Mad 592, Q. E. v Ahmed Khan, 1900 A.W.N. 206; Emp v. Sita, 7 Bom L.R. 457, 2 Cr.L.J. 432. In such cases of joint commitment, the Sessions Judge should frame separate charges and try the accused separately, as if there had been separate commitments—In re Govindu, 26 Mad. 592; Q. E v. Ahmed Khan, 1900 A.W.N. 206.

715. Sub-section (2)—Scope:—Subsection (2) is intended to provide for cases where the evidence recorded after the charge so changes the aspect of the case as to leave no reasonable doubt that a conviction is not sustainable, but it does not apply where the evidence for the defence merely casts some doubts on the case—Crown v Po Nyan, 1 L.B.R. 348. Under this section, the Magistrate has a discretion even after he has framed a charge, of cancelling it, if after hearing the evidence for the defence he considers that there are no longer sufficient grounds to put the accused on his trial—Nga Hmyin v K E., U B R (1917) 3rd Qr. 29, 19 Cr.L.J. 102. If the Magistrate after hearing the defence witnesses comes to the conclusion that their evidence rebuts the evidence produced for the prosecution or renders it so incredible or unreliable that a conviction will not follow, he may act upon his opinion and pass an order of discharge under this subsection. He is not bound to commit merely because there was some prima facie evidence—Md Abdul v. Baldeo, 44 All 57, 19 A.L.J. 831, 22 Cr.L.J. 703, Albar Ali v Raja Bahadur, 24 A.L.J. 133, 27 Cr.L.J. 2. This discretion must, however, be carefully exercised, and whenever there is a possibility that different Courts might take different views of the evidence, the Magistrate, even though he may himself not think the evidence sufficient for a conviction, should leave it to the Sessions Court to pronounce finally upon the matter—Akbar Ali v. Raja Bahadur (supra).

The words "witnesses for the defence" in subsection (2) are wide enough to cover evidence extracted by cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses; and therefore it is open to a Magistrate, after he has drawn up a charge, to allow the accused to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution, and, as a result, to cancel the charge—Jogendra v. Matlal, 39 Cal. 885, 16 C.W.N. 1155, 13 Cr.L.J. 774. This case has been disapproved of in Raman v. Emp., 33 C.W.N. 535, 1929 Cr.C. 222.

This section has been omitted by section 10 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XII of 1923). It provided that if an European British subject and an Indian subject were jointly accused of an offence triable by a Court of Session, the Magistrate must commit the case to the High Court and not to the Sessions Judge.

215. A commitment

Quashing commitments under Section 213 or 214.

once made under Section 213 or Section 214 by a competent Magistrate or by a Court of Session under Section 477 or by a Civil or Revenue Court under Section 478, can be quashed by the High Court only, and only on a point of law.

215.- A commitment

Quashing commitments under Section 213 or 478.

once made under Section 213 * * by a competent

Magistratee * * or by a Civil or Revenue Court under Section 478 can be quashed by the High Court only, and only on a point of law.

Change :—The words "or section 214" occurring in the old section have been omitted by sec. 11 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. This is consequential to the repeal of sec. 214.

The words "or by a Court . 477" have been omitted by sec. 59 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. This is consequential to the repeal of section 477.

716. Scope of section :—This section applies only to commitments made under the two sections specified; therefore an order of commitment under sec. 436 (now section 437) cannot be quashed under this section—Emp. v. Jogeshwar, 31 Cal. 1; In re Kalagava, 27 Mad. 54; but can be quashed under the revisional powers of the High Court—Pirithi Chand v. Sampatia, 7 C.W.N. 327; and in that case the High Court can quash the commitment on points of law and of fact—Tambi v. Emp., 12 Bur. L.T. 62, 9 L.B.R. 208, 19 Cr.L.J. 801. Similarly, an order of commitment made by the Sessions Judge under sec. 423 cannot be quashed under this section, but can be dealt with by the High Court under its revisionary powers—K. E. v. Nga Thet She, 1 Bur. L.J. 250. But an order under sec. 526 clause (iv) can neither be quashed under this section nor under the High Court's revisional powers—In re Kalagaya, 27 Mad. 54.

This section does not apply to a commitment which is ab initio void e.g. a commitment made by a Magistrate having no territorial jurisdiction over the offence. No reference to the High Court is necessary to set aside such a commitment—Emp. v. Alim Mundle, 11 C.L.R. 55.

717. Quashing commitment—This section refers only to a commitment actually made. Where a Sessions Judge under sec. 436 (now 437) set aside a Magistrate's order of discharge, and directed a commitment to be made, the High Court could interfere in its revisional powers, and could consider the facts as well as the question of law involved—Muthia Chetty v. Emp., 30 Mad 224, 16 M.L.J. 529

A commitment once made stands, unless quashed by the High Court, and if the High Court is not moved to quash the commitment, the trial of the persons must take place in pursuance thereof. If a trial has already taken place, it serves no purpose to impugn the commitment, and it is futile to contend in appeal or in revision that the commitment was illegal—Nazir v. Emp., 7 Lah L.J. 428, 26 P.L.R. 767, 27 Cr.L.J. 134.

When commitment cannot be quashed.—A commitment cannot be quashed after the accused has been put on his trial and has pleaded to the charge before the Sessions Judge—Emp. v. Sagambar, 12 C.L.R. 120; Crown v. Haji, 1 S.L.R. 6, 9 Cr.L.J. 250; Sessions Judge v. Arokia Padayachi, 2 Weir 262; Kasim Molla v. Emp., 42 C.L.J. 114, 26 Cr.L.J. 1560. In such a case, the Judge should proceed according to law and dispose of the case, or the Public Prosecutor may with the consent of the Court withdraw the prosecution under sec. 494—Sessions Judge v. Arokia, 2 Weir 262. In Emp. v. Shibo Behara, 6 Cal. 584, however, it has been held that the High Court can quash a commitment at any stage of a criminal proceeding.

'Only by the High Court'.—A commitment can be quashed only by the High Court. A Magistrate cannot quash the commitment and discharge the accused even though the complainant wishes to compound the case—Emp. v. Jangbir, 4 All. 150; Q. v. Salim Sheikh, 2 W.R. 57. A Sessions Judge cannot set aside the commitment and direct the Magistrate to try the case himself—In re Bheema, 16 M.L.J. 525, 5 Cr.L.J. 99.

The Judicial Commissioner when sitting in the Sessions division is not divested of his capacity as a High Court Judge, and he has full power to make an order under sec. 215 even when sitting as a Sessions Judge—Utlabai v. Crown, 17 S.L.R. 188, 26 Cr.L.J. 148

Where the commitment is made to the High Court (original criminal jurisdiction), the Appellate Criminal Bench of the High Court cannot quash the commitment. In such a case the practice is to apply to the Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction in the High Court—Phanin- dra v. Emp., 36 Cal. 48. That is, the Judge of the High Court sitting in Sessions has power to quash a commitment made to him by a Magistrate—Emp. v. Girish Chandra, 34 C.W.N. 13 (28) (F.B.), 1929 Cr. C. 468; Emp. v. Girish, 56 Cal. 785, 1929 Cr. C. 521. But in Crown Prosecutor v. Bhagavathi, 42 Mad. 83 (84) the Madras High Court held that an application to quash such a commitment should be made to the Appellate side of the High Court and not to a Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction. A similar opinion was expressed in Colin M. Mackey v. Emp., 53 Cal. 350 (F.B.), 30 C.W.N. 276, 27 Cr.L.J. 385. If an order of commitment is made by the original civil side of the High Court under sec. 478, an appeal against the order of commitment may be preferred to the Appellate side of the High Court—Venkatagiri v. N. M. Firm, 43 Mad. 361.

Effect of order quashing commitment:—The primary effect of an order quashing the commitment is to supersede any action taken by the Magistrate under sec. 210 and his proceedings subsequent thereto; and it is necessary for the Magistrate to go back to the point at which he took cognizance of the complaint. There is no need for a fresh complaint, but it is necessary for the Magistrate to treat the case as a warrant case and not as a subject matter of an inquiry under Ch. XVIII. The Magistrate is to begin the trial afresh under sec. 252—Emp. v. Girish Chandra, 34 C.W.N. 13 (30) (F.B.).

The Magistrate cannot question the legality of the order of the High Court quashing the commitment.—Emp. v. Girish Chandra, supra

718. Point of law:—The High Court cannot quash a commitment made under sections 213 and 478 except upon a point of law—Emp. v. Goda Ram, 15 A.L.J. 756, 19 Cr.L.J. 224. Though an appeal lies under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from an order of commitment made under section 478 by a Judge of the High Court in the original civil side, the order cannot be set aside except on a point of law—Venkatagiri v. N. M. Firm, 43 Mad. 361

The High Court can quash a commitment on the following points of law:—

(1) Where the Magistrate who committed the case was competent to try it himself and to inflict adequate punishment in the case—K. E. v. Dharam Singh, 3 A.L.J. 14, K. E. v. Jagmohan, 6 A.L.J. 989; Emp. v. Asha Bhatti, 15 Bom. L.R. 998; Uttibai v. Crown, 17 S.L.R. 188.

(2) Where the order of commitment rests upon a misapprehension and there is no evidence upon which it can be supported—In re Jagathambal, 2 Weir 262.

(3) Where the case was triable exclusively by the Magistrate, and the Sessions Court had no jurisdiction over it, e.g. a commitment for an offence under the Opium Act (Act I of 1878)—Q. E. v. Schade, 19 All 465; or under Madras Act I of 1866—Reg. v. Donoghua, 5 M H C.R. 277; or under sec. 29 of Police Act V of 1861—In re Indrabee, 1 W R 5.

(4) When there is absolutely no evidence sufficient to warrant a commitment—Emp. v. Chandra Kumar, 2 C.L.J. 46; Emp. v. Jagannath, 3 O.W.N. 308 (Sup.), 28 Cr.L.J. 137; Nga Hmyin v. K. E., 1917 U.B.R. 3rd Qr. 29, 19 Cr.L.J. 102; Tambi v. Emp., 9 L.B.R. 208, 19 Cr.L.J. 801, 12 Bur. L.T. 62; Jogeshwar v. K. E., 5 C.W.N. 411; Emp. v. Narotam, 6 All. 98; but see 13 Bom. L.R. 201 and 27 M.L.J. 593 cited in Note 719 below.

(5) Where the commitment was made in the absence of the accused—In re Surya Narain, 5 C.W.N. 110.

(6) Where the commitment was based on evidence recorded in the absence of the accused (i.e., while the accused was not arrested on the charge at all)—Chinnappan, 2 Weir 259

(7) Where the commitment was made by the Magistrate not in the exercise of his own discretion but at the suggestion of the District Magistrate, and without examining the witnesses for the defence—Emp. v. Mathura, 1906 A.W.N. 306, Q E v Munisami, 15 Mad 39

(8) Where the commitment was made without examining the witnesses for the prosecution—Q E. v. Chinna, 4 Mad 227, or without examining the witnesses for the defence—Emp v Md Hadi, 26 All 177, Emp. v. Mathura, 1906 A.W.N. 306, Q E v Ahmadi, 20 All 264

(9) Where the Magistrate committed the approver who had broken the conditions of pardon tendered to him, along with the other co-accused—Q. E v. Bhan, 23 Bom 493; Q. E v. Brij Narain, 20 All. 529; or where such approver was committed before the trial of the other accused was finished—Q. E. v. Sudra, 14 All. 336

(10) Where the Magistrate gave no reasons whatever for the commitment, or gave reasons which are bad in law—Emp v. Achaldas, 28 Bom. L.R. 293, 27 Cr.L.J. 479; Emp. v. Nanji, 38 Bom 114, 14 Cr.L.J. 609, Emp v. Bhimaji, 42 Bom. 172.

(11) Where the committing Magistrate had no territorial jurisdiction over the offence—K. E. v. Nga Taung, 7 Bur L.T. 26, 15 Cr.L.J. 270.

(12) Where the committing Magistrate held the inquiry without the certificate of the Political Agent which was necessary in the case—Ram Charan v. Crown, 5 Lah. 416, see this case and other cases cited in Note 581 under sec. 188

719. What are not proper grounds for setting aside commitment :—(1) The High Court cannot set aside a committal merely because the Magistrate made a joint commitment of several accused—In re Govinda, 26 Mad 592, Q E v Ahmad Khan, 1900 A.W.N. 206; Emp. v. Sita, 7 Bom. L.R. 457, 2 Cr.L.J. 432

(2) A commitment can be quashed only on a point of law and cannot be quashed on the ground that there was no evidence on the committing Magistrate's record to sustain the charge—Emp v Saleman, 13 Bom. L.R. 201, 12 Cr.L.J. 256; Ismail v Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1045 (1047) (Nag); In re Sessions Judge, 27 M.L.J. 593, 15 Cr.L.J. 665 (dissenting from 6

All. 98); so also, a commitment cannot be quashed because of doubts as to the credibility of the evidence for the prosecution, if there is in fact some evidence which would justify the Sessions Judge in leaving the question of guilt or innocence to the jury—Mahomed Moideen v. K. E. I Rang 526, 25 Cr.L.J. 261. A commitment cannot be quashed merely on the ground that the evidence was doubtful. The proper course in such a case would be for the District Magistrate to instruct the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution under sec. 494—K. E. v. Nga Taung, 7 Bur. L.T. 26, 15 Cr.L.J. 270.

(3) Where a Magistrate going on leave committed to the Sessions a case triable by himself, on the ground that the witnesses were not in attendance and that his successor would find it inconvenient to try the case afresh, it was held that the commitment was merely irregular and not illegal so as to justify the High Court to quash it—Anonymous, Ratanlal 110.

(4) A commitment is not illegal because it is made to the same Sessions Judge who gave the direction for the prosecution of an accused for an offence (giving false evidence) committed before him—Reg v Gazi, 1 Bom. 311

(5) A commitment for false complaint (sec. 211 I. P. C.) is not illegal merely because the Magistrate has proceeded on the report of a police officer and has not made a judicial inquiry into the complaint—Emp v. Salek Roy, 6 Cal 582

(6) The fact that some of the accused were committed while other persons who were concerned in the offence had not yet been arrested is not a ground for setting aside the commitment—In re Ramasami, 7 M.L.T. 187, 11 Cr.L.J. 333

(7) A commitment ought not to be quashed on the ground that a civil suit is pending in respect of the subject matter of the offence—In re Devji, 18 Bom 581, but the trial of the case may be postponed until the determination of the civil suit—Sankaraya v. Kerala Subba, 2 Weir 260

(8) Where the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction over the place of offence but the objection taken on this point was overruled by the Sessions Judge, the High Court held that there was no sufficient ground for questioning the commitment—Q E v Abbi Reddi, 17 Mad 402.

(9) The High Court cannot interfere when the Magistrate, being of opinion that he cannot adequately punish the accused, exercises his discretion by committing the case to the Sessions—King Emp. v. Baljoo, 11 A.L.J. 439, 14 Cr.L.J. 304

(10) The High Court cannot quash a commitment where the Magistrate, though he can inflict the maximum sentence provided for the offence, commits the case, being of opinion that it should for other reasons be tried by a Court of Session—Crown Prosecutor v. Bhagvathi, 35 M.L.J. 559, 19 Cr.L.J. 997; Ghani v. Crown, 14 S.L.R. 85, 21 Cr.L.J. 791.

(11) A commitment will not be quashed on the ground that the committing Magistrate has failed to observe the provisions of sec 360 in respect of some of the witnesses; in such a case, the trial Court will be directed to recall the witnesses in respect of whom sec. 360 was not complied with, and to comply with those provisions so far as these witnesses are concerned—Abdur Rahim v. Emp 29 C.W.N. 698, 26 Cr.L.J. 1276.

(12) Where there has been a commitment for the trial of charges some of which are triable by a Session Court and others triable by a Magistrate, the fact that during the trial the charges for the Sessions offences are withdrawn is not a ground for setting aside the order of commitment and taking away the accused's right to a trial by jury—Emp v. Monmotha, 31 C.W.N. 144, 28 Cr.L.J. 141

216. When the accused has given in any list of witnesses under Section 211 and has been committed for trial, the Magistrate shall summon such of the witnesses included in the list, as have not appeared before himself, to appear before the Court to which the accused has been committed:

Summons to witnesses for defence when accused is committed.

Provided that, where the accused has been committed to the High Court, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, leave such witnesses to be summoned by the Clerk of the Crown, and such witnesses may be summoned accordingly:

Provided also, that if the Magistrate thinks that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice, the Magistrate may require the accused to satisfy him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the evidence of such witness is material, and if he is not so satisfied, may refuse to summon the witness (recording his reasons for such refusal), or may, before summoning him, require such sum to be deposited as such Magistrate thinks necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness and all other proper expenses.

Refusal to summon unnecessary witness unless deposit made.

719A. "Shall summon" —Where the accused has made an application for summoning witnesses, the Magistrate must deal with the application and pass an order either granting the prayer of the petition or refusing it. He should not simply order the application to be filed—Bhomas v. Digambar, 6 C W N 548. Where a witness once summoned failed to appear, there being some delay in the service of summons, the Magistrate is bound to make a second attempt (the first attempt being a

All. 98); so also, a commitment cannot be quashed because of doubts as to the credibility of the evidence for the prosecution, if there is in fact some evidence which would justify the Sessions Judge in leaving the question of guilt or innocence to the jury—Mahomed Moideen v. K. E., 1 Rang. 526, 25 Cr.L.J. 261. A commitment cannot be quashed merely on the ground that the evidence was doubtful. The proper course in such a case would be for the District Magistrate to instruct the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution under sec. 494—K. E. v. Nga Taung, 7 Bur. L.T. 26, 15 Cr L.J. 270

(3) Where a Magistrate going on leave committed to the Sessions a case triable by himself, on the ground that the witnesses were not in attendance and that his successor would find it inconvenient to try the case afresh, it was held that the commitment was merely irregular and not illegal so as to justify the High Court to quash it—Anonymous, Ratanlal 110.

(4) A commitment is not illegal because it is made to the same Sessions Judge who gave the direction for the prosecution of an accused for an offence (giving false evidence) committed before him—Reg v. Gazi, 1 Bom. 311.

(5) A commitment for false complaint (sec. 211 I. P. C.) is not illegal merely because the Magistrate has proceeded on the report of a police officer and has not made a judicial inquiry into the complaint—Emp. v. Salek Roy, 6 Cal 582.

(6) The fact that some of the accused were committed while other persons who were concerned in the offence had not yet been arrested is not a ground for setting aside the commitment—In re Ramasami, 7 M L T. 187, 11 Cr.L.J. 333

(7) A commitment ought not to be quashed on the ground that a civil suit is pending in respect of the subject matter of the offence—In re Devji, 18 Bom 581, but the trial of the case may be postponed until the determination of the civil suit—Santharaja v. Kerala Subba, 2 Weir 260

(8) Where the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction over the place of offence but the objection taken on this point was overruled by the Sessions Judge, the High Court held that there was no sufficient ground for questioning the commitment—Q E v Abbi Reddi, 17 Mad 402.

(9) The High Court cannot interfere when the Magistrate, being of opinion that he cannot adequately punish the accused, exercises his discretion by committing the case to the Sessions—King Emp. v. Baldeo, 11 A.L.J. 439, 14 Cr L.J. 304

(10) The High Court cannot quash a commitment where the Magistrate, though he can inflict the maximum sentence provided for the offence, commits the case, being of opinion that it should for other reasons be tried by a Court of Session—Crown Prosecutor v. Bhagvathi, 35 M L J. 559, 19 Cr.L.J. 997; Ghani v. Crown, 14 S L.R 85, 21 Cr L.J. 791.

(11) A commitment will not be quashed on the ground that the committing Magistrate has failed to observe the provisions of sec 360 in respect of some of the witnesses; in such a case, the trial Court will be directed to recall the witnesses in respect of whom sec. 360 was not complied with, and to comply with those provisions so far as these witnesses are concerned—Abdur Rahim v. Emp 29 C.W.N. 698, 26 Cr.L.J. 1276.

(12) Where there has been a commitment for the trial of charges some of which are triable by a Session Court and others triable by a Magistrate, the fact that during the trial the charges for the Sessions offences are withdrawn is not a ground for setting aside the order of commitment and taking away the accused's right to a trial by jury—Emp v Monmotha, 31 C.W.N. 144, 28 Cr.L.J. 141

216. When the accused has given in any list of witnesses under Section 211 and has been committed for trial, the Magistrate shall summon such of the witnesses included in the list, as have not appeared before himself, to appear before the Court to which the accused has been committed:

Summons to witnesses for defence when accused is committed.

Provided that, where the accused has been committed to the High Court, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, leave such witnesses to be summoned by the Clerk of the Crown, and such witnesses may be summoned accordingly:

Refusal to summon unnecessary witness unless deposit made. Provided also, that if the Magistrate thinks that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice, the Magistrate may require the accused to satisfy him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the evidence of such witness is material, and if he is not so satisfied, may refuse to summon the witness (recording his reasons for such refusal), or may, before summoning him, require such sum to be deposited as such Magistrate thinks necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness and all other proper expenses.

719A. "Shall summon"—Where the accused has made an application for summoning witnesses, the Magistrate must deal with the application and pass an order either granting the prayer of the petition or refusing it. He should not simply order the application to be filed—Bhomar v. Digambar, 6 C.W.N. 543. Where a witness once summoned failed to appear, there being some delay in the service of summons, the Magistrate is bound to make a second attempt (the first attempt being a nominal one) to secure the attendance of the absence witness—Emp. v. Ruknuddin, 4 All 53.

720. Second proviso :—The second proviso is not intended to enable the Magistrate to inquire generally into what the defence of the accused is to be, and to consider whether on learning the nature of the defence he is absolutely to abstain from summoning the whole of the witnesses cited by the accused. The meaning of this proviso is that if among the persons named by the accused as witnesses the Magistrate considers that any particular witness is included for the purpose of vexation and delay, he is to exercise his judgment and inquire whether such witness is material—Emp v. Rajcoomar, 3 Cal 573. And he can require the accused person to satisfy him that the evidence of the witnesses to be summoned is material only when he thinks that the witnesses were included in the list for the purpose of vexation etc.; otherwise not—In re Raja of Kantis, 8 All. 668.

Refusal to summon witnesses :—The accused is entitled to have the witnesses mentioned in the list summoned and examined; and the only ground on which a Magistrate can refuse summons is when the Magistrate thinks that the witnesses have been included in the list for the purpose of vexation and delay. The Magistrate should not refuse to summon the witnesses named in the list merely because he thinks that their evidence would not be reliable or material—In re Marinagi Reddi, 2 Weir 263. Indeed, he cannot decide beforehand on the credit to be attached to the evidence of a particular witness, unless he has an opportunity of hearing him. By this prejudging he exceeds the discretion given by this section—Q. E. v. Virasami, 19 Mad. 375. Again, the fact that the accused declined to examine witnesses at the close of the case would be no reason for refusing to summon them to meet fresh evidence taken by the Magistrate subsequent to the close of the defence—Deela Mahton v Sheo Dyal, 6 Cal. 714.

Recording reasons for refusal —When a Magistrate refuses to summon witnesses, he must record his reasons for such refusal; and the reasons must show that the evidence of such witnesses is not material. The fact that the Magistrate thought that the reasons assigned by the accused for summoning a witness were not sufficient, is not a good ground for refusing to summon him—In re Raja of Kantis. 8 All 668.

Order to deposit expenses —Though the Magistrate is competent to refuse to summon witnesses, still he should fix the amount which he considers necessary to defray the cost of the attendance of persons named in the list and intimate his readiness to issue summons on that amount being deposited—In re Subbaraya, 4 M.H.C.R. 81. An order refusing to issue summons should be sparingly passed; and such an order is improper in a case where the accused is unable or unwilling to deposit money and in consequence is convicted without his witnesses being heard, especially if the case is one in which a severe sentence is inflicted—Qadu v. Emp., 1898 P.R 7.

217. (1) Complainants and witnesses for the prosecution and defence, whose attendance before the Court of Session or High Court is necessary and who appear before the Magistrate, shall execute before him bonds binding themselves to be in attendance when called upon at the Court of Session or High Court to prosecute or to give evidence, as the case may be.

(2) If any complainant or witness refuses to attend before the Court of Session or High Court, or to execute the bond above directed, the Magistrate may detain him in custody until he executes such bond, or until his attendance at the Court of Session or High Court is required, when the Magistrate shall send him in custody to the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

721. "Whose attendance is necessary" —There is no law which obliges the committing Magistrate to cause the attendance at the Sessions Court of every one of the witnesses examined by him, irrespective of their evidence being material for the prosecution. It is for the Magistrate to judge as to the necessity of the attendance of those witnesses—Emp. v. Nank Lal, 1883 A.W.N. 37.

218. (1) When the accused is committed for trial, the Magistrate shall issue an order to such person as may be appointed by the Local Government in this behalf, notifying the commitment and stating the offence in the same form as the charge, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that such person is already aware of the commitment and the form of the charge; and shall send the charge, the record of the inquiry and any weapon or other thing which is to be produced in evidence, to the Court of Session or (where the commitment is made to the High Court) to the Clerk of the Crown or other officer appointed in this behalf by the High Court.

(2) When the commitment is made to the High Court and any part of the record is not in English, an English translation of such part shall be forwarded with the record.

English translation to be forwarded to High Court.

219. (1) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, summon and examine supplementary witnesses after the commitment and before the commencement of the trial, and bind them over in manner hereinbefore provided to appear and give evidence.

Power to summon supplementary witnesses.

219. (1) The committing Magistrate or, in the absence of such Magistrate, any other Magistrate empowered by or under Section 206 may, if he thinks fit, summon and examine supplementary witnesses after the commitment and before the commencement of the trial, and bind them over in manner hereinbefore provided to appear and give evidence.

Power to summon supplementary witnesses.

(2) Such examination shall, if possible, be taken in the presence of the accused, and where the Magistrate is not a Presidency Magistrate, a copy of the evidence of such witnesses shall, if the accused so require, be given to him free of cost.

(2) Such examination shall, if possible, be taken in the presence of the accused, and where the Magistrate is not a Presidency Magistrate, a copy of the evidence of such witnesses shall * * be given to the accused free of cost.

Change .—The italicised words in subsection (1) have been substituted for the words 'The Magistrate' by section 60 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. This amendment provides that the supplementary witnesses may be examined not only by the committing Magistrate, but by any other Magistrate in his absence who is empowered to commit for trial.

The words "if the accused so require" occurring in subsection (2) of the old section have been omitted by the same Amendment Act. The accused is now given an absolute right to a copy of the evidence.

722. Scope :—This section provides for cases in which there may be an accidental gap in the evidence. In such a case, the Sessions Judge may call additional evidence at the trial under sec. 540 or the committing Magistrate may himself take steps, before the trial, under sec 219 to supplement the evidence—Mahabir v. Emp., 23 Cr L.J. 79 (Oudh).

The power of the committing Magistrate to call and examine supplementary witnesses ceases with the commencement of the trial. After the trial has commenced, the Sessions Judge can cause witnesses to be summoned before himself or under certain circumstances have them examined by commission. But he cannot direct the committing Magistrate to call additional witnesses and hold an inquiry—Hassan v Emp, 1888 P R. 29. If, after receiving the order of commitment, the Sessions Judge, in view of the Magistrate's recorded opinion, thinks that further evidence should be taken, the proper course is to point out to the committing Magistrate that he should summon and examine any supplementary witnesses who can give evidence and bind them over to appear at the trial, and not to send the case to the Magistrate after the conclusion of the trial and after the opinions of the assessors have been taken—Awalkhan v. Emp., 1892 P.R. 4.

220. Until and during the trial, the Magistrate shall, subject to the provisions of this Code regarding the taking of bail, commit the accused, by warrant, to custody.

CHAPTER XIX.

OF THE CHARGE.

221. (1) Every charge under this Code shall state the offence with which the accused is charged.

(2) If the law which creates the offence gives it any specific name, the offence may be described in the charge by that name only.

(3) If the law which creates the offence does not give it any specific name, so much of the definition of the offence must be stated as to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

(4) The law and section of the law against which the offence is said to have been committed shall be mentioned in the charge.

(5) The fact that the charge is made is equivalent to
What implied in a statement that every legal condition required by law to constitute the offence charged was fulfilled in the particular case.

(6) In the presidency-towns the charge shall be Language of charge, written in English; elsewhere it shall be written either in English or in the language of the Court.

(7) If the accused has
Previous conviction when to be set out. been previously convicted of any offence, and it is intended to prove such previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment which the Court is competent to award, the fact, date and place of the previous conviction shall be stated in the charge. If such statement is omitted, the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

(7) If the accused, having
Previous conviction when to be set out. been previously convicted of any offence, is liable, by reason of such previous conviction, to enhanced punishment or to punishment of a different kind, for a subsequent offence, and it is intended to prove such previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment which the Court may think fit to award for the subsequent offence, the fact, date and place of the previous conviction shall be stated in the charge. If such statement has been omitted, the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

Illustrations.

(a) A is charged with the murder of B. This is equivalent to a statement that A's act fell within the definition of murder given in Sections 299 and 300 of the Indian Penal Code; that it did not fall within any of the general exceptions of the same Code ; and that it did not fall within any of the five exceptions to Section 300 ; or that, if it did fall within Exception I, one or other of the three provisos to that exception applied to it.

(b) A is charged, under Section 326 of the Indian Penal Code, with voluntarily causing grievous hurt to B by means of an instrument for shooting. This is equivalent to a statement that the case was not provided for by Section 335 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the general exceptions did not apply to it.

(c) A is accused of murder, cheating, theft, extortion, adultery or criminal intimidation, or using a false property mark. The charge may state that A committed murder, or cheating, or theft, or extortion, or adultery, or criminal intimidation, or that he used a false property mark, without reference to the definitions of those crimes contained in the Indian Penal Code ; but the sections under which the offence is punishable must, in each instance, be referred to in the charge.

(d) A is charged, under Section 184 of the Indian Penal Code with intentionally obstructing a sale of property offered for sale by the lawful authority of a public servant. The charge should be in those words

Change.—Subsection (7) has been amended by sec. 61 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "There is some doubt whether under section 221 it is permissible to prove a previous conviction if the enhanced punishment which it is sought to award is not beyond the competence of the Court; and the amendment directs that in such a case evidence of the previous conviction may be given"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). This amendment supersedes the ruling in Ramanjulu, 2 Weir 264 where it was held that if the sentence passed was within the Magistrate's competency, the details of the previous conviction need not be given

723. Particulars to be stated in the charge :—The object of these sections is to enable the accused to know the substantive charges which he will have to meet and to be ready for them before the evidence is given—Ram Chandar v Emp., 17 Cr.L.J. 411 (All). An accused is entitled to know with accuracy and certainty the exact nature of the charge brought against him. Unless he has this knowledge, he will be prejudiced in his defence, especially in cases where it is sought to implicate him for acts not committed by himself but by others with whom he is in company—Behari Mahton v. Q E 11 Cal 106, Amritlal v. K. E., 42 Cal. 957; Chhakari v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 567 (Cal); Kedar Nath v. K. E., 29 C.W.N. 408, 26 Cr.L.J. 849. An accused is entitled to be informed with the greatest precision what acts he is said to have committed, and under what section of the Penal Code these acts fall—Sheo Sankar v. K. E., 2 O.W.N. 862, 27 Cr.L.J. 62. Failure to state in any substantial form the nature and particulars of the offence alleged against the accused would in some cases be a fatal defect which would vitiate the whole proceedings. Where an offence charged involves consequences which may be stated in a general form, such as may arise in a case of arson where a man may by one act of arson set fire and destroy several stacks of hays of several persons, no particular is required, the nature of the offence being sufficiently stated by the date, time and place of the setting of fire, but extortion or obtaining money from persons by unlawful means involves stating with some approach to accuracy the approximate amounts alleged to have been obtained from each person and the nature of the extortion used against each person—Ram Chandar v. Emp., 17 Cr.L.J. 411 (All.).

In a charge of rioting, the common object of the unlawful assembly should be specified—Buddhu v. Lachminia, 9 C.W.N. 599, Behari v. Q. E., 11 Cal. 106, Poresh Nath v. Emp., 33 Cal. 295. Where the object of the unlawful assembly is to take possession of some property, the property must be specified in the charge—Poresh Nath v. Emp., 33 Cal. 295. Where there are two objects of an unlawful assembly, both the objects must be specified and not one—Sabir v. Q. E., 22 Cal. 276. For a charge of conspiracy, only an agreement is sufficient, so it is sufficient to include in the charge the agreement which is alleged to have been arrived at between the conspirators—Bishambhar v. K. E., 2 O.W.N. 760, 26 Cr.L.J. 1602. Where the accused are charged with having conspired to do or cause to be done a series of illegal acts, it is not necessary that the charge should state in all its details the actual specific acts which the conspirators are alleged to have agreed to do or cause to be done. It is sufficient to say that the accused have agreed to do or cause to be done an illegal act—Htin Gyaw, 6 Rang 6, 29 Cr.L.J. 555 (560). Where a conspirator is present at the commission of the offence, he may under the provisions of sec 114 I P. C. be deemed to have committed the offence, but if that is the way in which the accused is to be made responsible for the offence, he should be specially charged with such offence as read with the provisions of sec 114 I P. Code—Alimuddi v. K. E., 52 Cal. 253, 29 C.W.N. 173, 40 C.L.J. 541.

Where a particular intention is an important element in the offence, the intention must be specified—Balmukund v. Ghanshamram, 22 Cal. 391.

In a charge of sedition, the actual seditious words need not be set out in the charge if the substance of the words is given—Crown v. Ahmed, 1 S.L.R. 14, 9 Cr.L.J. 256.

The existence of aggravating circumstances which go to enhance the punishment must be set out in the charge—Reg. v. Mukta, Ratanlal 55.

Specific name :—Thus, rioting is an offence with a specific name, and under sub-section (2), it is sufficient to describe the offence by that name only. It is not necessary to set out that there were five or more persons engaged in a riot and actuated by a common object. Where a person is charged with rioting, it means that the prosecution alleges that all the necessary ingredients constituting the offence of rioting are present; it is not necessary to set out what these ingredients are—Emp. v. Ram Chandra, 55 Cal. 879, 29 Cr.L.J. 823 (825)

Subject matter of offence.—Where the law and the section as well as the words of the section are mentioned in the charge, the subject matter of the offence need not be specified. Thus, where the illegal act charged is the unlawful and malicious possession of explosive substances within the meaning of sec. 4 of the Explosive Substances Act, it is not essential to specify in the charge the explosive substance which the accused had in their possession—Amrita Lal v. K E, 42 Cal 957, 19 C.W.N 676, 16 Cr.L.J 497.

Liability of whipping.—Where the accused is liable to be punished under the Whipping Act, the charge must state the liability—Baidya v. Queen, 5 Mad 158

"Law and section of the law".—In framing a charge the Court should adhere to the language of the section, as far as practicable—Amritlal v. K. E., 42 Cal. 957; Chhakari v Emp, 26 Cr L J 567 (Cal) Where the law and section were mentioned in the charge, and the accused fully understood the nature of the offence with which they were charged, the omission of the words "unlawfully" and "maliciously" and "in British India" occurring in the section was held not so material as to prejudice the accused—Amritlal v K E, 42 Cal 957

724. Sub-section (7)—Previous conviction:—The prosecution is bound to prove the previous conviction, and the identity of the accused with the person previously convicted—Yippaka Daligadu, 2 Weir 266. Where the fact of previous conviction is not mentioned in the charge, it cannot be used for the purpose of enhancing the sentence—Reg v Annaji, Ratanlal 70; e.g. for the purpose of adding the sentence of whipping to imprisonment—Anonymous, 2 Weir 265, and 267 In In re Abbulu, 7 M L.T. 77 and Baisakhi v. Crown, 1917 P R. 29, 18 Cr.L.J 875, however, it is held that the omission to set out the previous conviction is not a sufficient reason for interfering with the enhanced sentence in appeal or revision, unless there has been a failure of justice by reason of such omission See sec. 225, see also Nga Hla v K E, 8 L B R 461, 18 Cr.L.J. 79, where it has been held that the omission to state the fact, date and place of previous conviction is not material where the previous conviction was put to the accused and admitted by him before judgment was passed

The previous conviction must be entered in the charge and the accused should be called on to plead thereto, the mere admission by the accused that he had once been in jail is insufficient to show that he pleaded guilty to a previous conviction—K E v Govind Sakharam 4 Bom L R 177

Fact, date, place of previous conviction.—When a person is charged with previous convictions, it is not sufficient to state that the accused is an 'old offender', as that does not sufficiently bring home to the accused person the particular offence or class of offences which renders him liable to a more severe sentence than would otherwise be imposed—In re Yip pokka, 2 Weir 266 If the fact, date and place of the previous conviction are not stated, no enhanced sentence can be passed on the accused—Emp v. Haidar, 1883 A.W.N. 110. But where the accused was at the time lying under sentence of the previous conviction referred to, the omission to mention the particulars of the previous conviction would in no way prejudice the accused and would afford no ground for interfering with the enhanced sentence—Emp v. Raghub Ali, 1881 A.W.N. 32.

In passing an order under sec. 565 it is not necessary that the details of the previous conviction should be mentioned in the charge—Emp. v Jhagru, 9 N.L.R. 88, 14 Cr.L.J. 390 (cited under sec. 565).

222. (1) The charge shall contain such particulars as to the time and place of the alleged offence, and the person (if any) against whom, or the thing (if any) in respect of which, it was committed, as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

(2) When the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, it shall be sufficient to specify the gross sum in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed, and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed, without specifying particular items or exact dates, and the charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of Section 234 :

Provided that the time included between the first and last of such dates shall not exceed one year.

725. Particulars as to time, place etc. :—The charge must contain sufficient particulars as to time, place, person and circumstance, so that the accused may have notice of the matter with which he is charged—Q. E. v Fakirappa, 15 Bom 491; Oates v. Emp., 38 C.L.J. 163. A charge for house-breaking and theft is bad for vagueness if it does not specify the articles stolen or the name of the person whose house was broken into, and omits to mention one of the places where the offences were committed—Subbadu v K E., 28 M.L.J. 381, 16 Cr.L.J. 298. A charge of defamation is defective if it does not set forth the particular occasion on which it was committed—Bishwanath v. Keshab, 30 Cal 402. Where a charge of dacoity under secs 395 and 397 I. P. C. did not specify the dates on which the looting took place, held that the conviction must be quashed, as the charge did not give the accused sufficient notice and particulars of what they had to meet—In re Gam Mallu, 49 Mad 74, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513. A conviction under sec 377 I P C. is illegal on a charge which does not set forth the time, place or the person with whom the offence was committed, but only states that the accused habitually wore women's clothes and exhibited physical signs of having committed that offence—Q. E. v. Khairati, 6 All. 204. In charge of adultery it is sometimes impossible to specify the particular date or dates on which the sexual intercourse took place; it is sufficient to specify two dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed—Bhola Nath v. Emp., 51 Cal. 488 (492), 28 C.W.N. 323, 25 Cr.L.J. 997.

726. Subsection (2).—This sub-section did not exist in the Code of 1882. The ruling in Ekram Ali v. Q. E., 2 C.W.N. 341 and Q. E. v. Pursotam, 24 Cal. 193 to the effect that particular items and exact dates of the misappropriation must be mentioned is no longer good law. As the law stood before, there was great difficulty in convicting where there was a running account and where the prosecution were unable to put their hands on a specified item out of which the particular sum was embezzled; also, there was the difficulty of joinder of charges under sec. 234. These difficulties have been removed after 1898—Khurod Kumar v. Emp., 29 C.W.N. 54, 40 C.L.J. 555

This sub-section applies only to a charge of criminal breach of trust or misappropriation; it does not apply to a charge under sec. 477A I.P.C.—Kalka Prosad v. Emp., 38 All. 42; Q. E. v. Matilal, 26 Cal. 560; Raman Behari v. Emp., 41 Cal. 722, or to a charge of cheating—Raja Khan v. K. E. 1 A.L.J. 599

Again, it applies only to misappropriation of money, and not to misappropriation in respect of a number of trees—Raghavendra v. Emp., (1911) 2 M.W.N. 467, 12 Cr.L.J. 567

727. Gross sum only should be mentioned:—This is an enabling section and it enacts that it is sufficient to specify the aggregate sum without going into details. It dispenses with the necessity of enumeration of various items, but it does not prohibit such enumeration—Emp. v. Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49. It is optional with the complainant either to mention the gross sum or to specify all the items misappropriated. And this section does not make compulsory either the one or the other. The complainant may choose to specify all the particular items instead of mentioning the gross sum, and this will be treated as a mere superfluity but not an illegality—Samiruddin v. Nibaran, 31 Cal. 928; or the complainant may mention only the gross amount even where the particular items can be specified—Thomas v. Emp., 29 Mad. 558

But although it is sufficient to frame a general charge of the gross amount, the Magistrate should also see that the charge does not become so general as to be vague, and the accused is not prejudiced thereby—Mahammad Shah v. Crown, 1907 P.W.R. 16. Though it is sufficient to mention only the gross sum and not necessarily the particular items, still the prosecution must prove what total sum the accused has unlawfully expended or failed to account for, in such a way as to leave no doubt that he has been engaged in a criminal misappropriation and how that total sum is made up. There must be a definite finding of a certain definite sum traced to the accused and clearly shown to have been wilfully are not stated, no enhanced sentence can be passed on the accused—Emp v. Haidar, 1883 A.W.N. 110. But where the accused was at the time lying under sentence of the previous conviction referred to, the omission to mention the particulars of the previous conviction would in no way prejudice the accused and would afford no ground for interfering with the enhanced sentence—Emp v. Raghib Ali, 1881 A.W.N. 32.

In passing an order under sec. 565 it is not necessary that the details of the previous conviction should be mentioned in the charge—Emp. v. Jhagru, 9 N.L.R. 88, 14 Cr.L.J. 390 (cited under sec. 565).

222. (1) The charge shall contain such particulars as to the time and place of the alleged offence, and the person (if any) against whom, or the thing (if any) in respect of which, it was committed, as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

(2) When the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, it shall be sufficient to specify the gross sum in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed, and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed, without specifying particular items or exact dates, and the charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of Section 234:

Provided that the time included between the first and last of such dates shall not exceed one year.

725. Particulars as to time, place etc.—The charge must contain sufficient particulars as to time, place, person and circumstance, so that the accused may have notice of the matter with which he is charged—Q E v. Fakirappa, 15 Bom. 491; Oates v. Emp., 33 C.L.J. 163. A charge for house-breaking and theft is bad for vagueness if it does not specify the articles stolen or the name of the person whose house was broken into, and omits to mention one of the places where the offences were committed—Subbadu v. K E., 28 M.L.J. 381, 16 Cr.L.J. 293. A charge of defamation is defective if it does not set forth the particular occasion on which it was committed—Bishwanath v. Keshab, 30 Cal. 402. Where a charge of dacoity under secs 395 and 397 I.P.C. did not specify the dates on which the looting took place, held that the conviction must be quashed, as the charge did not give the accused sufficient notice and particulars of what they had to meet—In re Gam Mallu, 49 Mad 74, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513. A conviction under sec. 377 I.P.C. is illegal on a charge which does not set forth the time, place or the person with whom the offence was committed, but only states that the accused habitually wore women's clothes and exhibited physical signs of having committed that offence—Q. E. v. Khairati, 6 All. 204. In charge of adultery it is sometimes impossible to specify the particular date or dates on which the sexual intercourse took place; it is sufficient to specify two dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed—Bhola Nath v. Emp., 51 Cal. 488 (492), 28 C.W.N. 323, 25 Cr.L.J. 997.

726. Subsection (2)—This sub-section did not exist in the Code of 1882. The ruling in Ekram Ali v. Q. E., 2 C.W.N. 341 and Q. E. v. Pursotam, 24 Cal. 193 to the effect that particular items and exact dates of the misappropriation must be mentioned is no longer good law. As the law stood before, there was great difficulty in convicting where there was a running account and where the prosecution were unable to put their hands on a specified item out of which the particular sum was embezzled; also, there was the difficulty of joinder of charges under sec. 234. These difficulties have been removed after 1898—Khirood Kumar v. Emp., 29 C.W.N. 54, 40 C.L.J. 555.

This sub-section applies only to a charge of criminal breach of trust or misappropriation; it does not apply to a charge under sec. 477A I.P.C.—Kalka Prosad v. Emp., 38 All. 42, Q. E. v. Matilal, 26 Cal. 560; Raman Behari v. Emp., 41 Cal. 722, or to a charge of cheating—Raja Khan v. K. E. 1 A.L.J. 599.

Again, it applies only to misappropriation of money, and not to misappropriation in respect of a number of trees—Raghavendra v. Emp., (1911) 2 M.W.N. 467, 12 Cr.L.J. 567.

727. Gross sum only should be mentioned :—This is an enabling section and it enacts that it is sufficient to specify the aggregate sum without going into details. It dispenses with the necessity of enumeration of various items, but it does not prohibit such enumeration—Emp. v. Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49. It is optional with the complainant either to mention the gross sum or to specify all the items misappropriated. And this section does not make compulsory either the one or the other. The complainant may choose to specify all the particular items instead of mentioning the gross sum, and this will be treated as a mere superfluity but not an illegality—Samiruddin v. Nibaran, 31 Cal. 928; or the complainant may mention only the gross amount even where the particular items can be specified—Thomas v. Emp., 29 Mad. 558.

But although it is sufficient to frame a general charge of the gross amount, the Magistrate should also see that the charge does not become so general as to be vague, and the accused is not prejudiced thereby—Mahammad Shah v. Crown, 1907 P.W.R. 16. Though it is sufficient to mention only the gross sum and not necessarily the particular items, the prosecution must prove what total sum the accused has unlawfully expended or failed to account for, in such a way as to leave no doubt that he has been engaged in a criminal misappropriation, and that the total sum is made up. There must be a definite finding of a definite sum traced to the accused and clearly shown to have been and unlawfully appropriated to his own use. It is not sufficient to fling into the charge an alleged balance or net profit which the accused, an agent of the complainant, is supposed to have earned, and say that in respect of that net profit he is guilty of misappropriation of every rupee which he cannot produce or explain—Mohan Singh v. Emp., 42 All. 522.

If the particular items are specified, the charge will not be illegal by reason of the fact that the items exceed three in number—Emp. v. Gulzari Lal, 24 All 254. This section is not controlled by sec 234 but rather modifies it.

728. "Charge so framed.....charge of one offence"
—This section clearly admits of the trial of any number of acts of breach of trust committed within the year as amounting only to one offence—Emp. v. Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49. A charge in respect of a gross sum without specifying several items is a charge of one offence and not of several offences—Emp. v. Ibrahim, 33 All 36, 7 A.L.J. 897, 11 Cr L.J. 442. Where an accused person is tried on charges of criminal breach of trust in respect of two cheques and also on another charge in respect of a gross sum made up of three distinct items which might have been but were not specified, the trial is in fact not on five distinct charges but is only for three offences (2 cheques plus gross sum) and is therefore legal under sec. 234—Thomas v. Emp., 29 Mad 558; see also Emp. v. Ishaq, 27 All. 69; Sat Narain v. Emp., 32 Cal 1085.

This sub-section enacts that the charge in respect of a gross sum shall be treated as a charge for one offence within the meaning of sec. 234, but it does not provide that the several acts of misappropriation will be treated as forming one transaction within the meaning of sec. 235—Kasi Viswanathan v. Emp., 30 Mad. 328.

'One year':—The time covered by the several acts must not be more than one year, where the charges related to items misappropriated in the course of two years, the conviction was quashed—Dhanjibhoy v. Kaim Khan, 1905 P.R 14. Thus, where the accused was charged with committing criminal breach of trust in respect of eight necklaces, and it was found that the breach of trust in respect of one necklace happened in February 1922, and with regard to another in January 1924, held that the trial was vitiated. Sec 235 did not apply, as the act of breach of trust in respect of each necklace was a separate transaction—Raman Lal v. Emp., 49 All 312, 25 A.L.J. 317, 28 Cr L.J 171.

223. When the nature of the case is such that the

When manner of committing offence particulars mentioned in Sections 221 and 222 do not give the accused sufficient notice of the matter with which he is charged, the charge shall also contain such particulars of the manner in which the alleged offence was committed as will be sufficient for that purpose.

When manner of committing offence must be stated.

Illustrations.

(a) A is accused of the theft of a certain article at a certain time and place. The charge need not set out the manner in which the theft was effected.

(b) A is accused of cheating B at a given time and place. The charge must set out the manner in which A cheated B.

(c) A is accused of giving false evidence at a given time and place. The charge must set out that portion of the evidence given by A which is alleged to be false.

(d) A is accused of obstructing B, a public servant, in the discharge of his public functions at a given time and place. The charge must set out the manner in which A obstructed B in the discharge of his functions.

(e) A is accused of the murder of B at a given time and place. The charge need not state the manner in which A murdered B.

(f) A is accused of disobeying a direction of the law with intent to save B from punishment. The charge must set out the disobedience charged and the law infringed.

729. The question as to whether further particulars are necessary under this section is a question of discretion in each case—Kudrutula v Emp, 39 Cal 781 In a case of cheating, the charge must set out the manner in which the offence was committed. Whether the words of the charge are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the accusation which he has got to meet, depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. The omission to state the manner of cheating is regarded as material or not according as the accused has or has not in fact been misled by the omission and the omission has or has not occasioned a failure of justice (see 225 III. b and c)—Kedar Nath v. Emp., 29 C.W.N. 408, 41 C.L.J 172, 26 Cr L.J 849 Where the manner of the cheating was set out as follows.—“By deceiving with false representations and promises as well as by conduct,” held that the expression used was too vague and indefinite to give the accused proper notice of the manner of deceit—Kedar Nath v Emp., (supra)

A charge of an attempt to cheat must specify the person attempted to be cheated and the manner in which the attempt was made—Emp. v Imam Ali, 8 C.W.N 278

224. In every charge words used in describing an offence shall be deemed to have been used in the sense attached to them respectively by the law under which such offence is punishable.

Words in charge taken in sense of law under which offence is punishable.

225. No error in stating either the offence or the particulars required to be stated in the charge, and no omission to state the offence or those particulars, shall be regarded at any stage of the case as material, unless the accused was in fact misled by such error or omission, and it has occasioned a failure of justice.

Effect of errors

Illustrations.

(a) A is charged, under section 242 of the Indian Penal Code, with "having been in possession of counterfeit coin, having known at the time when he became possessed thereof that such coin was counterfeit," the word "fraudulently" being omitted in the charge. Unless it appears that A was in fact misled by this omission, the error shall not be regarded as material.

"A" is charged with cheating B, and the manner in which he cheated B is not set out in the charge. There were many transactions between A and B, and A had no means of knowing as to which of them the charge referred, and offered no defence. The Court may infer from such facts that the omission to set out the manner of the cheating was, in the case, a material error.

(c) A is charged with cheating B, and the manner in which he cheated B is not set out in the charge. There were many transactions between A and B, and A had no means of knowing as to which of them the charge referred, and offered no defence. The Court may infer from such facts that the omission to set out the manner of the cheating was, in the case, a material error.

(d) A is charged with the murder of Khoda Baksh on the 21st January 1882. In fact the murdered person's name was Haidar Baksh, and the date of the murder was the 20th January 1882. A was never charged with any murder but one and had heard the inquiry before the Magistrate, which referred exclusively to the case of Haider Baksh. The Court may infer from these facts that A was not misled, and that the error in the charge was immaterial.

(e) A was charged with murdering Haidar Baksh on the 20th January 1882 and Khoda Baksh (who tried to arrest him for that murder) on the 21st January 1882. When charged for the murder of Haider Baksh, he was tried for the murder of Khoda Baksh. The witnesses present in his defence were witnesses in the case of Haidar Baksh. The Court may infer from this that A was misled and that the error was material.

730. Error or omission:—When the common objects of an unlawful assembly were to steal mangoes and to cause the death of a person, and the Judge in summing up the case to the jury spoke of the two objects, but the charge mentioned only the latter object, it was held that the omission to specify both the objects in the charge was material, in as much as it is difficult to say which of the two common objects had been accepted by the jury; and if the jury had accepted that object which was not mentioned in the charge, there had been a failure of justice—Sabir v. Q. E., 22 Cal. 276. When the charge against the accused was that he embezzled some deeds but he was convicted of embezzling some amounts obtained by dealing with those deeds, it was held that the charge was materially defective and the conviction must be set aside—Bipra Das v. Nirodamani, 12 C.W.N. 577.

Where the common object of the unlawful assembly was set out in the complaint and was found by the Magistrate, but was not mentioned in the charge, but it appeared that the accused had been in no way prejudiced by the omission in the charge, held that sec. 225 applied and the omission did not vitiate the trial—Emp v. Jeshwant, 28 Bom L.R. 497, 27 Cr.L.J. 744, following Basiruddi v. Q. E., 21 Cal 827. Where the charge did not mention the common object of the unlawful assembly but there was ample material in the evidence on the record to show that the accused were members of an unlawful assembly and to show what their common object was, held that the omission was not a ground for setting aside the conviction—Basiruddi v. Q. E., (supra). A charge of sedition is not defective if it omits to state the particular passages or particular words used by the accused; it is sufficient if the substance of the words is set out. Even if it is defective, it will be cured by this section—Emp. v. Tribhuvan, 33 Bom 77; In re Mylapore Krishnasami, 32 Mad. 384; Chidambaram v. Emp, 32 Mad. 3 (12). In a charge under sec 420 I P. C. it is proper to state the exact date on which the offence is alleged to have been committed, but when the time of the alleged offence is approximately indicated and there is nothing to show that the omission to give the exact date has materially prejudiced the accused at his trial, the omission does not affect the legality of the trial—Farzand v. Emp, 27 Cr.L.J. 909 (Pat.). The omission of words such as "dishonestly" or "unlawfully," or "in British India" is not material, and is cured by this section—Reg. v. Rakhma, 10 B.H.C.R. 373; Amritlal v. Emp., 42 Cal. 957.

If the charge is drawn up clumsily or in a somewhat informal manner, but is sufficiently explicit as to give the accused notice of the charge, the irregularity will be cured by this section—Emp v. Tribhuvan, 33 Bom 77; Bachchu v Piyara, 2 Luck. 430, 4 O.W.N. 341, 28 Cr.L.J. 469.

Test to determine whether error is material :—In determining whether the error or omission has occasioned a failure of justice the Court should have regard to the manner in which the accused has conducted his defence and to the nature of the objection—Reg v. Rakhma, 10 B.H.C.R. 373; Q. E. v. Ramji, 10 Bom 124. Where the charge did not correctly set out the facts of the case for the prosecution upon which it was founded, but it was clear from the answer which the accused gave to the Court when examined under the provisions of sec. 342 that he understood exactly what the case against him was, held that the defect in the framing of the charge did not prejudice the accused in any way—Gokul v. Emp., 29 C.W.N. 493, 26 Cr.L.J. 906. Where the accused did not make any objection to the defect in the form of charge, at the earliest possible occasion, and as a matter of fact no protest was made either in the Appellate Court or in the Revisional Court below, and they know perfectly well what offences they were charged with, held that the irregularity had not occasioned any failure of justice—Bachchu v. Piyara, 2 Luck 430, 4 O.W.N. 341, 28 Cr.L.J. 409; see also Chidambaram v Emp., 32 Mad 3 (12, 13).

Duty of Magistrate :—Where a charge is erroneous as to the intention with which the offence was committed, it is the duty of the Magistrate, before convicting the accused for committing the offence with a different intention, to amend the charge to that effect so as to give notice to the accused of what he is charged with. Thus, where the charge was house-breaking with intention to commit theft, but it was found that the intention was criminal intrigue with a woman in the complainant's house, the Magistrate, before convicting the accused of house-breaking with the latter intention, should clearly draw up a charge to that effect—Mahomed Hosam v Emp 41 Cal. 743; Hajari v. K. E., 26 C.W.N. 344. But see Karali Prasad v. K E, 44 Cal 358 in which it has been held under the identical circumstances that it is not necessary for the Magistrate to amend the charge; the accused having been charged with criminal trespass with a guilty intention, it is competent to the Court to convict him with criminal trespass with some other guilty intention, and in such a case the accused is not in fact prejudiced by the conviction.

226. When any person is committed for trial

Procedure on commitment without charge or with imperfect charge.

without a charge or with an imperfect or erroneous charge, the Court, or, in the case of a High Court, the Clerk of the Crown, may frame a charge or add to or otherwise alter the charge, as the case may be, having regard to the rules contained in this Code as to the form of charges.

Illustrations.

1. A is charged with the murder of C. A charge of abetting the murder of C may be added or substituted.

2. A is charged with forging a valuable security under Section 467 of the Indian Penal Code. A charge of fabricating false evidence under Section 193 may be added.

3. A is charged with receiving stolen property knowing it to be stolen. During the trial it incidentally appears that he has in his possession instruments for the purpose of counterfeiting coin. A charge under section 235 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be added.

731. "Charge" :—Throughout this Code, the word 'charge' is generally used as the statement of a specific offence and not as indicating the entire series of offences of which a prisoner is accused, and it is in the former sense that the word is used in this and the following sections—Q. E. v. Appa Subhana, 8 Bom 200

'Without charge'.—These words apply not only to the cases where there is no charge at all, but also to cases in which there is no charge in respect of such offence as the Sessions Judge or Clerk of the Crown may think the accused ought to be tried for—Q. E. v. Appa, 8 Bom 200.

'Frame a charge'.—At the beginning of the trial, if the Judge finds that the Magistrate has omitted to frame a charge, he may supply the omission and frame the charge that is made out on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate—Dodo v. Emp., 9 S.L.R. 37, 16 Cr.L.J. 573

732. Addition of charge—If the charge framed by the Magistrate is imperfect or erroneous, the Sessions Judge may alter or add to the charge, having regard to the offences disclosed in the evidence recorded by the Magistrate. But the Sessions Judge cannot go beyond the evidence recorded by the Magistrate, in adding to or altering the charge. He cannot add or alter a charge upon the evidence recorded by himself at the trial. If he does so, the effect is that he takes cognizance of an offence without any preliminary inquiry in respect of it by the Magistrate and the provisions of sec. 193 of this Code are rendered nugatory. Thus, where the charge drawn up by the Magistrate was under sec. 202 I.P.C., and the Sessions Judge, on the application of the Public Prosecutor, added a charge for an offence under secs 109 and 201 I. P. C. upon the evidence of a person who was examined as a witness for the first time by the Sessions Judge, it was held that the action of the Judge was ultra vires, and the addition of the charge was not merely an error of procedure but an improper assumption of jurisdiction—Rama Varma v. Q., 3 Mad. 351. It is doubtful even if section 227 intended to confer jurisdiction on a Sessions Judge to add or substitute a new charge on fresh evidence led or to be led in the Sessions Court for the first time—Emp. v. Stewart, 21 S.L.R. 55, 27 Cr.L.J. 1217 (1224).

Again, the Sessions Court can add or alter a charge with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal, and not with regard to a matter not covered by the indictment. Thus, where a prosecution was instituted by A on a charge under sec 417 I. P. C and the Sessions Judge altered the charge into one for an offence under sec. 420 I. P. C for cheating B, it was held that the procedure was illegal inasmuch as there was no complaint by B, and the prosecution was instituted by a person in respect of a matter with which B was not concerned, and the Magistrate did not commit the accused with respect to any offence committed against B—Birendra v. Emp., 32 Cal 22. Similarly, where the accused was committed to the Sessions for the murder of A, the Sessions Judge could not add a charge for causing grievous hurt to B—Shah Din v. Crown, 1909 P.W.R. 20, 11 Cr.L.J. 131. (In 8 All. 665, however, such a procedure was not treated as an illegality but a mere irregularity, and the High Court refused to interfere because no prejudice was caused to the accused) But where the committing Magistrate committed the accused for the murder of A and for causing grievous hurt,

B, the Sessions Judge could add a charge for the murder of B—Hussenulla v Emp., 28 C.W.N. 561, 26 Cr.L.J. 5.

The Sessions Judge's power to add a charge is not fettered by the fact that a complaint in respect of it had been previously preferred before the Magistrate and dismissed by him—Q. E. v. Vajiram, 16 Bom. 414

Power to expunge a charge.—The Sessions Judge has power to frame, add or alter a charge, but he has no power to expunge a charge duly framed by the committing Magistrate—Emp. v. Porehollah, 7 C.L.R. 143.

Charge when can be added or altered.—Though the Sessions Judge has power to add a charge at any stage of the proceedings before judgment, still he should exercise a sound and wise discretion, and he does not exercise such a discretion when he adds a new and grave charge after the close of the defence—K. E. v. Mathura, 6 C.W.N. 72. A charge cannot be altered after delivery of verdict—Shek Ali, 5 B.H.C.R. 9.

733. Alteration of charge.—The Sessions Judge can substitute a charge of abetment for a charge of the substantive offence—Reg v. Govind, 11 B.H.C.R. 278. If the committing Magistrate does not frame a charge with separate heads for each distinct offence, the defect may be remedied by the Sessions Judge—In re Kalaram, 7 W.R. 8. In a case in which the accused was charged with 45 offences and committed to the Sessions, the proper procedure is to amend the charge and to hold separate trials and not to confine the prosecution to three heads of charges, acquitting the accused of all the rest—Emp v Sreenath, 8 Cal. 450

Altering a charge includes the withdrawal of a charge which has been added by the Sessions Judge after commitment—Dwarka Lal v. Mahadeo, 12 All 551

227. (1) Any Court may alter or add to any charge
Court may alter charge. at any time before judgment is pronounced, or in the case of trials before the Court of Session or High Court, before the verdict of the jury is returned or the opinions of the assessors are expressed.

(2) Every such alteration or addition shall be read and explained to the accused.

734. Addition or amendment of charge.—Where a Magistrate summoned the accused under a certain section of the Penal Code, but the evidence disclosed an offence under another section, he can amend the charge—Buroo Sardar v. Ariff, 26 Cr.L.J. 302 (Cal.). When facts are proved constituting an aggravated offence, the Magistrate must either alter the charge under this section, or refer the case under sec. 347—Kuttava v. Suppan, 25 L.W. 86, 23 Cr.L.J. 164 (166)

In amending a charge, the Magistrate should not write over the original charge but should leave it on the file for reference and should write the new charge separately—Nga Pan v. Emp., 8 Bur. L.T. 17, 16 Cr L.J. 2.

The Court in substituting one charge for another cannot ignore the preliminary requisites of a charge; thus a charge for rape cannot be altered into a charge for adultery, because the complaint of the husband is a preliminary requisite in the latter offence—Chemion v. Emp., 29 Cal. 415; nor can the Court alter a charge of rape into a charge for rape and adultery in the alternative—Emp v Kallu, 5 All 233. See notes under sec 199.

But the power to add a charge is not limited by the terms of the certificate under section 188. Once a certificate has been obtained, the Court has power to add any charge for any offence disclosed by the facts though not specified in the certificate—Emp v Krishna Nath, 33 All. 514. See Note 581 under sec. 188.

Where a prisoner has been extradited for dacoity, the Court may alter the charge of dacoity into theft—Q E v Khoda, 17 Bom. 369

Power of Sessions Court:—It is doubtful if section 227 intended to confer jurisdiction on a Sessions Court to add or substitute a new charge on fresh evidence led or to be led in the Sessions Court for the first time. The object of preliminary inquiry and commitment by a Magistrate would be frustrated if a fresh charge is substituted or added in the Sessions Court on which the prosecution have not led evidence even in the Sessions Court but intend to lead evidence—Emp. v. Stewart, 21 S.L.R. 55, 27 Cr.L.J. 1217 (1224), Rama Varma v. Q, 3 Mad 351. A Court of Session, though vested with large powers of amending and adding to charges, can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal, and not with regard to a matter not covered by the indictment—Muthu Goundan v Emp., 27 M.L.T. 231, 21 Cr.L.J. 57.

Amendment must not prejudice accused—Although this section gives power to the Court to add to or alter a charge, still this power should be exercised with discretion, and it is the duty of the Court to see that the accused is not prejudiced by the addition or alteration of the charges—Dodo v. Emp., 9 S.L.R. 37; Reg v Govindas, 6 B.H.C.R. 76. Thus, an addition of a grave charge or alteration of a charge at a late stage of the proceedings would prejudice the accused in his defence and would be illegal. See K. E. v. Madura, 6 C.W.N. 72; Emp. v. Isaf Mahomed, 31 Bom. 218. Where during the trial of an accused person upon specific charges in a Court of Session, it is found at the conclusion of the trial that the charges as framed disclose no offence against the accused, it is illegal and prejudicial to the accused to alter or amend the charges and to convict him thereon without affording him an opportunity of meeting the amended or altered charges. The fact that the accused cross-examined the prosecution witnesses to prove the unsustainability of the charges as originally framed, is no ground for holding that by substantially altering the charges the accused was not prejudiced—Muthu Goundan v. Emp., 27 M.L.T. 231, 21 Cr L.J. 57. It is open to a Sessions Judge to add an alternative charge, but it is not a proper exercise of discretion to withdraw the charge (of an offence triable by jury) which the committing Magistrate thought to be proved, and to put the accused under a disadvantage by substituting another charge (of offences triable with assessors) so that he might be deprived of the right of trial by jury—Ramsundar v. Emp. 5 Pat. 238, 7 P.L.T. 178, 27 Cr.L.J. 512.

Amendment cannot cure illegality.—An illegal charge cannot be amended or altered, and such amendment will not cure the illegality. Thus, where a charge is drawn up of 4 offences, it is wholly illegal under sec 234, and the illegality cannot be cured by striking out one of the offences, and convicting the accused for the remaining three—Manavala Chetty v. Empress, 29 Mad. 569, Chetto v. Emp., 49 Cal. 555. So also, where a Magistrate at first framed a charge under secs 352 and 504 I. P. Code, but finding that the two distinct offences which were in no way connected with one another could not be tried together, he struck out the charge framed and framed a charge under sec. 504 alone, held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was illegal—Krishna Marthi v. Narayanaswami, 49 M.L.J. 93, 26 Cr.L.J. 1618.

735. Addition or alteration when to be made :—A charge must be amended before the judgment is pronounced. If a charge is defective e.g. if more than three offences are included in one charge, which is invalid under section 234, the Magistrate cannot remedy the defect by saying in his judgment that he would proceed on only three charges. If he wishes to strike out any of the charges he should do so before concluding the trial, and should give the accused an opportunity of making such defence as he thinks fit; otherwise the trial is vitiated—Chetto v. Emp., 49 Cal. 555, 24 Cr.L.J. 86.

Although a charge may be added or altered at any time before the judgment is pronounced, still it is illegal to do so at a late stage of the proceedings, e.g., after the prosecution case has been closed and the defence evidence has been recorded—Emp. v. Isaf Mahomed, 31 Bom. 218; K. E. v. Madura, 6 C.W.N. 72.

If the complainant compounds the offence, the Court should acquit the accused upon the presentation of the petition of composition, and has no power to alter the charge already drawn up—Hasta v. Crown, 1914 P.R. 29, 16 Cr.L.J. 81.

In a trial by jury or assessors, the Sessions Court has no power to alter the charge after the delivery of the verdict of the jury or the opinion of the assessors—Reg. v. Shek Ali, 5 B.H.C.R. 9; Harbans v. Crown, 1916 P.R. 33, 17 Cr.L.J. 454. The words "return of verdict" mean the return of the final verdict which the Judge is bound to record—Q. E. v. Appa Subhana, 8 Bom. 200.

*Application for alteration of charge :—*An application for alteration of charge must be made immediately after the original charge has been read and explained by the Magistrate—In re Abdul Rahman, 27 Cal. 839; and the Magistrate should consider the application at once and not postpone passing his order on the application—Q. E. v. Vajram, 16 Bom. 414.

736. Sub-section (2) :—An alteration of charge must be read over and explained to the accused. It is not the intention of the legislature to empower a Court to convict an accused person of an offence of which he has not been told anything. Where a person was summoned to answer a charge under sec. 34 Police Act, but the Magistrate finding that the facts did not prove such offence, convicted him under sec. 279 I. P. C. without his being informed of the alteration of the charge, held that the conviction was illegal—Dhum Singh v. Emp., 23 A.L.J. 436, 26 Cr.L.J. 1057, Raghunath v. Emp., 24 A.L.J. 168, 27 Cr.L.J. 152. When a new charge was read aloud to the jury but was not specially explained to the prisoner, and he was not called upon to plead to that charge, but his counsel on being asked did not require a new trial (under sec. 229), it was held that the accused was not prejudiced by the addition of the new charge, and the omission did not affect the trial—Q. E. v. Appasubhana, 8 Bom. 200.

228. If the charge framed or alteration or addition made under section 226 or section 227 is such that proceeding immediately with the trial is not likely, in the opinion of the Court, to prejudice the accused in his defence or the prosecutor in the conduct of the case, the Court may, in its discretion, after such charge or alteration or addition has been framed or made, proceed with the trial as if the new or altered charge had been the original charge.

737. The addition or alteration of a charge does not open up the trial from the beginning, and the Court may immediately proceed with the trial if it is of opinion that there will be no prejudice to the accused. If the accused has already been examined under sec. 342, before the amendment of the charge and before he has been called upon to enter on his defence, it is not incumbent on the Court to re-examine the accused after the amendment of the charge—Shamlal v. K. E., 1 Pat. 54, 3 P.L.T. 91, 23 Cr.L.J. 146.

229. If the new or altered or added charge is such that proceeding immediately with the trial is likely, in the opinion of the Court, to prejudice the accused or the prosecutor as aforesaid, the Court may either direct a new trial or adjourn the trial for such period as may be necessary.

738. New trial :—See Q. E. v. Appa Subhana, 8 Bom. 200 (cited in Note 736 under sec. 227) where the right to a new trial was waived.

Where the original and the altered charges are nearly related to each other (the original charge being one of murder, and the altered charge being one of abetment of murder), and the accused did not object to the amendment, it was held that there was no such material prejudice as would have necessitated a new trial under this section—Reg v. Govind, 11 B.H.C.R. 278. If, however, the amendment of charge would raise different questions of law and would admit of a different line of defence, the accused would be prejudiced and a new trial would be necessary—Reg v. Govindas, 6 B.H.C.R. 76.

In a new trial, the Court would not be justified in referring to the record of the former trial as a whole, but he may refer to such depositions as are especially put in evidence—In re Devi Dutt, 7 C.L.R. 193

230. If the offence stated in the new or altered or added charge is one for the prosecution of which previous sanction is necessary, the case shall not be proceeded with until such sanction is obtained, unless sanction has been already obtained for a prosecution on the same facts as those on which the new or altered charge is founded.

739. Sanction for one offence, conviction for another :—The mere fact that the sanctioning authority is of opinion that the facts constitute an offence under one section of the Act is in itself no bar to a conviction of the accused person for another offence under another section, provided of course that the facts stated in the order giving sanction are the same as those upon which the conviction is based. In such a case it is not necessary that fresh consent to the trial upon such altered charge would have to be given by the sanctioning authority. Section 230 makes full provision for a case of this kind—Amar Singh v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 31, 21 Cr L J 230

Where sanction has been obtained in respect of a substantive offence, it will avail in respect of abetment of such offence, and no fresh sanction is necessary. Therefore where sanction was obtained for the prosecution of a Sub-Registrar for an offence under sec. 468 I. P. C., the trial of the Sub-Registrar for the abetment of that offence required no further sanction—Prafulla v. Emp, 30 Cal. 905

231. Whenever a charge is altered or added to by the Court after the commencement of the trial, the prosecutor and the accused shall be allowed to recall or re-summon, and examine with reference to such alteration or addition, any witness who may have been examined, and also to call any further witness whom the Court may think to be material.

740. Recall of witnesses :—Under this section, it is imperative on a Court, when it alters or adds to a charge after the commencement of a trial, to allow the prosecutor and the accused to recall or resummon and examine, with reference to such alteration or addition, any witness who may have been examined and also to call any further witness whom it may deem material. If the Court adds or alters a charge after the commencement of the trial, without allowing the accused to recall and re-examine the witnesses, and the accused has been misled thereby, the High Court will order a new trial to be had upon a charge framed in the proper manner—Harbans v. Crown, 1916 P R. 33, 17 Cr.L J. 454. The provisions of sec. 231 are peremptory, and therefore when a charge is altered, the Court is bound to recall any witnesses which the prosecution or the accused desires, and the Judge cannot refuse to call them because the accused cannot show on what points further cross-examination is necessary—Chhanka v. Emp., 6 Pat. 832, 28 Cr.L.J 769 (771). Under this section the accused has the right to recall the prosecution witnesses after the alteration of the charge, even if that alteration does not affect his defence. The Magistrate has no discretion in the matter; he is bound to recall those witnesses whom the accused wishes to recall—In re Ramalinga, 52 Mad. 346, 30 Cr L J. 223 (224) Where the committing Magistrate at first framed a charge and then at a late stage of the commitment proceedings, altered the charge without giving the accused an opportunity of re-examining the witnesses for the prosecution and producing his defence in regard thereto, and committed the accused to the Sessions on the charge so altered, held that the procedure of the Magistrate was entirely illegal and likely to prejudice the accused in his trial before the Court of Session—Mohan Lal v Emp. 22 A L J 239, 25 Cr. L.J. 798

When a charge is amended, the accused has a right to recall and cross-examine all the prosecution witnesses. The right is not restricted to the recalling of those witnesses only who have deposed to the subject matter of the amendment in the charge—Hazara Singh v Emp., 26 Cr.L.J 1497 (Lah)

232. (1) If any Appellate Court, or the High Court in the exercise of its powers of revision or of its powers under Chapter XXVII, is of opinion that any person convicted of an offence was misled in his defence by the absence of a charge or by an error in the charge, it shall direct a new trial to be had upon a charge framed in whatever manner it thinks fit.

(2) If the Court is of opinion that the facts of the case are such that no valid charge could be preferred against the accused in respect of the facts proved, it shall quash the conviction.

Illustration.

A is convicted of an offence under section 196 of the Indian Penal Code upon a charge which omits to state that he knew the evidence, which he corruptly used or attempted to use as true or genuine, was false or fabricated. If the Court thinks it probable that A had such knowledge, and that he was misled in his defence by the omission from the charge of the statement that he had it, it shall direct a new trial upon an amended charge; but if it appears probable from the proceedings that A had no such knowledge, it shall quash the conviction.

741. Scope :—This section lays down that if any person convicted of an offence has been misled in his defence by the absence of a charge or by an error in the charge, a retrial is to be ordered; and this rule applies as well to cases in which the conviction was in compliance with the terms of the law as to cases in which the conviction was irregular—Mallu Gope v. Emp., 10 P.L.T. 875, 30 Cr.L.J. 891 (893), 1929 Cr. C. 584.

Errors in the charge :—If the High Court thinks that in consequence of material errors in a charge, the accused has been misled, it is bound to direct a new trial to be had upon a charge framed in the proper manner—Harbans v. Crown, 1916 P.R. 33, 17 Cr.L.J. 454. Where the owners of land were charged under sec 154 I P C for omission to give information of the riot to the thana, but they were convicted for the omission on the part of their agents, and not of themselves, it was held that the error in the charge prejudiced the accused, and a new trial was ordered by the Appellate Court—Sarat Chandra v. Emp., 7 C.W.N. 201. Where the charge framed against the accused was to the effect that they caused hurt under sec 324 I. P. C. to a certain person by means of a dao (a cutting instrument), but they were convicted under sec. 354 I. P. C. for assault with a lathi, it was held that the accused might have been prejudiced in his defence by this error in the charge and a retrial was ordered—Sital Chandra v. Emp., 17 C.W.N. 419, 14 Cr.L.J. 212.

742. Absence of charge :—Charge for one offence, conviction for another :—Where an accused person was summoned for offences under secs 143 and 379 I P. C., and the trying Magistrate drew up a charge only for the offence under sec 379 but convicted the accused only for the offence under sec 143 I P. C., held that the conviction must be set aside. The accused was summoned for two offences, and when the Magistrate framed a charge under sec 379, the accused had good reason to suppose that the other offence had been dropped by the Magistrate. Under such circumstance the accused was misled in his defence by the absence of a charge under sec 143 I. P. Code, and his conviction for that offence was therefore illegal—Hossein v. Kalu, 29 Cal. 481 (482). Where the accused were charged with and convicted of rioting and on appeal the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction for rioting, but convicted them for house-trespass and hurt, it was held that the latter offences, being distinct and separate offences from rioting, should have formed the subject of separate charges, and the accused had been prejudiced within the meaning of this section by the omission of charges for the latter offences—Yakub Ali v. Lethu, 30 Cal. 288. See also, Har Narain v. Emp., 18 C.W.N. 1274 and Genu Manjhi v. K. E., 18 C.W.N. 1276, where the conviction was quashed on similar grounds.

Where the accused was charged for dishonestly using as genuine a forged instrument, but was convicted for defamation, it was held that not only should the conviction be set aside, but also as there was nothing to show that any valid charge could be preferred against the accused for the offence of defamation, no trial could be held (see sub-sec. 2)—Gobinda Pershad v. Garth, 28 Cal. 63.

Joinder of Charges.

233. For every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge, and every such charge shall be tried separately, except in the cases mentioned in sections 234, 235, 236 and 239.

Separate charges for distinct offences.

Illustration

A is accused of a theft on one occasion, and of causing grievous hurt on another occasion. A must be separately charged and separately tried for the theft and causing grievous hurt.

743. Object of section :—The object of this section is to see that the accused is not bewildered in his defence by having to meet several charges in no way connected with one another—Ram Subheg v. K. E., 19 C.W.N. 972. Another object is that the mind of the Court might be prejudiced against the prisoner if he were tried in one trial upon different charges resting upon different evidence. It might be difficult for the Court trying him on one of the charges not to be unduly influenced by the evidence against him on the other charges—Q. E. v. Juala Prasad, 7 All. 174. If in any case the accused are likely to be bewildered in their defence by having to meet many disconnected charges, or the prospect of a fair trial is likely to be endangered by the production of a mass of evidence directed to many matters and tending by its mere accumulation to induce an undue suspicion against the accused, then the propriety of combining the charges may be questioned—Q. E. v. Fakirapa, 15 Bom. 491; Rasul v. Emp., 3 Luck. 664, 5 O.W.N. 612, 29 Cr.L.J. 801 (802).

The general law as to the trial of accused persons is embodied in this section which provides for separate trial of each accused person for every distinct offence, and the exceptions are laid down in sections 234, 235, 236 and 239 which must be strictly construed, so as not to defeat the right of independent trial conferred by the general law—Tepanidhi v. K. E., 5 P.L.J. 11, 1 P.L.T. 180, 21 Cr.L.J. 161.

744. Scope of section—These sections (233-239) relating to joinder of charges refer to the trial of the accused. The ruling in Subrahmaniya Aiyar's case, 25 Mad. 61 (cited below) cannot be extended to preliminary inquiries held by Magistrates committing a case to the Sessions, so as to render the commitment itself illegal on the ground of misjoinder of offences or offenders at the preliminary inquiry—In re Govinda, 26 Mad. 592, In re Sessions Judge, 35 M.L.J. 259, 20 Cr.L.J. 514. See notes under sec. 215. In a warrant case the trial proper does not begin until the accused is charged and called upon to answer. The stage up to then is only an inquiry and not a trial; and therefore where the accused are discharged under sec. 253 (i.e. before frame of charge), no question of illegality of joint trial arises—Manbodh v. Jhaboolal, 30 Cr.L.J. 404 (Nag.), 1929 Cr. C. 261.

This section applies not only to warrant cases, but also to summons cases, although it is not necessary to frame a charge in the latter cases. Therefore a joint trial and conviction for several distinct offences in summons cases is illegal—K. E. v. San Dun, 3 L.B.R. 52, 2 Cr.L.J. 739. In summons cases, the intimation prescribed by sec. 242 takes the place of a formal charge, and each such charge has to be separately tried—Manna v. Emp., 9 N.L.R. 42, 14 Cr.L.J. 230 (231). This section also applies where the accused is charged with a summons case and a warrant case—K. E. v. Maung Gale, 3 L.B.R. 113, 3 Cr.L.J. 350.

It also applies to trials under the Bengal Excise Act, and the fact that the trial has taken place as in a summons case does not exclude the operation of this section—U. N. Biswas v. K. E., 41 Cal. 694, 18 C.W.N. 486.

Not only does this section apply to original trials, but the Appellate Court is also bound by it, thus, an Appellate Court acting under section 423 (1) (b) and altering the finding cannot act in contravention of the provisions of section 233—Sahib Singh v. K. E., 1905 P.R. 38.

Distinct offences :—When two offences are committed and each of these two offences has no connection with the other, they are distinct offences—Ram Subheg v. K. E., 19 C.W.N. 972.

745. What are distinct offences :—(1) Offences falling under different sections of the I. P. C., e.g., theft and escape from lawful custody—K. E. v. Po Hla, 3 L.B.R. 221; kidnapping a boy and assaulting the mother who demanded the boy—Chekutty v. Emp., 26 Mad. 454; theft and receiving stolen property—Karu Kalai v. Ram Charan, 28 Cal. 10; Bishnu v. Emp., 1 C.W.N. 35; receiving stolen property, and habitually dealing in stolen property—Emp. v. Uttom, 8 Cal. 634; criminal misappropriation and cheating—Parameshwar v. Emp., 13 C.W.N. 1089; offences under secs. 167 and 466 I. P. C.—Emp. v. Sreenath, 8 Cal. 450; offences under secs. 411 and 489C I. P. C.—Mohendra v. Emp., 29 Cal. 387; offences under secs. 454 and 325 I. P. C.—Nga Ta Pu v. K. E., 2 L.B.R. 19; offences under secs. 182 and 500 I. P. C.—Ram Sebak v. Emp., 37 Cal. 604; offences under sec. 352 and sec. 504 I. P. Code—Krishnamurthi v. Narayanaswami, 49 M.L.J. 93, 26 Cr.L.J. 1618; theft in a dwelling house and abetment of criminal breach of trust—Nikunja v. Q. E., 5 C.W.N. 294; abetment of falsification of document, and fraudulent destruction of document—Krishnasami v. Emp., 26 Mad. 125; theft and receiving illegal gratification for the restoration of stolen property—Nga Tivet v. K. E., 14 Bur. L.R. 67, offences under secs. 330 and 348 I. P. C.—K. E. v. Kumaramuthu, 25 M.L.T. 379, 20 Cr.L.J. 354; offence of belonging to a wandering gang of dacoits and the offence of committing dacoity—Emp. v. Lalji, 1882 A.W.N. 178; offences under secs. 411 and 458 I. P. C.—Jagga v. K. E., 1905 P.R. 51; simple hurt under sec. 323 I. P. C. and grievous hurt under section 325 I. P. C.—Radha Nath v. Emp., 50 Cal. 94; embezzlement of money (sec. 409 I. P. C.) and falsification of accounts (477A I. P. C.) covering items other than those embezzled—Emp. v. Kalka Prasad, 38 All. 42, 13 A.L.J. 1059.

(2) Offences committed on different occasions, even though the offences be of the same kind (i.e. falling under the same section of the I. P. C.); e.g. two attempts to cheat committed on two different dates—Johan v. K. E., 2 C.L.J. 618; or wrongful confinement and torture committed at several distinct times and places—K. E. v. Kumaramuthu, 20 Cr.L.J. 354, 25 M.L.T. 379, receiving stolen articles on different occasions, though the articles were the proceeds of a single burglary—Padmanabha v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 47, 21 Cr.L.J. 619.

Offences of giving false evidence by making two false statements on two different subjects, although in the course of one and the same deposition, must be tried separately as they are two distinct offences—Emp. v. Sejmaj Punamchand, 51 Bom. 310, 29 Bom. L.R. 170, 28 Cr.L.J. 373. See Note 775 under sec. 239.

(3) Offences committed against different persons—Moharuddi v. Jadunath, 11 C.W.N. 54, 4 Cr.L.J. 415, e.g. misappropriation of three sums of money from three distinct persons—Tilakdhari v. Emp., 6 C.L.J. 757; or cheating three persons—Musai Singh v. K. E., 41 Cal. 66, or hurt caused to two persons—Ram Subheg v. K. E., 19 C.W.N. 972; wrongful confinement of several persons on several occasions—K. E. v. Kumaramuthu, 25 M.L.T. 379, 20 Cr.L.J. 354; cheating ten different persons on different occasions—Girjadayal v. Emp., 25 O.C. 151.

(4) Offences in respect of distinct sums of money e.g., misappropriation of two sums of money collected on different dates—Asgar Ali v. K. E., 40 Cal. 846; misappropriation by the accused of three sums of money collected in accordance with their duty as tax-collectors from three persons—Tilakdhari v. Emp., 6 C.L.J. 757.

746. What are not distinct offences:—Offences of the same kind committed on one occasion though consisting of parts are not different offences but are to be treated as constituting one offence; e.g. the making of any number of false statements in the same deposition is one aggregate case of perjury, and charges need not be multiplied according to the number of false statements—Rakhal Chandra v. K. E., 36 Cal 808, 10 Cr.L.J. 150 Theft of two articles belonging to two different persons, committed at one and the same time, constitutes only one offence of theft and not two; and hence two convictions and sentences are not legal—Bhura v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1495 (Nag). If a person is found in possession of a number of stolen articles, the offence committed by the accused (receiving stolen property) is a single offence and not a number of offences, and it makes no difference whether the articles belong to a single owner or to different owners. But if there were evidence that the accused received the articles at different times or from different thieves, the case would be different—Emp. v. Sheo Charan, 45 All. 485 (486). The mere fact that property stolen on two different occasions is found at one and the same time in the possession of an accused is not of itself sufficient to prove that the accused has committed two different offences under sec. 411 I. P. C. (retaining stolen property), as it is quite possible that the property though stolen on two different occasions may have been received from the same thief at the same time—Q. E. v. Makhan, 15 All 317. So also, the mere fact that the goods stolen from two different persons are found in the possession of the accused will not be sufficient to try the accused on two separate charges under sec. 411 I. P. Code (receiving stolen property) and to sentence him for each of the charges, unless there is proof that he received them at different times or from different thieves. All the goods in the possession of the accused may have been stolen by the same thief and may have been delivered to the accused by him at the same time though stolen on different occasions. If the accused received all these goods at the same time, that would constitute only one offence—Ishan Muchi v. Q. E., 15 Cal. 511. In the absence of proof that a person accused of receiving stolen property received the stolen goods on different occasions, it is not permissible to charge, try and convict him in respect of each of them—Nga Kywet v. Q. E., 1 L.B.R. 39 Where several items of stolen property were found in the possession of the accused on the same date, held that the accused committed only one offence and in the absence of evidence that the different articles were received at different times, he could not be charged separately for each item of stolen property. consequently the trial of the accused in respect of some of the stolen articles barred a second trial in respect of the remaining articles—Ganesh Shaha v Emp., 50 Cal. 594; K. E. v. Bishun Singh, 3 Pat 503 (519), 5 P.L.T. 319, 25 Cr.L.J. 738 Receiving on one occasion various items of stolen property, the result of various thefts, is only one offence—K. E v Irappa, 3 Bom L.R. 187. So also, the stealing of several bullocks from the same man at the same time is but one offence, and there need not be as many charges as the number of bullocks stolen—Emp v. Raghu, 1881 A.W.N. 154. So also, misappropriation of several books of account in respect of the same estate though on different occasions is but one offence, the several books of account forming one set of books—Promothanath v. K. E., 17 C.W.N. 479, 14 Cr.L.J. 219. So also, misappropriation of several sums of money on several occasions in regard to one individual is one offence—In re Luchmi- narain, 14 Cal. 128. Receiving a bribe partly on one day and partly on another is one offence—Jagat Chandra v. Lal Chand, 5 C.W.N. 332 Theft of a box and a bicycle from one person committed at the same time is one offence—Bijoy v. Satish, 21 Cr.L.J. 682 (Cal.).

747. Separate charge :—For every distinct offence there shall be a separate charge. Even though the offences have been committed in the same transaction, there should be a distinct charge for each distinct offence, though they can be tried together under sec. 235—Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu, 10 C.W.N. 53, Emp. v. Fathu, 26 All. 195. See also the cases cited under heading 'what are distinct offences' above. In almost all these cases, it has been held that the framing of one charge in respect of several distinct offences is not merely an irregularity but an illegality, and the conviction on such a charge must be set aside. But in Moharuddi v. Jadunath, 11 C.W.N. 54, Musai v. K. E., 41 Cal. 66; Ram Subheg v. K. E., 19 C.W.N. 972; Radhanath v. Emp., 50 Cal. 94; Algar v. K. E., 32 C.W.N. 839 (842); and Tamez Khan v. Rajabali, 31 C.W.N. 337, 28 Cr.L.J. 347, it was held that the error in framing one charge was an error in form rather than of substance, and did not amount to an illegality, but a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537. In a petty case, the irregularity of the Magistrate in specifying three distinct offences (committed in the same transaction) in one head of charge, instead of framing three separate charges, may be excused under sec. 537, where the accused has not been prejudiced—Bachhu v. Pyara, 2 Luck. 430, 28 Cr.L.J. 409.

Alternative charges for contradictory statements :—Where a person was charged in the alternative with having made two contradictory statements, one to a public servant, and another, contradicting the first, on oath before a Magistrate, and was convicted in the alternative either under sec. 182 or under sec. 193 I. P. C., the Magistrate being unable to find which of them was false, it was held that the charge was not made in accordance with this section, there were two distinct offences of which two separate charges were necessary—Q. E. v. Ramji, 10 Bom. 124. But now see section 236, and illustration (b) to that section.

748. Joint trial illegal :—The accused was charged and tried at one trial for several distinct offences extending over more than one year, and the Full Bench held that this was an irregularity curable by sec. 537. But the Privy Council has laid down that the disobedience of an express provision of law is not a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537, but an illegality, and that such illegality cannot be made good even if there is enough left upon the indictment upon which a conviction might have been supported—Subrahmania Aiyar, 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.) This decision overrules 28 Cal 7, 12 Mad 273, 27 Cal 839, and 11 Mad 441, in which it was held that such a joint trial was a mere irregularity which could be cured by sec. 537.

Persons charged with offences committed in the course of separate transactions are entitled to separate trials. A joint trial is illegal and must be set aside—Paw Tha v. K. E., 3 L.B.R. 250; Shankar v. K.

11 A.L.J. 188; Krishnasami v. Emp., 26 Mad. 125. The joint trial of several persons charged with rioting together with other persons charged with criminal trespass is absolutely illegal—Q. E. v. Chandi Singh, 14 Cal. 395

Where the Magistrate heard the prosecution against several persons (charged with distinct offences) together and afterwards called upon them to plead separately in defence, it was held that such a trial was in substance a joint trial of all the prisoners, and therefore illegal, and a retrial was ordered—Paw Tha v. K. E., 3 L.B.R. 280, 5 Cr.L.J. 417. So also, where the Magistrate framed distinct charges and numbered them as distinct cases, but when the witnesses came to be cross-examined, he lost sight of the necessity of keeping the two trials separate, and allowed the witnesses to be cross-examined promiscuously in respect of both the charges, it was held that the joint trial offended against the provisions of this section and the illegality could not be cured by sec. 537—Public Prosecutor v. Kadiri Koya, 39 Mad. 527, 29 M.L.J. 101, 16 Cr.L.J. 593

“Except .. Sections 234” etc.:—The broad rule enunciated in sec. 233 (viz. that for every distinct offence there should be a separate charge, and every charge should be tried separately) is made subject to four exceptions. But a Court cannot and ought not to treat a case as an exception to the general rule, unless it is satisfied that in the case before it the charge should be within one of the four exceptions; and it would be safer if the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge recorded in his charge-sheet or judgment his reasons for treating the case as falling under one of the exceptions—Shankar v. K. E., 11 A.L.J. 183, 14 Cr.L.J. 116.

749. Counter cases.—It is illegal to try two counter cases between the same parties at one and the same trial, and a conviction at such a trial must be set aside, even though the cross cases were so tried together with the consent of the parties—Mamsa v. Emp., 13 Bur. L.T. 245, 22 Cr.L.J. 707. But a simultaneous trial of two counter cases is not the same thing as a joint trial, and is not prohibited by this section or by section 239. In certain cases and under certain circumstances a simultaneous trial may be irregular and improper, but that will not entitle the accused to have the whole trial set aside unless it is clearly shown that the procedure adopted has prejudiced him in his defence—Dhako v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 498, 21 Cr.L.J. 739. The proper course is to try the one case after the other. But both the cases must be tried by one and the same Magistrate. The simultaneous trial of two counter cases in two different Courts over one and the same occurrence is undesirable and unsatisfactory—Sheikh Samir v. Beni Madhab, 37 C.L.J. 410; Judhisthir v. Sheik Samir, 27 C.W.N. 700.

234. (1) When a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of such offences, whether in respect of the same person or not, he may be charged with and tried at one trial for any number of them not exceeding three.

Three offences of same kind within year may be charged together.

(2) Offences are of the same kind when they are punishable with the same amount of punishment under the same section of the Indian Penal Code or any special or local law :

Provided that, for the purpose of this section an offence punishable under Section 379 of the Indian Penal Code shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an offence punishable under Section 380 of the said Code, and that an offence punishable under any section of the Indian Penal Code, or of any special or local law, shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an attempt to commit such offence, when such an attempt is an offence.

Change .—The italicised words have been added by sec. 62 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below

750. Object of section .—Secs. 234, 235 etc., are exceptions to the broad and general rule enunciated in sec. 233. The object of these exceptions is to avoid the necessity of the same witnesses giving the same evidence two or three times over in different trials, and to join in one trial those offences with regard to which the evidence would overlap. But even when several criminal acts can be included in the same transaction (sec. 235), no joinder of trials should be permitted which will result in bewildering the accused in his defence—Crown v. Gulam, 1 S L R. 73, 8 Cr. L J 191 (195). "The reason of the provision (i.e. the provision contained in sec. 234) is obviously in order that the jury may not be prejudiced by the multitude of charges, and the inconvenience of the hearing together of a large number of instances of culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to Judges and accused"—Subrahmanya Ayyar v. K E, 25 Mad 61 (P C).

The provisions of sec. 234, Cr. P. Code, limiting the number of charges to three are particularly wise and salutary. The object of those provisions is to prevent any risk of the Court being satisfied by anything less than complete proof of the offences charged, and if the attention of the Court is limited to three offences, it is not very likely that it will be satisfied with anything less than full proof. But where a great number of charges are brought against an accused person, it might very often happen (particularly in cases tried by Judges) that the accused may be convicted not on actual proof of a particular offence, but more on suspicion and reputation owing to the fact that in a great number of cases offences are half proved against him. It is therefore very important that the Magistrates framing charges particularly in offences relating to criminal misappropriation and receiving stolen property should pay attention to this provision of the law. They should be very careful to see that only three specific offences are charged against the accused if it is to be decided to bring the charge against him in such a manner and under such a section that it is necessary to specify the specific offences—Hyder v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 3, 27 Cr.L.J. 32.

751. Scope of section :—This section says that the trial must be limited to three offences, it does not say that the trial must be limited to three charges. The same offence may be charged under different sections of the I P C and any number of such charges can be tried in one and the same trial—Emp v Tribhuvan, 33 Bom. 77.

Again, this section simply limits the number of offences that can be tried in one trial. But this does not mean that the prisoner cannot be tried separately in one day for more than three distinct offences of the same kind committed during the year—Emp. v. Dhanonjoy, 3 Cal 540. So where the prosecution chooses under sec. 222 (2) and the proviso thereof to prosecute for some out of the different amounts misappropriated during the year, they are not estopped by sec. 403 from instituting any further prosecution in respect of any fresh items misappropriated during the same period—Emp. v. Kashinath, 12 Bom.L.R. 226; Nagendra Nath v Emp., 50 Cal. 632, 27 C.W.N. 578, 38 C.L.J. 286.

Moreover, this section refers to trial and not to commitment. Where the Magistrate committed the accused to the Sessions on six charges of criminal breach of trust, and three of falsification of accounts, all the offences having been committed within a year, it was held that the order of committal was not illegal but merely irregular, and the irregularity could be cured by the Sessions Judge trying the charges separately—Krishna Murthi v. Emp., (1916) 2 M.W.N. 179, 17 Cr.L.J. 369.

This section contemplates a joint trial for offences committed within one year; if the offences extend over a period exceeding one year, the joinder of charges is illegal—Dhanjibhoy v Karim Khan, 1905 P.R. 14.

This section applies where a person is accused of more offences than one; it does not apply where a person is charged for one offence only e.g. an offence under sec. 401 I P. C. (belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft) and the trial is not therefore illegal if the period over which the association extends exceeds one year—Kasem Ali v Emp., 47 Cal 154, 31 C.L.J. 192, 21 Cr.L.J. 386.

And lastly, this section refers to offences and not to transactions. It does not provide that all offences committed in a year in three different transactions may be tried in one trial—Gehimal v. Crown, 10 S.L.R. 192, 18 Cr.L.J. 664; Kasi Viswanathan v. Emp., 30 Mad 328. The operation of the two sections 234 and 235 cannot be combined; and therefore a joint trial in respect of two sets of separate and independent transactions in which different offences have been committed, is not permissible. Thus where two girls were kidnapped on different occasions, and were taken off as girls belonging to a high caste and married to persons who gave money in return, the offences of kidnapping and cheating with respect to each of the girls should not be tried jointly with the other—Faujdar v. K. E., 48 All. 236, 24 A.L.J. 239, 27 Cr.L.J. 143.

752. Offences committed by several persons :—This section does not apply where several persons committing offences of the same kind are jointly charged; to such a case sec. 239 clause (c) will apply. The present section applies to the trial of one accused only—Budhai v. Emp., 33 Cal. 292, Tulsi v. Crown, 1917 P.R. 17, 18 Cr.L.J. 282; Sayad Lal v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 7 (Nag.); Nga San v. Emp., 21 Cr.L.J. 794 (Bur.); Ram Prasad v. K. E., 19 A.L.J. 796, 22 Cr.L.J. 657. In Kailash v. Emp., 3 P.L.J. 124, 19 Cr.L.J. 673, however it has been held that the word 'person' is to have its ordinary and natural meaning as defined by the General Clauses Act, and is not to be restricted to the singular number. Such a laboured interpretation would no longer be necessary because clause (c) of section 239 now expressly makes provision for the joint trial of several persons committing offences of the same kind within the period of one year.

753. Offences of the same kind :—See subsection (2) for the definition of this expression. Where a person is found in possession of several items of stolen property, he has committed 'offences of the same kind' under sec. 411 I.P.C., and they do not cease to be so merely because the stolen articles are of very diverse character (e.g. stamps, carpets, buckets, padlocks)—K. E. v. Bishun Singh, 3 Pat 503 (519), 5 P.L.T. 319, 25 Cr.L.J. 738.

The following are not offences of the same kind—Adultery and bigamy—Reg. v. Vithayee, Ratanlal 4, Falsification of accounts and criminal breach of trust—Kasi Viswanathan v. Emp., 30 Mad. 328, Murder and hurt—Shankar v. K. E., 11 A.L.J. 188; Forgery and giving false evidence—Gehimal v. Crown, 10 S.L.R. 192. For other examples, see Note 745 in sec. 233, under heading "Distinct offences."

754. Not exceeding three :—An accused can only be charged and tried at one trial for any number of offences of the same kind not exceeding three, committed within the space of a year. Every act of falsification of a book of account would amount to an offence under this section, and not more than three of such offences can be tried together—Q. E. v. Mati, 26 Cal. 560; Emp. v. Salimullah, 32 All. 57, Raman Behari v. Emp., 41 Cal. 722; In re Chakrakodi, 44 M.L.J. 67, 24 Cr.L.J. 462; Fitzmaurice v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 793, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 193. One charge under sec. 124A I.P.C. in respect of one article in a newspaper, one charge under sec. 124A I.P.C. in respect of the same article, and a third charge under sec. 124A I.P.C. in respect of another article, can be tried together—In re Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 33 Bom. 221.

The joinder, at one trial, of 41 charges of extortion committed during a period of 2 years, contravenes the provisions of sec. 234, and is an illegality not curable by sec. 537—Subrahmanya Ayyar v. K. E. 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.) Where an accused was charged at one trial with criminal breach of trust with respect to seventeen sums of money and also under sec. 477A in respect of distinct offences in excess of three, it was held that the course adopted was illegal—Emp. v. Nathulal, 4 Bom.L.R. 433. The joinder of charges of three offences under section 411 I. P. C. and three offences under sec. 414 I. P. C. is bad—Chetto Kalwar v. Emp., 49 Cal 555. A charge under sec. 411 I. P. C. of having received six specific animals belonging to five specific persons and stolen by five different acts of theft, is illegal and wholly vitiates the trial—Hyder v. Emp., 20 S L R 3, 27 Cr.L.J. 32. Three offences of forgery under sec. 477A and three offences of criminal breach of trust under sec. 408 I. P. C. committed in the course of similar but separate transactions cannot all be lumped together in one charge and jointly tried—Sheo Saran Lal v. K. E., 32 All 219. If a man is charged with three alternative charges of embezzlement or abetment thereof, the charge is really for six offences and entirely illegal—Janeshar v. Emp., 51 All. 544, 30 Cr.L.J. 687 (689). Six distinct and separate charges of falsification of six separate and distinct accounts cannot be tried together—Krishna Lal v. Emp., 45 C.L.J. 1, 28 Cr.L.J. 291. Three distinct offences of criminal breach of trust and three distinct offences of falsification of accounts though in respect of the same items cannot be tried together—Emp. v. Manant, 49 Bom 892, 27 Bom L R 1343, 27 Cr L.J. 305; Kasi Viswanthan v. Emp., 30 Mad. 328. Such a joint trial cannot be justified even under sec. 235, because there are three defalcations committed on different occasions, and the false entries connected with one defalcation cannot be said to form part of the same transaction with the other defalcations and falsifications—Emp. v. Manant (supra). Three charges of criminal breach of trust in respect of three items of money and a charge of falsification of accounts in order to conceal the defalcations cannot be legally tried at one and the same trial—Emp. v. Shujaiddin, 44 All. 540 (following 32 All 219). Three charges of criminal misappropriation (sec. 409 I. P. C.) and a charge under sec. 210 I. P. C. cannot be tried together—K. E. v. Rajendra, 22 C.W N 596, 19 Cr L.J. 868. Where the accused was tried under secs 211, 409 and 466 I. P. C. on eight counts, the trial was held to be illegal—Avadh Behari v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 784 (All.).

Illegality cannot be cured by striking off a charge—A trial of the accused for four offences is altogether illegal, and the illegality cannot be cured by the Judge striking out one of the charges after the trial has closed—Manavala v. Emp., 29 Mad 569, Chetto v. Emp., 49 Cal 555; Fitzmaurice v. Emp., 27 Cr L.J. 793 (Lah.). Although the Judge has power under sec. 227 to alter a charge before judgment is pronounced, still he cannot cure an illegality—Manavala, supra. But the Judge can strike off a charge before the trial begins, as was done in the case of Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 33 Bom 221, where in the trial before the High Court Sessions, four charges were at first framed against the accused, but the Advocate General withdrew one of the charges, and then the trial proceeded on three charges.

755. Offences against several persons :—There was a conflict of opinion as to whether this section applied where the offences were committed against several persons. In the following cases it was held that the words 'offences of the same kind' were not limited to offences against the same person; an accused could be charged with and tried at the same trial for offences of the same kind though committed against different persons—Chhatradhari v. Emp., 43 Cal 13, 19 C.W.N. 557; Babu Lal v. K. E., 2 P.L.J. 209; Manu Miya v. Emp., 9 Cal 371; In re Raja Rao, 20 M.L.T. 234, 17 Cr L.J. 479; Emp. v. Bechan, 38 All. 457; Emp. v. Jagardeo, 38 All 458 (Note), Shri Bhagwan v. Emp., 13 C.W.N. 507, Q. E. v. Dhondi, Ratanlal 331, Krishnayya v. Emp., 20 Cr L.J. 71 (Nag.), Nga Po v. K. E., 11 L.B.R. 45. But the contrary view was taken in some other cases. Thus, it was held in a Madras case that the offences of extorting bribes from three different persons could not be charged and tried together—Venkata, 2 Weir 299. So also in a Calcutta case the joint trial of three complaints by three complainants alleging against the accused three offences of the same kind was held to be illegal—Nanda Kumar v. Emp., 11 C.W.N. 1128. See also Asghar Ali v. Emp., 40 Cal 846.

In order to remove this conflict of opinion, the words "whether in respect of the same person or not" have been added in sub-section (1) "We have inserted words in section 234 (1) which will at all events make it clear that an accused person may be charged at one trial with three offences of the same kind though committed against different persons. The addition will, we think, cover the difficulty which has been referred to in most cases"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916. Thus, where an accused person was charged with having deceitfully induced three separate persons on three different occasions in the same month to deliver property to him under circumstances which amounted to offences under sec. 420 I. P. Code, held that having regard to the amended provisions of sec. 234, there was no misjoinder of charges, and that the joint trial was perfectly legal—Farzand Ali v. Emp., 27 Cr L.J. 909 (Pat.)

Proviso :—"We have also added a proviso to section 234 (2); which, we think, is required. Sections 379 and 380, Indian Penal Code, refer to theft and theft in a building which should clearly be treated as offences of the same kind; and we think that it should also be provided specifically that an attempt to commit an offence, where such an attempt is penalized by any law, is of the same kind as the actual offence"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

This proviso overrules Rahiman v. Mobarak, 20 C.W.N. 672 and Hari Singh v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 751 (Nag.) where it was held that theft in a building (sec. 380 I. P. C.) and theft of paddy in a field (sec. 379 I. P. C.) were not offences of the same kind.

235. (1) If, in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, more offences than one are committed by the same person, he may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, every such offence.

(2) If the acts alleged constitute an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished, the person accused of them may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, each of such offences.

(3) If several acts, of which one or more than one would by itself or themselves constitute an offence, constitute when combined a different offence, the person accused of them may be charged with and tried at one trial for the offence constituted by such acts when combined, and for any offence constituted by any one, or more, of such acts.

(4) Nothing contained in this section shall affect the Indian Penal Code, Section 71.

Illustrations.

to sub-section (1)—

(a) A rescues B, a person in lawful custody and in so doing causes grievous hurt to C, a constable in whose custody B was. A may be charged with and convicted of offences under Sections 225 and 333 of the Indian Penal Code.

(b) A commits house-breaking by day with intent to commit adultery, and commits in the house so entered adultery with B's wife. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under Sections 454 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code.

(c) A entices B, the wife of C, away from C, with intent to commit adultery with B, and then commits adultery with her. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under Sections 498 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code.

(d) A has in his possession several seals, knowing them to be counterfeit and intending to use them for the purpose of committing several forgeries punishable under Section 466 of the Indian Penal Code. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, the possession of each seal under Section 473 of the Indian Penal Code.

(e) With intent to cause injury to B, A institutes a criminal proceeding against him, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding; and also falsely accuses B of having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such charges. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, two offences under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code.

(f) A, with intent to cause injury to B, falsely accuses him of having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such charge. On the trial A gives false evidence against B, intending thereby to cause B to be convicted of a capital offence. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 211 and 194 of the Indian Penal Code.

(g) A, with six others, commits the offences of rioting, grievous hurt and assaulting a public servant endeavouring in the discharge of his duty as such to suppress the riot. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 147, 325 and 152 of the Indian Penal Code

(h) A threatens B, C and D at the same time with injury to their persons with intent to cause alarm to them. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, each of the three offences under section 506 of the Indian Penal Code

The separate charges referred to in illustrations (a) to (h) respectively may be tried at the same time.

to sub-section (2)—

(i) A wrongfully strikes B with a cane. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 352 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code.

(j) Several stolen sacks of corn are made over to A and B, who know they are stolen property, for the purpose of concealing them. A and B thereupon voluntarily assist each other to conceal the sacks at the bottom of a grain pit. A and B may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code.

(k) A exposes her child with the knowledge that she is thereby likely to cause its death. The child dies in consequence of such exposure. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 317 and 304 of the Indian Penal Code.

(l) A dishonestly uses a forged document as genuine evidence, in order to convict B, a public servant, of an offence under section 167 of the Indian Penal Code. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 471 (read with 466) and 196 of the same Code

(m) A commits robbery on B, and in doing so voluntarily causes hurt to him. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 323, 392 and 394 of the Indian Penal Code.

755A. Scope :—This section must not be taken as controlled by the words "not exceeding three" occurring in sec. 234; there is nothing in this section to warrant the rule that not more than three offences can be combined even if those offences have been committed in the same transaction—Sanuman v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 392, 22 Cr.L.J. 641. If the offences are committed in the course of the same transaction, a charge is not illegal by reason of containing more than three offences spread over a period longer than a year—In re Gam Mallu, 49 Mad. 74, 48 M.L.J. 308, A.I.R. 1925 Mad 690, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513.

This section permits a joinder of charges in respect of offences arising out of the same transaction. If two distinct offences are lumped together in one charge, instead of framing two charges, it is a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—Abdul Rahman v. K. E., 4 Bur.L.J. 213, 27 Cr.L.J. 669; Ram Subheg v. K. E., 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 Cr.L.J. 641; Bachcha v. Piyara, 2 Luck. 430, 4 O.W.N. 341, 28 Cr.L.J. 409.

The joinder of a charge under sec. 504 I. P. Code with a charge under sec. 20, Cattle Trespass Act is not illegal, where the two offences form parts of the same transaction—Deenadayalu v. Ratna, 50 Mad. 841, 52 M.L.J. 251, 28 Cr.L.J. 301.

756. Same transaction :—"The expression 'same transaction' used in secs. 235 and 239 is an expression which from its very nature is incapable of exact definition, and must have been advisedly used because it had this quality. That during the years since the expression first appeared in the Statute Book, the combined wisdom of all the High Courts in India has failed to definitely fix its meaning, is sufficiently convincing that the task is impossible. The illustrations, however, make sufficiently clear the intention of the legislature"—per Crouch A.J.C. in Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191 (1951). "We think it would be dangerous, if not impossible, to attempt any definition of the phrase 'in the course of the same transaction.' An exhaustive definition is not feasible, and if the phraseology is altered, the Courts would be deprived of the guidance which they now have from a long series of rulings on the point. We do not find that there has been any pronounced conflict of opinion, the reason being that the Courts, instead of attempting to lay down general principles, as a rule discuss each case on its merits"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

The question whether the acts are so connected together as to form part of the same transaction is a question of fact in each particular case—Tamez Khan v. Rajabali, 31 C.W.N. 337; and the area of facts covered by the expression 'same transaction' varies with the circumstances of each case—Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191 (200); Woodward v. Emp., 18 S.L.R. 199, 27 Cr.L.J. 257. No comprehensive formula of universal application can be stated to determine whether two or more acts constitute the same transaction, but circumstances which must bear on the determination of the question in an individual case can be indicated; they are : proximity of time, unity or proximity of place, continuity of action and community of purpose or design—Amrita Lal v. K. E., 42 Cal. 957; Emp. v. Madhab Laxman, 43 Bom. 147, 20 Bom.L.R. 607; Kushai Mallik v. Emp., 50 Cal. 1004 (1008); Banga Chandra v. Anando, 35 C.L.J. 527; Tamez Khan v. Rajabali, 31 C.W.N. 337. Those criminal acts which are in English and Indian law regarded as subsidiary to an offence are included in the 'same transaction' as the offence. If a series of acts are so connected together by proximity of time, community of criminal intention, continuity of action and purpose and such subsidiary acts as would make the co-accused perceptus criminis or an accessory after the fact, or by the relation of cause and effect, as to constitute, in the opinion of the Court, one transaction, then the accused may be tried at one trial for every offence committed in such series of acts—Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191 (195, 196). Emp. v. Lukman, 21 S.L.R. 107, 27 Cr.L.J. 1233 (1239). The most essential tests are continuity of action and community of purpose—In re Choragudi Venkatadri, 33 Mad. 502; Virupana v. Emp., 28 M.L.J. 397, Ram Subheg v. K. E., 19 C.W.N. 972, Emp. v. Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49, Pahlad v. Emp., 1 Lah. 562; Tapanidhi v. K. E., 5 P.L.J. 11, In re Lockley, 43 Mad. 411. The real and substantial test for determining whether several offences are so connected together as to form one and the same transaction depends upon whether they are related together in point of purpose, or as cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary acts, as to constitute one continuous action—Emp. v. Sherufalli, 27 Bom. 135, Sanuman v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 392, 22 Cr.L.J. 641; Krishna Aiyar v. Emp., 8 L.W. 225, 1918 M.W.N. 525; Hari Raot, 2 N.L.R. 147, 4 Cr.L.J. 420; Gunwant v. Emp., 13 N.L.R. 35, 18 Cr.L.J. 339 (342); Emp. v. Nga Lu, 19 Cr.L.J. 34 (Bur.); Woodward v. Emp., 18 S.L.R. 199, 27 Cr.L.J. 257, Husainbibi v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 74, 27 Cr.L.J. 456.

When a proposal for a boycott is made by the President of an Association, and shortly afterwards the secretary and a member of that Association take joint action to boycott the person against whom the resolution is directed, the inference is that they are acting in furtherance of a common purpose, or in other words, that they are taking part in a conspiracy. Acts done in pursuance of such a conspiracy must be deemed to be parts of the same transaction—K. E. v. Maung Aung, 1 Rang. 604, 2 Bur.L.J. 224.

Mere proximity of time between two acts does not necessarily constitute them as parts of the same transaction—Son Daik v. Crown, 1 L.B.R. 361, Nga Tha v. Emp., 5 Bur.L.T. 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 485. The test to be applied to find out whether a series of acts form part of the same transaction is not so much the proximity of time as the community of purpose or progressive action towards a single object—Legal Remembrancer v. Monmohan, 19 C.W.N. 672; Kushai v. Emp., 50 Cal. 1004, Pahlad v. Emp., 1 Lah. 562, 21 Cr.L.J. 626, Emp. v. Hari Raot, 2 N.L.R. 147, 4 Cr.L.J. 420; Gunwant v. Emp., 13 N.L.R. 35, 18 Cr.L.J. 339 (342); In re Gam Mallu, 49 Mad. 74, 48 M.L.J. 308, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513, Patit Paban v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 369 (Cal.); and a mere interval of time between the commission of one offence and another does not necessarily import want of continuity, though the length of the interval may be an important element in determining the question of the connection between the two—Emp. v. Sherufali, 27 Bom. 135, 4 Bom.L.R. 930; Pahlad v. Emp., 1 Lah. 562; Kushal v. Emp., 50 Cal. 1004; Virupana v. Emp., 28 M.L.J. 397. A series of acts separated by intervals are not excluded from the 'same transaction,' if the accused started together for the same goal—Emp. v. Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49; Emp. v. Ganesh Narain, 14 Bom. L.R. 872, 13 Cr.L.J. 833.

Where two acts were committed on different dates, and there was no connection between the two so as to make them the same transaction, a joint trial is illegal—Shafi v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 859, 25 Cr.L.J. 964, A.I.R. 1924 All. 211.

757. Instances of 'same transaction':—(1) Theft of a cart from one house, and theft of two bullocks from another house in order to remove the cart—Emp. v. Hari Rao, 2 N.L.R. 147, 4 Cr.L.J. 420

(2) Cheating by false personation, forging a letter to support the false personation, and further cheating on the strength of that forged letter—Emp. v. Sri Narain, 11 C.W.N. 715.

(3) Receiving stolen property, and assisting to conceal that property—Emp. v. Mian Jan, 28 All. 313.

(4) Criminal breach of trust, and giving false evidence to screen the breach of trust—Nga Po Ke v. Emp., U.B.R. (1897-1901) 31.

(5) Theft at the same time of two bullocks belonging to two owners tied at the yoke of a cart—Q. E. v. Krishna Shahaji, Ratanlal 927.

(6) Rioting, and causing hurt in the riot—Q. E. v. Dungan Singh, 7 All. 29.

(7) Conspiracy to wage war, and concealing the existence of such conspiracy from the authorities—Barindra v. Emp., 37 Cal. 467, 14 C.W.N. 1114.

(8) Dacoity in one place, and murder of a person in another place who had found out the dacoits—Emp. v. Punya, 4 Bom.L.R. 789.

(9) Extortion, and false personation of a public servant in order to commit that extortion—Q. E. v. Wazir Jan, 10 All. 58

(10) Wrongful confinement of several persons on two occasions for the same purpose, viz for extortion of money—Dy. Supdt. and Legal Remembrancer v. Kailash, 42 Cal. 760, 19 C.W.N. 181.

(11) Forgery, abetment of forgery, and use of the forged document in a Civil Court—Emp. v. Jivram, 40 Bom. 97, 17 Bom.L.R. 881, 16 Cr.L.J. 761.

(12) Causing grievous hurt to a person (for extorting confession) who died of the injuries, and making false entries in the official records attributing another cause for the death of that person—Emp. v. Balwant, 14 Bom.L.R. 41, 13 Cr.L.J. 137.

(13) Conspiracy to commit an offence, and the commission of that offence in pursuance of the conspiracy—Amrita Lal v. Emp., 42 Cal. 957.

19 C.W.N. 676, Legal Remembrancer v. Monmohan, 19 C.W.N. 672, 16 Cr.L.J. 3; Abdul Rahman v. K. E., 4 Bur.L.J. 213, 27 Cr.L.J. 669.

(14) Criminal misappropriation or breach of trust, and falsification of accounts in order to screen the misappropriation—Emp. v. Jiban Krishna, 40 Cal. 318; Mangal Sein v. Emp., 11 Lah.L.J. 384, 30 Cr.L.J. 958. Thus where a police officer, who took charge of certain ornaments of a deceased lady, misappropriated those ornaments and altered the entries in the police diary regarding the ornaments and substituted some fresh pages to show that the ornaments were never placed in his charge, held that he could be tried for offences under secs. 218, 409 and 477A I. P. C. as they were committed in the same transaction—Bilas Chandra v. Emp., 27 C.W.N. 626

(15) Rioting, causing hurt to one person in the riot, and causing hurt to another person in the same riot—Katiwari v. Emp., 39 All. 623, 15 A.L.J. 594, 18 Cr.L.J. 788

(16) Criminal breach of trust, and falsification of accounts made to conceal the breach of trust—Emp. v. Jagatram, 19 Cr.L.J. 987 (Pun.).

(17) Illegal possession of opium, and illegal possession of cocaine for the purpose of carrying on business of selling contraband—Emp. v. Nga Lu, 19 Cr.L.J. 34 (Bur.).

(18) A charge of receiving stolen property can be joined with a charge of cheating, if a common purpose ran through these acts—In re Lockley, 43 Mad. 411, 38 M.L.J. 209.

(19) Possession of stencil plates for the purpose of counterfeiting trade-marks (sec. 485 I.P.C.), selling goods to which a counterfeited trade-mark was affixed (sec. 486 I. P. C.), and possession of such goods for the purpose of selling them (sec. 486 I. P. C.)—Emp. v. Sherufalli, 27 Bom. 135

(20) Kidnapping a minor girl with intent to marry her to somebody (Sec 366 I P C), and cheating somebody by false representation and inducing him to take the girl in marriage and to part with money in consideration of marriage with the girl (Sec 420 I P C)—Husainbibi v. Emp., 20 S L R. 74, 27 Cr L J. 456

758. Acts not forming same transaction—(1) Kidnapping a boy, and after a day or two, assaulting the boy's mother who came to demand of the boy—Chakutty v. Emp., 26 Mad 454

(2) Misappropriation of money payable to a Railway Company for goods to be taken delivery of, and on a different day inducing the Railway Company to deliver the goods—Parmeshwar v. Emp., 13 C.W.N. 1089

(3) Criminal trespass into the house of the complainant, and assault on the complainant on a subsequent day while he was going to inform the Police of the criminal trespass—Nga Tha v. Emp., 5 Bur L T 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 485; see also Virupana v. Emp., 28 M L J 397, 16 Cr L J 323.

(14) Mischief and insult caused on two different days—K. E. v. Maung Gale, 3 L B R. 113

(5) Murder and causing evidence of murder to disappear—Savara Sankadu, 2 Weir 301.

(6) Dishonest receipt of each stolen article on each occasion is a separate offence, and such receipts of more than three of such articles (sec. 234) cannot be tried together, unless the dishonest receipts were so connected as to form one transaction—Ram Sarup v. Emp., 9 C.W.N. 1027. See Note 716 under sec. 233.

(7) Criminal misappropriation, and falsification of accounts relating to another distinct act of misappropriation—Emp v. Jagatram, 19 Cr L.J. 987 (Lah.)

(8) Four distinct offences committed at different times at different places and against different persons—Ghasi Ram v. Sukra, 18 Cr L.J. 739 (Pat.). Theft of eight necklaces at different periods extending over two years, though from the same person—Raman Lal v. Emp., 49 All 312, 28 Cr L.J. 171

(9) Forgery and giving false evidence in respect of service of summons, and false evidence in respect of service of another summons on a different occasion—Gehimal v. Crown, 10 S.L.R. 192, 18 Cr.L.J. 664

(10) Five murders committed in one day, three in one village in the forenoon, and two in another village in the afternoon, are not so connected together as to represent a series of acts forming the same transaction, and cannot be tried together—K. E. v. Fauja, 17 A.L.J. 614, 20 Cr.L.J. 353.

(11) Preparation of false balance-sheet by a Company for the year 1912, and preparation of another false balance-sheet for the year 1913 are quite distinct and separate acts, and according to no possible meaning of the word 'transaction' can it be said that the two acts form parts of the same transaction—Emp v. Ram Narayan, 21 Bom.L.R. 732, 20 Cr L.J. 657, 759. Separate trial not illegal :—This is an enabling section, and not imperative. Though it provides for a joint trial of offences committed in the same transaction, yet a separate trial for each of the offences is not illegal—Ameruddin v. Farid Sarkar, 8 Cal. 481; Abdul Hamid v. Emp., 6 Pat 208, 27 Cr.L.J. 1100; Emp. v. Rama Deol, 30 Bom. L.R. 636, 29 Cr L.J. 981 (1982), Q. E. v. Ugra, Ratanlal 307. And a conviction or acquittal in respect of one of the offences is no bar to the trial of another—Emp. v Baldeo, 3 A.L.J. 2; Emp v. Kashinath, 12 Bom. L.R. 226, 11 Cr.L.J. 337 Where it is likely that the joinder of charges will result in bewildering the accused, such joinder should not be permitted even though the offences were committed in the same transaction—Crown v. Gulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr L.J. 191; Alimuddin v. K. E., 52 Cal. 253, 40 C.L.J. 541. Thus, in a recent Calcutta case, where several offences were committed in the same transaction, and a joint trial of several charges was held in the lower court, the High Court, to be on the safe side, upheld the conviction and sentence on only one of the charges, setting aside the conviction on the other charges—Radha Nath v. Emp., 50 Cal 94.

760. Offences requiring sanction :—If, during the course of the same transaction, several offences are committed, some requiring sanction and others not, the accused can be tried for the offences not requiring sanction, when no sanction has been given for the offences which require sanction—Krishna Pillai v. Krishna Konun, 31 Mad. 43.

760A. Subsection (2) :—A person who has dishonestly received stolen property (sec. 411 I. P. C.) can be charged and convicted of voluntarily concealing or disposing of that property (see 414 I. P. C.)—Emp. v. Abdul Ghani, 49 Bom. 878, 27 Bom. L.R. 1373, 27 Cr.L.J. 114.

Subsection (3) :—One of the counts in the charge against the accused under trial for waging war (sec. 121 I. P. C.) was that they had committed dacoity under secs. 395 and 397 I. P. Code. This count failed as being too vague. Held that the validity of the conviction under sec. 121 I. P. C. was not affected by the striking off of the conviction for other offences forming component parts of the offence of waging war, and the accused cannot be said to have been prejudiced in their defence on the charge for waging war, as the acts of dacoity were all merely some of a series of incidents which went to make up the continuing offence of waging war within the meaning of sec. 235 (3) Cr. P. Code—In re Gam Mallu, 49 Mad. 74, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513

761. Section to be read subject to sec. 71 I. P. C. :—(For the text of section 71 I. P. C. see notes under sec. 35 ante)—Although in cases falling under sec. 235, a joint trial of several offences may be held, still in awarding punishment, Courts are to be guided by the provisions contained in sec. 71 I. P. C. Therefore, where an offence comes within two sections of the I. P. C., the accused may be charged with and tried at one trial for two offences (sub-section 2) but the punishment cannot be cumulative—Q. E. v. Francis Xavier, Ratanlal 506; Reg. v. Dod Basaya, 11 B.H.C.R. 13. So also, where several acts, each of which would by itself constitute an offence, constitute when combined a different offence, the person accused of them may be charged with and tried at one trial for the comprehensive offence or for any one of the offences

But it should be noted that sec. 71 I. P. C. refers only to cases falling under subsections (2) and (3) of this section and does not provide for cases under sub-section (1). Therefore, where offences are committed in the course of the same transaction but do not fall under sub-section (2) or (3), the Court is not precluded from passing sentence on every such offence—Q. E. v. Pakura, Ratanlal 369, Q. E. v. Wazir Jan, 10 All. 58; Q. E. v. Nurichan, 12 Mad. 35, Q. E. v. Pershad, 7 All. 414, Loke Nath v. Q. E., 11 Cal. 349; Chandra Kant v. Q. E. 12 Cal. 495, but the principle of sec. 71 I. P. C. is to be followed, and the whole punishment should not be more severe than the punishment for the gravest offence provided—Emp. v. Budh Singh 2 All. 101, Emp. v. Jubdar, 6 Cal. 718, Emp. v. Ajadhas 2 All. 644. Where two offences are so compounded together that one substantive offence can be said to have been committed, there should be only one sentence, viz. for the gravest offence proved, e.g. in cases of abduction of a child with intention to steal from its person, and theft—In re Noujan, 7 M.H.C.R. 375; house-breaking by night in order to commit theft, and theft—Reg. v. Tulaya,

1 Bom. 214; Q. E. v. Malu, 23 Bom. 706; Emp. v. Ajudhia, 2 All 644; rioting and causing grievous hurt (constructively)—Q. v. Dina Sheikh, 10 W.R. 63; Q. E. v. Bana Punja, 17 Bom. 260; rioting and murder—Q. E. v. Muse, Ratanlal 493; riding a horse furiously and causing hurt to a bystander—Q. E. v. Lattu, Ratanlal 159; house trespass with intent to commit assault, and grievous hurt—Q. v. Basoo, 2 W.R. 29. In all these cases the whole punishment will be the same as that provided for the graver offence.

236. If a single act or series of acts is of such a

Where it is doubtful nature that it is doubtful which what offence has been several offences the facts which can committed. be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences.

Illustrations.

(a) A is accused of an act which may amount to theft or receiving stolen property or criminal breach of trust or cheating. He may be charged with theft, receiving stolen property, criminal breach of trust and cheating, or he may be charged with having committed theft, or receiving stolen property or criminal breach of trust or cheating.

(b) A states on oath before the Magistrate that he saw B hit C with a club. Before the Sessions Court A states on oath that B never hit C. A may be charged in the alternative and convicted of intentionally giving false evidence, although it cannot be proved which of these contradictory statements was false.

762. Application of section :—This section contemplates a state of facts which constitute a single offence, but where it is doubtful whether the act or acts involved may amount to one or other of several cognate offences—Q. E. v. Croft, 23 Cal. 174 (177); Danodur v. Emp., 8 Pat 731, 1929 Cr C 413, Ganesh v. Emp., 5 S.L.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224 (per Pratt J C). Where it is not at all doubtful which of several offences the facts found would constitute, (e.g. where the facts as disclosed in the proceedings clearly amounted to the commission of acts which would constitute offences under the Excise Act and also offences under the Merchandise Marks Act) this section does not apply—Croft, supra; Akram Ali v. Emp., 18 C.L.J. 574. Moreover, this section does not relate to distinct acts, but to a single act or series of acts, where the facts being ascertained it is doubtful which of several sections is applicable—Sher Shah v. Emp., 1887 P.R. 43.

Sec. 236 does not apply where there is any doubt as to the facts, but applies where there is a doubt as to the law applicable to certain set of facts which have been proved—Emp. v. Po Thin, 7 Rang 96, 30 Cr.L.J. 750, 1929 Cr. C. 356; Emp. v. Nga Po, 6 Bur. L.J. 83, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 254. An alternative charge under this section can be framed only in those cases in which the prosecution cannot establish exclusively any one offence but are able on the facts to exclude the innocence of the accused and to show that the accused must have committed one of two or more offences—Emp. v. Ganesh, 5 S.L.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224. This section applies where the law applicable to a certain set of facts is doubtful by reason of the nature of the single act or series of acts done, and in which it is charged or found proved that the act or series of acts constitute one or more of several offences, the doubt being on a matter of law only—Khan Mahamad v. Emp., 1887 P.R. 11. The Code only contemplates an alternative finding when the facts are ascertained and it would follow beyond doubt that the facts proved constitute one of two offences under one section of the Penal Code, or when the evidence proves the commission of an offence falling within one of two sections of the Penal Code, and it is doubtful which of such sections is applicable—Reg v. Dewji, Ratanlal 20; Sher Shah v Emp., 1887 P.R. 43. This section does not apply where the facts proved raise a doubt as to whether the accused is guilty of any of the charges at all—Emp v. Khudiram, 12 C.W.N. 530. Sections 236 and 237 are merely provisions against the defeat of justice on technical grounds. Where an offence is proved by the evidence, but its legal definition is doubtful or has been incorrectly given in the charge, then sec. 236 or sec. 237 may be resorted to. They really deal with instances which the language of sec. 235 might fail to cover—Mahadeo Girk v. Emp., 9 N.L.R. 26, 14 Cr. L.J. 135.

Therefore, this section does not apply where the doubt in the mind of the Judge was not whether on the facts proved the accused's act fell within the purview of sec. 302 or sec. 201 I.P.C. but whether there was sufficient proof that the accused had in fact committed the murder of the deceased or had merely caused evidence of murder to disappear, such a doubt being a doubt as to facts—Partapa v Crown, 1913 P.R. 11, 14 Cr.L.J. 664. So also, the section is inapplicable where the doubt exists as to whether the accused had committed murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, such a doubt being based on facts only—Khan Mahd. v Emp., 1887 P.R. 11. So again, where the accused was charged under two heads of charge with committing dacoity in each of two adjoining houses, and it was doubtful as to which house he entered, an alternative charge that the accused committed dacoity either in A's house or in B's house is illegal—Reg v Dewji, Ratanlal 20. Even though the Magistrate frames alternative charges in a case where the facts are in doubt, still he is not entitled, at the conclusion of the trial, to compromise his doubts as to the true facts of the case by convicting in the alternative. He is bound to come to a distinct finding as to the facts, and then only if the law applicable to the facts which he considers to have been proved is doubtful, he may convict in the alternative—Emp. v. Po Thin, 7 Rang. 96, 30 Cr.L.J. 750, 1929 Cr. C. 356

This section only authorises a charge in the alternative when it is doubtful which of the several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, and not where there may be a doubt as to the facts which constitute one of the elements of the offence—Wafader v. Q E., 21 Cal 955; Nayanulla v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 594 (Cal.); Ganesh v. Emp., 5 S.L.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224 (per Pratt J. C.).

This section does not apply where the two offences are distinct and separate, the one offence being committed subsequent to the other, e.g. the offence of abetment of forgery and the offence of using the forged document. In such a case, the offence of abetment of forgery is complete when the document is written and signed; the use of the forged document is a subsequent act, and is a distinct and separate offence for which the accused is entitled to be separately charged—Harun Rashid v. Emp., 53 Cal. 466, 30 C.W.N. 432, 27 Cr.L.J. 606.

Where the offences are of a cognate nature, e.g. theft and receiving stolen property, charges may be framed alternatively—Sant Singh v. Emp., 1889 P.R. 26. So also, a charge of murder may be joined in the alternative with a charge of causing evidence of murder to disappear—Begu v. Emp., 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.), 30 C.W.N. 581, 26 Cr.L.J. 1059; Emp. v. Hanmappa, 25 Bom. L.R. 231, 25 Cr.L.J. 1349; Andal v. Emp., 18 S.L.R. 185, 26 Cr.L.J. 909; Crown v. Bawa Maghindas, 4 S.L.R. 474, 11 Cr.L.J. 731. (The contrary view expressed in Tarap Ali v. Q E., 22 Cal. 638, and Samanta v. Emp., 20 C.W.N. 166 is overruled by the Privy Council case of Begu v. Emp., supra). On charges under sec. 489A (counterfeiting a currency note) and sec. 410 (cheating) the High Court directed the conviction to be in the alternative—Hira v. Emp., 15 A.L.J. 587, 18 Cr.L.J. 790.

This section refers to cognate offences, such as theft and criminal breach of trust, and does not relate to offences of so distinct a character as murder and theft—Emp. v. Narottam, 1888 A.W.N. 85. An alternative charge should not be framed in respect of such distinct offences as offences under secs. 182 and 211 P.C.—Thakur Singh v. Chattar, 1910 P.R. 20, 11 Cr.L.J. 420. An alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of distinct offences, nor even in respect of cognate offences when the difference is one of degree, i.e., as to the intention imputed to the accused or as to some circumstances of aggravation. The criminal intention imputed to the accused must be specifically determined and not allowed to remain a subject of doubt in an alternative charge—Ganesh v. Emp., 5 S.L.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224.

When it is doubtful as to whether the offence was under a certain section of the Penal Code or under a section of any other law (e.g. Post Office Act), the charge should be cumulative. An alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of an offence under the Penal Code and an offence under a special law—Ganesh v. Emp., 5 S.L.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224. See also Emp. v. Nga Shwe, 4 Rang. 355, 27 Cr.L.J. 1360. But see Manhari v. K. E., 45 Cal. 727 and Talsi Tehni v. Emp., 50 Cal. 564, 24 Cr.L.J. 372, where it has been held that a charge under sec. 380 I. P. C. may be framed alternatively with a charge under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act. The Patna High Court also holds that a charge under sec. 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act may be framed alternatively with a charge under sec. 338 I. P. C.—Maksuddan v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 31.

Where the accused may be charged alternatively under two sections, it is not illegal to charge him under those sections cumulatively. Compare Illustration (a)—Damodar v. Emp., 8 Pat. 731, 1929 Cr. C. 413. Thus it is not illegal to charge an accused both under secs. 380 and 414 I. P. Code—Damodar, supra.

If charges are framed cumulatively, and such framing of charge is illegal, the illegality cannot be cured by saying that if the charges had been framed alternatively it would have been valid. Thus, a joinder of charges of three offences under section 411 I. P. C. with a charge of three offences under sec. 414 I. P. C. is illegal, because sec. 234 does not allow a joinder of charges of more than three offences, but this illegality cannot be corrected by the argument that if the charges had been framed in the alternative under sec. 236 there would have been no defect in the trial—Chello v. Emp., 49 Cal. 555, 24 Cr.L.J. 86.

Charges must be separate.—Alternative charges under two sections cannot be combined together in one head of charge. If the Magistrate desires to charge the accused in the alternative, he must frame two separate alternative charges—Emp. v. Po Thin, 7 Rang. 96, 30 Cr.L.J. 750, 1929 Cr. C. 356. Thus a charge in the alternative, of embezzlement and abetment thereof, must not be considered as one charge, the provisions of sec. 236 designate them as different charges in the alternation—Janeshar v. Emp., 51 All. 544, 30 Cr.L.J. 687 (689).

763. Contradictory statements.—Illustration (b) shows that contradictory statements constitute the offence of giving false evidence, although it cannot be proved which of the two statements is false.

An alternative charge in respect of two contradictory statements can be framed only when the prosecution is unable to prove which of the two statements is false—Harnam v. Emp., 1890 P.R. 27; Pub Pro v. Muthu Vannan, 2 Weir 300. Otherwise two separate charges ought to be framed, one relating to each statement, and such evidence as is procurable should be adduced to prove the falsity of one or other of the two statements—Pub Pro v. Kali Vannan, 2 Weir 299.

To attract the applicability of this section and justify a charge in the alternative in respect of contradictory statements, it is essential to remember that it is only when the statements constitute a series of acts that an alternative charge can be framed under this section. Thus, there is a common relation between a police investigation, an inquiry by the Magistrate preliminary to commitment, and a final trial in the Sessions Court; the words 'series of acts' would be applicable to the statements made at these different stages, and an alternative charge can be framed in respect of the statements—Saleh Shah v. Crown, 16 S.L.R. 285, 25

Cr.L.J. 1195, A.I.R. 1924 Sind. 1; Patraji v. Emp., 12 O.L.J. 644, 2 O.W.N. 637, 26 Cr.L.J. 1457.

764. Sentence :—When the conviction is in the alternative, the Court should pass the maximum sentence provided for the lesser of the two alternative charges—Hira v. Emp., 15 A.L.J. 587, 18 Cr.L.J. 799; Sobha Singh v. K. E., 1903 P.L.R. 63.

237. (1) If, in the case mentioned in section 236, the accused is charged with one offence and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it.

(2) (Omitted.)

Illustration.

A is charged with theft; it appears that he committed the offence of criminal breach of trust or that of receiving stolen goods. He may be convicted of criminal breach of trust or of receiving stolen goods (as the case may be), though he was not charged with such offence.

Change —Sub-section (2) has been omitted from this section but has been re-enacted as sub-section (2A) of section 238, as it should be more appropriately placed under that section.

765. Scope of section :—Section 237 has to be read with section 236. It applies to cases where sec. 236 applies. If the facts of the case do not fall under sec. 236, sec. 237 has got no application—Genu Manji v. K. E., 18 C.W.N. 1276, Harun Rashid v. Emp., 53 Cal. 466, 30 C.W.N. 432, 27 Cr.L.J. 606, Akram Ali v. Emp., 18 C.L.J. 574; Raghunath v. Emp., 24 A.L.J. 168, 27 Cr.L.J. 152. It is an enabling section which empowers the Court to convict the accused of offences for which no charge has been framed but for which a charge could have been framed under sec. 236—Bhowanath v. Emp., 4 P.L.W. 40, 19 Cr.L.J. 202.

766. Conviction for different offence :—If on the facts found, of which the accused may be taken to have notice, another offence appears to have been committed by him, and if on those facts it seems doubtful as to which offence the accused has committed, he may be convicted under secs. 236 and 237 of the other offence—Dibakar v. Saktidhar, 54 Cal. 476, 31 C.W.N. 527, 28 Cr.L.J. 404. Thus, a person charged with and tried under sec. 411 I. P. C. (receiving stolen property) may be convicted of an offence under sec. 379 I. P. C. (theft)—Q. E. v. Karim Baksh, 1888 A.W.N. 116. Similarly, a person charged with theft may be convicted of receiving stolen property—In re Kuppam Ambalam, 17 M.L.J. 219 A person charged with criminal breach of trust (sec. 405 I. P. C.) may be convicted of the offence of criminal misappropriation (sec. 403 I. P. C.)—Dwarkadas v. Emp., 30 Bom. L.R. 1270, 30 Cr.L.J. 329 (330). A person charged under sec. 278 I. P. Code may be convicted under sec. 290 I. P. C.—Emp. v. Shiva Dat, 3 Luck. 680, 5 O.W.N. 641, 29 Cr.L.J. 893 (894). A person charged with criminal breach of trust may be convicted of attempting to cheat—Reg. v. Ramajiraw, 12 B.H.C.R. 1 A person charged under sec. 380 I. P. C. may be convicted under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act, although he was not charged with the latter offence—Tulsi Telni v. Emp., 50 Cal. 564 Where the circumstances of a case were such that it was open to the Crown to have charged the accused under secs. 457, 395 or 392 of the I. P. Code, and the accused were charged under sec. 395 but convicted under sec. 457 I. P. C., although there was no fresh charge under the latter section, held that the conviction was not illegal in view of the provisions of secs. 236 and 237 Cr. P. Code—Mathura v. Emp., 2 Luck. 444, 28 Cr.L.J. 460

But the two offences (i.e. the offence charged and the offence of which the accused is convicted) must be cognate offences Secs. 236 and 237 refer to cognate offences such as theft and criminal breach of trust, and do not relate to offences of so distinct a nature as murder and theft—Q. E. v. Narotam, 1888 A.W.N. 95, Wallu v. Crown, 4 Lah. 373, 25 Cr.L.J. 385; Gulabchand, 28 Cr.L.J. 189 (Nag.). In other words, the alteration of finding must not be such as to prejudice the accused by making him answer a charge of an entirely different character, necessitating a distinct defence altogether Thus, where the accused was charged with theft of a tree, he could not be convicted under sec. 143 I. P. C. on the ground that he had gone with his men to the spot armed with lathis, as the defence for the two charges must be distinct, and the accused must be held to have been prejudiced by the alteration of charge—Dibakar v. Saktidhar, 54 Cal. 476, 31 C.W.N. 527, 28 Cr.L.J. 404. A person charged with rape cannot be convicted of kidnapping, since the two offences involve different elements and different questions of fact—Emp. v. Sakharan, 8 Bom. L.R. 120 Persons charged with dacoity cannot be convicted of receiving stolen property—Reg. v. Gopala, Ratanlal 34 A person charged with dacoity cannot be convicted of grievous hurt—Rameshwar, 5 O.W.N. 601, 29 Cr.L.J. 763; or of house trespass—Q. v. Salamul, 23 W.R. 59 A person charged with the offence of abetment of forgery cannot be convicted of the offence of using a forged document, because the latter offence is a distinct and different offence from the former, and was committed subsequent to it The abetment of forgery was complete when the document was written and signed; the use of the forged document was a subsequent act, and was a different offence for which the accused should be separately charged—Harun v. Emp. 53 Cal. 466, 27 Cr.L.J. 606 But a person charged with murder (sec. 302 I. P. C.) may be convicted of causing evidence of murder to disappear (sec. 201 I. P. C.) without any charge in respect of the latter offence, because the accused might have been charged with the two offences in the alternative, under sec. 236—Beg v. Emp., 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.), 30 C.W.N. 581, 27 Bom. L.R. 707, 23 A.L.J. 636, 48 M.L.J. 643, 26 Cr.L.J. 1059; Rannun v. K. E., 7 Lah. 84, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 83, 27 Cr.L.J. 709; Umed Sheikh v. Emp., 30 C.W.N. 816, 27 Cr.L.J. 1011; Dal Singh v. Emp., 29 Cr.L.J. 457 (458) (Lah.) A person charged with murder (sec. 302 I. P. C.) can be convicted under sec. 193 I. P. C. of fabricating false evidence in respect of the murder in order to throw off suspicion from himself—Emp v. Ismail, 52 Bom. 335, 29 Cr.L.J. 403 (405).

A person charged under sec. 452 I. P. Code cannot be convicted of an offence under sec. 19 Arms Act, because the latter offence is an offence under a special Act and the accused was not charged with it and had no opportunity of meeting it—Emp v. Nga Shue, 4 Rang. 355, 27 Cr.L.J. 1360.

A person who is charged under secs. 149 and 325 I. P. C. with having constructively committed the offence of causing grievous hurt, by being a member of an unlawful assembly, cannot be convicted under sec. 325 I. P. C. of causing grievous hurt with his own hands—Panchu Das v. Emp., 34 Cal. 693; K. E. v. Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662. But the Madras High Court is of opinion that if a person is being charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly, one of the members of which caused grievous hurt in pursuance of the common object, there is no necessary implication that that particular member (who caused the grievous hurt) is not himself. Consequently if he is charged under secs. 326 and 149 I. P. C. with causing grievous hurt by implication by reason of his being a member of an unlawful assembly, and it is found that he himself caused the grievous hurt, he may be convicted under sec. 326 I. P. C. alone of the substantive offence of causing grievous hurt himself—Theethumalai v. K. E., 47 Mad. 746 (F.B.), 47 M.L.J. 221, 35 M.L.T. 21.

The accused were convicted by a Magistrate under secs. 326 and 149 I. P. Code. The Sessions Judge on appeal found that the element of unlawful common object in the assembly as a whole, which is required to convict the accused under sec. 326 read with sec. 149 was wanting, but as the petitioners had the common intention to cause grievous hurt, he convicted them under sec. 326 read with sec. 34 I. P. Code, without framing a specific charge under those sections. Held, that the conviction was not bad—Bhonda Das v. Emp., 7 Pat. 758, 30 Cr.L.J. 205 (208). In this case it was further held that the contrary view taken in Razuddi v. Emp., 16 C.W.N. 1071, 13 Cr.L.J. 502 must be deemed as overruled by the Privy Council case of Barendra v. Emp., 53 Cal. 197, 29 C.W.N. 181.

Alteration of charge necessary—When a person is charged with one offence and is convicted of a different offence, the Court should alter the charge under sec. 227 of this Code before conviction. Sec. 237 does not imply that a person charged under one section of the I. P. C. may be convicted under another section, without altering the charge—Q. E. v. Karim Baksh, 1888 A.W.N. 116. When the charge is altered, the altered charge must be read and explained to the accused as provided in clause (2) of sec. 227—Dhum Singh v. Emp., 23 A.L.J. 436; Raghu-nath v. Emp., 24 A.L.J. 168, 27 Cr.L.J. 152. Unless this is done, the conviction under the altered charge will be set aside—Raghu-nath v. Emp. (supra).

767. Power of Appellate Court :—An Appellate Court has power to convict the accused for an offence, though he was not charged with and tried for that offence in the original Court—Lala Ojha v. Q. E., 26 Cal. 863, Kalicharan v. Emp., 41 Cal. 537, 18 C.W.N. 309; Jawad Husain v. Emp., 2 Luck 503, 28 Cr.L.J. 673, Emp. v. Ismail, 52 Bom. 385, 29 Cr.L.J. 403 (405). And the Appellate Court can do so not only under this section but also under sec. 423 (b) (2)—Krishnan v. Emp., (1916) 2 M.W.N. 267, 17 Cr.L.J. 384.

But in so altering the conviction the Appellate Court must consider in each particular case as to whether the procedure followed by it, although it may be strictly correct in law, is one which should be adopted in the case. If the prosecution establishes certain acts constituting an offence, and the Court misapplies the law by charging and convicting an accused person for an offence other than that for which he should have been properly charged, and if notwithstanding such error the accused has by his defence endeavoured to meet the accusation of the commission of these acts, then the Appellate Court may alter the charge or finding and convict him for an offence which those acts properly constitute, provided the accused be not prejudiced by the alteration in the finding. Such an error is one of form rather than of substance—Lala Ojha v. Q. E., 26 Cal. 863, 3 C.W.N. 653. Thus, the accused was convicted by the trial Court for theft of a tree, under sec. 379 I.P.C. The lower Appellate Court found that the accused bona fide believed the tree to be his own, and set aside the conviction for theft but convicted the accused under sec. 143 I.P.C. on the ground that he had gone with his men to the spot armed with lathis, held that the conviction by the Appellate Court was illegal, inasmuch as the defence in the two charges must be distinct and the accused must be held to have been prejudiced by the alteration of conviction into one under sec. 143 I.P. Code—Dibakar v. Saktidhar, 54 Cal. 476, 31 C.W.N. 527, 28 Cr.L.J. 404.

offence, and such combination is proved, but the remaining particulars are not proved, he may be convicted of the minor offence, though he was not charged with it.

(2) When a person is charged with an offence, and facts are proved which reduce it to a minor offence, he may be convicted of the minor offence, although he is not charged with it.

(2A) When a person is charged with an offence, he may be convicted of an attempt to commit such offence, although the attempt is not separately charged.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize a conviction of any offence referred to in Section 198 or Section 199 when no complaint has been made as required by that section.

Illustrations.

(a) A is charged, under Section 407 of the Indian Penal Code, with criminal breach of trust in respect of property entrusted to him as a carrier. It appears that he did commit criminal breach of trust under Section 406 in respect of the property, but that it was not entrusted to him as a carrier. He may be convicted of criminal breach of trust under Section 406.

(b) A is charged, under Section 325 of the Indian Penal Code, with causing grievous hurt. He proves that he acted on grave and sudden provocation. He may be convicted under Section 335 of the Code.

Change.—By section 64 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) sub-section (2) of section 237 has been transferred to the present section and re-enacted as sub-section (2A), it being more appropriate under this section than under section 237.

768. Principle of section :—Where an offence consists of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence, the graver charge gives notice to the accused of all the circumstances going to constitute the minor offence of which he may be convicted. The latter is arrived at by mere subtraction from the former. But when the circumstances constituting the major charge do not necessarily and according to the definition of the offence imputed by that charge constitute the minor offence also, the principle no longer applies, because notice of the former does not necessarily involve notice of all that constitutes the latter—Reg. v. Chand Nur, 11 B.H.C.R. 240.

Though a Magistrate has power under this section to convict the accused of a different offence from what he was originally accused of, still this must be done only in cases where the accused is not in any way prejudiced by the conviction on the new charge. The accused person is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge brought against him, and unless he has this knowledge, he must be seriously prejudiced in his defence—Balkeshwar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 322, 23 Cr.L.J. 114. But where the accused is charged under sec 457 I. P. C. for criminal trespass with intent to commit theft, it is open to the Magistrate to convict him under sec 456 I. P. C. for criminal trespass with intent to carry on an intrigue with a woman, and the accused is not in any way prejudiced by such conviction, because to sustain a conviction under sec 456 I. P. C. it is not necessary to specify the criminal intention, it is sufficient if a guilty intention is proved such as is contemplated in sec. 441 I. P. C.—Karali v Emp., 44 Cal. 358, 17 Cr.L.J. 424.

But the Patna High Court holds in a similar case that on a charge of criminal trespass with intent to commit theft the accused cannot be convicted of criminal trespass with intent to commit adultery, because he will be prejudiced by such a conviction—Balkeshwar v Emp., 3 P L T 322, 23 Cr.L.J. 114.

"Minor offence"—Minor offence is not defined anywhere in the Code and should be understood in its ordinary and not in any technical sense—Q. E. v. Sitanath, 22 Cal 1006. It means an offence deserving a lesser degree of punishment.

This section enables a Court to convict a person of a minor offence, although he was charged with a major offence, but it does not enable a Court to do the contrary, i.e. to convict on a major offence when the accused was charged with a minor one—Q. E. v. Durgya, 1 Bom. L R 513.

769. Cases under this section :—An offence under section 365 I. P. C. can be said to be a minor offence as compared with secs. 366 and 376 I. P. C. and a person charged under the latter sections can be convicted of the offence under the former section (365 I. P. C.) even though he was not charged with it—Q. E. v. Sitanath, 22 Cal. 1006. A person charged with dacoity may be convicted of theft, though he was charged with dacoity and not with theft—Q. E. v. Khoda, 17 Bom. 369. A person charged with an offence under sec. 457 can be convicted of an offence under sec. 414 I. P. C., since the latter offence is included in the former—Q. E. v. Balu, Ratanlal 293.

Where the graver offence of rioting was not proved, the Magistrate was competent to try the accused for the lesser offence of assault—Q. E. v. Papadu, 7 Mad. 454. Where the accused is charged with offences under secs. 304 and 325 I. P. C., he may be convicted under sec. 323 I. P. C.—Dasarath v. Emp., 34 Cal. 325. An offence under sec. 211 I. P. C. includes an offence under sec. 182 I. P. C. and therefore it is competent for the Magistrate to convict under sec. 182, though the accused may be charged under sec. 211 I. P. C.—Crown v. Khubomal, 8 S L R. 179, 16 Cr.L.J. 104. A person charged under section 457 I. P. C. for criminal trespass with intent to commit theft can be convicted of an offence under sec. 456 I. P. C. for criminal trespass with intent to carry on intrigue with a woman—Karali v. Emp., 44 Cal. 358, 20 C.W.N. 1075. Where the common object of an unlawful assembly is to commit criminal trespass, a person charged under section 147 I. P. C. for being a member of an unlawful assembly can be convicted under sec. 447 I. P. C. (criminal trespass), because the latter offence is a minor one and included in the former—Ariff v Emp., 18 C.W.N. 992. Where the charge is under sec. 430 I. P. Code (mischief by cutting the embankment of a reservoir), the conviction can be under sec. 426 I. P. C. (mischief)—Banamali v K. E., 6 P.L.T., 39, 26 Cr.L.J. 682.

In the trial of an accused by a Sessions Judge with the aid of assessors for an offence so triable, it is competent to the Judge to convict the accused of a minor offence though that offence is triable only by a jury—Emp v. Changauda, 45 Bom 619. Similarly, an accused charged under sec 412 I. P. C. (triable by jury) can be convicted under sec. 411 I. P. C (triable with the aid of assessors) though not separately charged with the latter offence—Emp. v. Gulabchand, 27 Bom. L.R. 1416, 27 Cr.L.J. 650.

770. Cases not under this section:—A charge under sec. 376 I. P. C cannot be altered into a conviction under sec 366 I. P. C because the two sections involve different elements and different questions of fact, and the latter cannot be said to be minor to or included in the former—Emp. v. Sakharam, 8 Bom. L.R. 120; G. C. Sircar v. Emp., 3 Rang 69, 4 Bur. L.J. 29. Similarly, where the accused was charged with murder but the evidence disclosed an offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship, a conviction for the latter offence could not be sustained since it was neither minor to nor included in the former offence—Savari Ayce, 2 Weir 302. An offence under sec 202 I. P. C. is not a minor offence included in the offence under sec. 201 I. P. C. and therefore a conviction for the former offence cannot be had where the charge was under the latter section only—Imp v Rino, 5 S L R. 123, 13 Cr.L.J. 18. A person charged with dacoity and riot cannot be convicted for house trespass, the latter offence not being a part of the former—Q. v. Salamut Ali, 23 W R 59. A person charged with dacoity or house-breaking by night cannot be convicted of dishonestly receiving stolen property; because none of the particulars which go to make up the offence of dacoity or house-breaking constitute by themselves the offence of receiving stolen property; and hence the latter offence cannot be considered as a minor offence included in the dacoity or house-breaking—Achpal v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1361 (Lah). A person charged with robbery cannot be convicted of house-breaking by night and theft in a dwelling house, because all the particulars constituting the latter offences are not included in the definition of robbery with which the accused was charged—Q. E. v. Dala, Ratanlal 211. A person charged with murder cannot be convicted of robbery—Walla v Crown, 4 Lah. 373, 25 Cr.L.J. 385.

Rioting and hurt etc —Where the accused were charged with rioting, they could not be convicted of criminal trespass and hurt, because none of the latter offences was a necessary ingredient of the offence of rioting and it was not proved that the common object of rioting was criminal trespass or hurt—In re Mongalu, 18 Cr.L.J. 860 (Mad). A charge of rioting under sec. 149 I. P. Code does not include as a minor offence any specific act of violence by an individual accused so as to authorise a conviction under sec. 352 I. P. Code—Malla Gope v. Emp., 10 P.L.T. 875, 30 Cr.L.J. 891 (892); Kanta v. Emp., 12 Cr.L.J. 82 (Cal).

Where the accused is charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly and with committing grievous hurt by implication (secs 149 and 325 I. P. C.) he cannot be convicted of the substantive offence of causing grievous hurt under sec. 325 by his individual act; because under no reasonable construction of this section can the substantive offence of causing grievous hurt individually be regarded as minor to or included in the charge under secs 325 and 149 I. P. C of causing grievous hurt by implication—Panchu v Emp., 34 Cal. 608; Emp. v. Madan Mandal, 41 Cal 662; Dasarath v Emp., 34 Cal. 325; Reazuddi v. K. E., 16 C.W.N. 1077 Contra—Theethumalai v. K. E., 47 Mad. 746 (F.B.) cited in Note 766 under sec. 237.

771. Sub-section (2A)—Attempt.—Under this sub-section, when an accused is charged with an offence he may be convicted of having attempted to commit that offence, although the attempt was not separately charged—Sadho Lal v K. E., 1 P L J 391, 17 Cr.L.J. 272; Bilinghurst v. Blackburn, 27 C W N 821; In re Doraiswami, 48 Mad. 774, 48 M L J 190, 26 Cr L.J 755

Abetment—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a person charged with a substantive offence can be convicted of abetment of that offence. In Padmanabha, 33 Mad 264, Sheoratin v Emp., 21 Cr L.J. 44 (Pat.), Darbars v Emp., 22 Cr L J 311, Muthu Karakku v Emp., 1922 M.W.N 182, 23 Cr L J 206, Emp v. Raghya, 26 Bom. L R. 323, 25 Cr.L.J. 1135, Hulas v. Emp., 44 C.L.J 216, 28 Cr L J 2, Mahabir v. Emp., 49 All. 120, 27 Cr.L.J. 1118, and Reg. v. Chand Nur, 11 B.H.C.R. 240, it has been held that it is improper for a Court to find a man guilty of the abetment of an offence, on a charge of the substantive offence only; because when a man is accused of a substantive offence, he may not be conscious that he will have to meet an imputation of collateral circumstances constituting an abetment of it, which may be quite distinct from the circumstances constituting the substantive offence itself. A charge for the substantive offence as such gives no intimation of a trial to be held for the abetment. But in Yeditha v Emp., 23 M.L.J. 772, 13 Cr.L.J 453, and Kehr Singh v Crown, 1921 P.W R 11, 22 Cr.L.J. 161, it has been said that if on the facts proved two charges can be framed, viz., the commission of the principal offence and the abetment thereof, the accused can be convicted of the offence of abetment, though it was not separately charged against him. It cannot be laid down as a universal rule that a person charged with a substantive offence only cannot be convicted of abetment thereof, the answer depends on the facts of each case, and it must be seen in each case whether prejudice has been caused to the accused by such conviction—Kadira v. Emp., 29 Cr L.J. 1093 (1095) (Cal); Jnanada Charan v. Emp., 50 C L.J. 472, 1929 Cr C 595 (596), Indar Chand v Emp., 42 Cal. 1094 (1133).

An accused may be convicted of a substantive offence though he was charged only with abetment of that offence, see Lal Chand v. Crown, 1912 P.W.R. 17, 13 Cr.L.J 252.

772. Sub-section (3)—When minor offence requires complaint :— See sub-section (3). A person charged with one offence cannot be convicted of a minor offence, if the latter offence requires a complaint by a particular person mentioned in secs. 198 and 199. Thus, the offence of adultery requires complaint by the husband, and therefore a person charged with rape cannot be convicted of adultery in the absence of a complaint by the husband. Even the husband's giving evidence in the case will not amount to a complaint—Emp v. Kallu, 5 All 233. See Notes 650 and 654 under secs. 198 and 199.

773. Power of Appellate Court and High Court :— The powers under this section may be exercised by Appellate Courts, an Appellate Court can alter a conviction for a major offence into a conviction for a minor offence—Hanuman v. Emp., 20 A.L.J. 213, 23 Cr.L.J. 198.

Where the jury acquitted the prisoners of certain offences and found some other facts upon which the jury could have convicted them of some other offence, but did not convict, the High Court has power to convict the prisoners of the latter offence—Emp v. Harai Mircha, 3 Cal. 189.

sons than one are accused of the same offence or of different offences committed in the same transaction, or when one person is accused of committing any offence and another of abetment of, or attempt to commit, such offence, they may be charged and tried together or separately as the Court thinks fit, and the provisions contained in the former part of this Chapter shall apply to all such charges.

239. The following persons may be charged and tried together, namely :—

(a) persons accused of the same offence committed in the course of the same transaction;

(b) persons accused of an offence and persons accused of abetment or of an attempt to commit such offence;

(c) persons accused of more than one offence of the same kind within the meaning of section 234 committed by them jointly within the period of twelve months;

(d) persons accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction;

(e) persons accused of an offence which includes theft, extortion or criminal misappropriation, and persons accused of receiving or retaining or assist-in the disposal or concealment of property possession of which is alleged to have been transferred by any such offence committed by the first named persons, or of abetment of or attempting to commit any such last named offence;

(f) persons accused of offences under sections 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code or either of those sections in respect of stolen property the possession of which has been transferred by one offence; and

(g) persons accused of any offence under Chapter XII of the Indian Penal Code relating to counterfeit coin, and persons accused of any other offence under the said Chapter relating to the same coin, or of abetment of or attempting to commit any such offence; and the provisions contained in the former part of this Chapter shall, so far as may be, apply to all such charges.

(b) A and B are accused of robbery, in the course of which A commits a murder with which B has nothing to do. A and B may be tried together on a charge, charging both of them with the robbery, and A alone with the murder.

(c) A and B are both charged with a theft and B is charged with two other thefts committed by him in the course of the same transaction A and B may be both tried together on a charge, charging both with the one theft, and B alone with the two other thefts

772. Sub-section (3)—When minor offence requires complaint.—See sub-section (3). A person charged with one offence cannot be convicted of a minor offence, if the latter offence requires a complaint by a particular person mentioned in secs. 198 and 199. Thus, the offence of adultery requires complaint by the husband, and therefore a person charged with rape cannot be convicted of adultery in the absence of a complaint by the husband. Even the husband's giving evidence in the case will not amount to a complaint—Emp. v. Kallu, 5 All. 233. See Notes 650 and 654 under secs. 198 and 199.

773. Power of Appellate Court and High Court:—The powers under this section may be exercised by Appellate Courts; an Appellate Court can alter a conviction for a major offence into a conviction for a minor offence—Hanuman v. Emp., 20 A.L.J. 213, 23 Cr L.J. 198

Where the jury acquitted the prisoners of certain offences and found some other facts upon which the jury could have convicted them of some other offence, but did not convict, the High Court has power to convict the prisoners of the latter offence—Emp. v. Harai Mirdha, 3 Cal 189.

239. When more persons than one are accused of the same offence or of different offences committed in the same transaction, or when one person is accused of committing any offence and another of abetment of, or attempt to commit, such offence, they may be charged and tried together or separately as the Court thinks fit, and the provisions contained in the former part of this Chapter shall apply to all such charges.

Change:—This section has been redrafted by sec 65 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

The actual change brought about by this amendment is the addition of clauses (c), (e), (f) and (g). "It is provided that when two or more persons are accused of offences of the same kind committed by them jointly during the space of one year, they may be tried for the same at one trial. Secondly, it is directed that when one person is accused of any offence which includes theft, etc., and another of receiving, or retaining or disposing of the stolen property, they may be tried jointly. Thirdly, provision is made for the joint trial of one person accused of counterfeiting coin and another of fraudulently possessing or uttering it"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) Fourthly, another clause i.e., clause (f), has been added by the Select Committee of 1916 allowing the joint trial of persons accused of offences under secs 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code.

774. Scope and Application:—This section lays down certain general principles for the combination of charges in a joint trial of several persons. The object of these principles is to avoid the likelihood of bewildering the accused in their defence by having to meet many disconnected charges and of endangering the prospect of a fair trial by the production of a mass of evidence directed to many matters and tending by its mere accumulation to induce an undue suspicion against the accused persons—Sanuman v Emp, 19 A.L.J. 392, 22 Cr.L.J. 641.

This is the last exception to sec. 233 which lays down the general principle that every offence must be charged and tried separately. This is the only section which authorises a joint trial of several persons under the circumstances specified in this section. Except in cases falling under this section, a joint trial of several accused renders the trial invalid—Emp v Balwant Singh, 4 N.L.R. 71, and a misjoinder thus taking place is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by the provisions of sec. 537—Lachchu v. Emp 1 O.L.J. 141, 15 Cr.L.J. 420, or by any waiver or consent of parties or their pleaders—Hussein Baksh v Emp., 6 Cal 96.

This section applies to trials and not to inquiries. The sections of the Cr. P. C. relating to joinder of charges viz., 233 to 239 refer to trial of the accused and cannot be extended to preliminary inquiries held by Magistrates prior to commitment to the Sessions—In re Govinda, 26 Mad. 592. Therefore in a joint commitment of several accused it is not necessary that the conditions of this section should be fulfilled—Nelluru Chenchia v. Rex, 42 Mad 561, 36 M.L.J. 296, 20 Cr.L.J. 379.

But this section is applicable to inquiries under Chapter VIII. The main principles applicable to a criminal trial regarding joinder of charges and the joint trial of accused persons are also applicable to inquiries under Chapter VIII—Pran Krishna v Emp, 8 C.W.N 180; Bachu Molla v. Sia Ram, 14 Cal 358; Q. E. v. Abdul Kadir, 9 All 452; Q. E. v. Natha, 6 All. 214; Q. E. v. Gaiba, Ratanlal 585, Q. E. v. Bapu, Ratanlal 556.

Again, this section does not apply to trials of cross-cases. The trial of the accused in the two cross-cases ought to be separate. But a simultaneous trial is not altogether invalid but somewhat irregular—Sahadeb v. Emp., 8 C.W.N. 344; Chokowri v. Mati, 13 C.L.R. 275. See Note 749.

775. Clause (a)—“Persons accused of the same offence”

—The words ‘same offence’ imply that both the accused should have acted in concert or association; and therefore where the allegation was that either one or the other committed the crime, this section does not apply and the two accused must be tried separately according to sec. 233—Azimuddin v. Emp., 6 Bur.L.T. 191, 7 L B R 68, 14 Cr.L.J. 563. Where it is merely shown that part of the stolen property was found in the possession of one person, and another part was found in the possession of another, it would probably be illegal to try the two men together, but if the two men were acting in concert and were in joint control of the stolen property, their joint trial would not be illegal—Jadunandan v. K. E., 1 P.L.J. 64, 17 Cr.L.J. 234; Musai Khamat v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 431, 21 Cr.L.J. 757. Two persons found in possession of stolen properties cannot be tried together on a charge under sec 411 I P C where there was no connecting link between the two, and there was no suggestion that either or both of them were the original thieves, and the only connecting link between them was that each of them retained some property stolen from the same complainant—Moosan v. Emp., 20 A L J 563, A I R 1922 All 459. Unless the receiving of stolen property is joint, persons cannot be tried jointly under this section for receiving stolen property, merely because the goods were stolen in one theft—Emp. v. Balgovind, 17 Cr. L.J. 477 (All); Jiwan v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 815, 23 Cr L J 409. But see 6 Pat. 583, cited in Note 781 under clause (f) below.

Where two persons were charged with criminal misappropriation with respect to a certain sum of money, held that there was a misjoinder of charges because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriation of the same parcel of money. The charges against them must be of misappropriation by one accused and abetment by the other. It is also open to the Court to frame the charges against each of them in the alternative, i.e., of misappropriation or of abetment—Girwar v. K. E., 16 C W N. 600, 13 Cr L J 506 (507).

Same transaction.—See Note 756 under sec 235. The joint trial of four prostitutes for breach of the notice issued under sec. 153 of the Punjab Municipal Act is illegal, the four prostitutes lived in four different houses, although the houses were adjoining, and their failure to obey the notice could not be regarded as one transaction—Aisha v. Emp., 7 Lah. 168, 27 P L R 188, 27 Cr L J 465

Persons guilty of the offence of giving false evidence in a case can be tried jointly. Thus, where certain persons were witnesses on the same side in a criminal case and all gave evidence on the same point and to the same effect, to prove the same fact, held that the evidence in the case of all the witnesses were given in the same transaction, so as to make a joint trial of such persons for perjury legal. There was the most obvious identity of purpose, and that is sufficient to constitute the same transaction —Rafuizzaman v. Chhotey Lal, 48 All. 325, 24 A.L.J. 472, 27 Cr.L.J. 445, Emp. v. Ganesh, 14 Bom.L.R. 972, 13 Cr.L.J. 833; Emp. v. Sejmaj, 51 Bom. 310, 29 Bom.L.R. 170, 28 Cr.L.J. 373. But in the following cases of the Allahabad, Madras, Bombay and Calcutta High Courts, it has been held that where several persons are charged with having given false evidence in the same proceeding, each of them should be separately tried—Emp. v. Anant Ram, 4 All. 293; Q. E. v. Nathu, 10 Cal. 405, Q. E. v. Kotha Subha Chetti, 6 Mad 252; Emp. v. Krishnarao, 4 Bom L R 53. The Sind Court also holds that the joint trial of two or more persons charged with giving false evidence in the same judicial proceeding is not permissible under sec. 239. The false evidence given by one witness is a transaction complete in itself and not connected with false evidence given by another witness, even though on the same case and on the same point—Imp. v. Alu, 5 S.L.R. 129, 13 Cr.L.J. 23. The same view has been taken by the Nagpur Court in Gunwant v. Emp., 13 N.L.R. 35, 18 Cr L J. 339 (342).

The word "transaction" must not be interpreted in any special or artificial or conventional or technical way, but as it is ordinarily used by men of education and common sense. If you cannot speak of a series of events as a transaction in the ordinary sense in which that word is used, you cannot try a number of persons together in respect of those events by attributing a special and unusual meaning to the word—In re Gam Mallu, 49 Mad 74, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513 (1521). The usual tests applied to decide whether different acts are parts of the same transaction are proximity of time, unity of place, unity of purpose or design and continuity of action. It is not necessary that all of them should be present to make the several incidents parts of the same transaction. Unity of place and proximity of time are not important tests at all; but the main test is unity of purpose. If the various acts are done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as accessory thereto, they may be treated as parts of the same transaction—Gam Mallu, supra, C. Venkatadri v. Emp., 33 Mad. 502, 11 Cr.L.J. 258. The expression "same transaction" must be understood as including both the immediate cause and effect of an act or event, and also its collocation, or relevant circumstances, the other necessary antecedents of its occurrence, connected with it, at a reasonable distance of time, space, cause and effect—Emp. v. Ring, 53 Bom. 479, 1929 Cr. C. 114 (121). For a joint trial under sec. 239, identity of purpose is sufficient. Community of purpose in the sense of conspiracy is not in any way necessary, though if it is present, its presence will be a further element supporting a finding that the offences were committed in the same transaction—Rafuizzaman v Chhotey Lal, (supra). Six persons were accused of waging war against the King under sec. 121 I P. Code. The sixth accused joined the party after the 1st and the 2nd accused had been arrested. But the party to which the accused belonged continued under the leadership of the same man and actuated by the same purpose. Held that the joint trial of the 6th accused with the 1st and the 2nd accused was legal—In re Gam Mallu, 49 Mad. 74, 48 M L.J. 308, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513.

The printer and the publisher of a pamphlet alleged to be seditious can be tried jointly for an offence under sec. 124A, I. P. Code, because the printer and publisher are concerned in the same transaction in regard to the publication of the pamphlet. Even the author, the printer and the publisher may all be tried together, or at any rate the author and the publisher—Emp. v. Shantaram, 30 Bom.L.R. 320, 29 Cr.L.J. 683 (684).

Where there was no evidence of prior consultation or of identity of purpose, but the accused were separately engaged in the offence (stealing fish in a tank), they should not be tried jointly merely because they were gathered at the same time and in the same place—Samiullah v. Emp., 51 M.L.J. 692, 27 Cr.L.J. 1381.

776. Clause (b)—Abetment:—Where some of the accused are principal offenders, and the others accomplices, clause (b) of this section permits these all to be tried together in one trial—Sugalmuthu v. Emp., 50 Mad 274, 27 Cr L.J. 394. Thus, where a person who had a license for the sale of opium allowed another, who had no such license, to sell it, they could be jointly tried, the offence of the former being an abetment of the offence of the latter—Crown v Chhail Behari, 1906 P.L.R. 113. A licensed vendor is punishable under sec. 50 of the Bengal Excise Act for the acts of the servant, in such a case, the master is said to be an abettor of the servant by implication, and both may be tried together—Priya Nath v K. E., 15 C L J 692, 13 Cr L J. 255. When a person is charged with kidnapping, and three others with having abetted that offence at different places, all the four persons can be tried jointly at the place where the principal offence was committed—Q. E. v. Ramdei, 18 All. 350.

If A induces B to cheat, and B attempts to cheat in consequence, A and B may clearly be tried together for abetment of and attempt at cheating—Kali Das v. Emp., 38 Cal 453, 15 C W.N 463, 12 Cr.L J 106.

777. Clause (c)—Offences of the same kind:—Section 234 applies only to the case of one accused committing several offences of the same kind within a year. But where several persons committed several offences of the same kind, there was no provision under the old law for the joint trial of those persons, and consequently separate trial was necessary—Budhai v Tarap, 10 C W N 32. Thus it was held that where three dacoities were committed by several dacoits on three different dates and at separate places, the dacoits must be separately charged and tried for each dacoity as the offences were not committed in the same transaction—Ram Prosad v. K E., 19 A L J 796, 22 Cr L J 657. Where several persons looted the linseed crop of the complainant on one day and his tobacco crop on another day, the offences had to be tried separately as they were not parts of the same transaction—Budhai v Emp., 33 Cal. 292. These cases are now overruled by this clause. Under the present law, the offences can be tried together, provided that each offence is committed by the accused persons jointly, and it is not necessary that all the sets of offences must be committed in the same transaction. If the offences are not joint, this section cannot apply; thus, where three persons were found to be in possession of stolen articles but none of the articles were in their joint possession, they could not be tried jointly even though the articles were the proceeds of one burglary—Jiwan v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 815, 23 Cr L.J. 409; Moosan v. Emp., 20 A.L.J. 563. Where a woman was abducted by K and B, and then rape was committed on the woman at a place D by the two accused persons, and subsequently the woman was taken either by force or by fraud by one of the accused alone to different places, and where he alone committed rape on her, held that a joint charge of abduction against both the accused K and B under sec. 366 I. P. C. was justified, that a joint charge under sec. 376 I. P. C. against both of them in respect of the rape which took place at D was also justified, but a joint charge against both the accused of having committed rape at different places was improper and embarrassing—Keramat v. K. E., 42 C L J 524, 27 Cr L J 263.

The joint trial of two persons for passing counterfeit coins on three different occasions to three persons on the same date is valid under this subsection—In re Kovaganti, 44 M.L.J. 130, 23 Cr.L.J. 719, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 181.

778. Clause (d)—Distinct offences committed in the same transaction—For the meaning of the words 'same transaction' see Note 756 under section 235. If more persons than one are accused of different offences committed in a series of acts so connected as to form one transaction, they may be tried together. Whether or not the series of acts be so closely connected as to form the same transaction necessarily rests with the Court to decide. The limits are wide, but no joinder of charges or trials should be permitted which will result in bewildering any of the accused in his defence or in causing undue prejudice against him—Crown v Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr L.J. 191 (195).

To enable the Court to try at one trial several persons for several distinct offences, the offences must form part of the same transaction—Po Mya v Emp., 7 L.B.R. 272, 16 Cr L.J. 44; this clause does not apply to charges against several persons accused of several offences unless the acts constituting these offences form the same transaction—Budhai v Emp., 33 Cal 292, Ram Sarup v Emp., 9 C.W.N. 1027; Gunwant v. Emp., 13 N.L.R. 35, 18 Cr.L.J. 339, Sayad Lal v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 7; Karam Singh v. Crown, 1911 P.L.R. 122, Nur Khan v. Emp., 7 Lah L.J. 64, 26 Cr.L.J. 1167.

Where the accused were charged with the offences of murder, hurt and grievous hurt, under secs. 302, 323 and 325 I. P. C. and all the criminal acts were found to be the outcome of a conspiracy to kill on one day as many members of the deceased's family as could be found, held that the acts were so closely connected by continuity of purpose and progressive action towards a common object that they formed one transaction, and the joint trial of the accused in respect of all the charges was legal—Bahadur v. Crown, 7 Lah 264, 27 P.L.R. 379, 27 Cr.L.J. 803.

The expression 'same transaction' would imply oneness of purpose. If, in the course of some quarrel, arising accidentally among persons who have collected to witness a festival, there happens to be a fight and if some persons inflict injury on others, without any common object, they would be committing different offences of hurt. And if they do not act with any common intention, it cannot be said that they have caused hurt in the course of the 'same transaction' although all the persons committing the offences are there at one and the same place and at the same time. In such a case the joint trial of these persons would be improper—Tufail Ahmed v. Emp., 23 A.L.J 5, 26 Cr.L.J 731 Two festivals fell on the same day and on the same evening. An arrangement was agreed upon to the effect that the firing of fire-works should be stopped till the procession of dulendi passed off. But this arrangement was not adhered to by some people and they fired off fireworks at random and thereby caused damage and injury to the person and property of the public. Held that these persons could not be tried together, because the offences were not committed in the same transaction, there being no oneness of purpose among the accused—Tufail Ahmed, supra

It is also necessary that the accused must be associated together in the perpetration of the acts forming the same transaction from start to finish—Emp. v. Jethalal, 29 Bom 449, Emp v Datta Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49; Kushal v. Emp., 50 Cal 1004 (1009), Tulsi v Crown, 1917 P R 17, 18 Cr L J 282 But it is not necessary that all the persons must be charged with all the offences. See illustrations (b) and (c). In such cases, it is immaterial whether all the members of the party took an active part in each offence—Ram Prasad v Emp., 20 A L J 926 If the accused started together for the same goal, this suffices to justify the joint trial, even if incidentally some of them have done an act for which the others may not be responsible—Emp v. Datta Hanmant, 30 Bom 49; Gopal Raghunath v. Emp., 53 Bom 344, 30 Cr L J 588 (589), Kushal v. Emp., 50 Cal. 1004 (1010); Kalidas v. Emp., 38 Cal. 453; Tepanidhi v. K. E., 1 P.L.T. 180, 5 P.L.J 11; In re Loganathiyar, 6 M L T 17, 11 Cr L J. 30, Prag v K. E., 11 O L J 693, 25 Cr L J 1169 If the accused started together for the same goal, and in the process committed a series of acts, they could be jointly tried for those offences, although the acts were separated by intervals of time—Ashutosh v Purna Chandra, 50 Cal 159 (164). The foundation for the procedure laid down in this section is the association of two persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end. Community of purpose or design and continuity of action are the essential elements of the connection necessary to link together different acts into one and the same transaction. In such cases the acts alleged to be connected with each other must have been done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as necessary thereto—Tepanidhi v. K. E., 5 P.L.J 11, 1 P.L.T 180, Jitan v Emp., 1 P.L.T 564 Where the accusation against all the accused persons is that they carried out a single scheme by successive acts done at intervals, and there was a complete unity of project, and the whole series of acts were so linked together by one motive and design as to constitute one transaction, a joint trial is not only valid but is demanded in the interest of public time and convenience—Kushal Mallik v. Emp., 50 Cal. 1004, Emp v Ganesh, 14 Bom L.R. 972, 13 Cr L J 833 Thus, where a girl is abducted on a certain night, and thereafter various people concealed her, the offence being a continuing offence, all the persons can be tried together—Kushai Mallik, 50 Cal. 1004, 25 Cr.L.J. 1082. In a trial for a charge under sec. 147 I. P. Code, it is not illegal to frame charges under secs. 324 and 325 I. P. C. against particular accused persons, although these offences were committed by them outside the scope of the common object mentioned in the charge under sec. 147, if all the acts with which the accused are charged form one transaction—Rasul v. Emp., 3 Luck. 664, 5 O W N 612, 29 Cr.L.J. 801 (802).

It is sufficient for the purposes of this clause that the offences were committed in the course of the same transaction. It is immaterial whether the charge is an alternative one or is a distinct charge, or whether the offences are substantive offences or abetment thereof—Kalikumar v. Nawabali, 30 Cr.L.J. 610 (Cal).

Charged need not specify same transaction:—It suffices for the purpose of a joint trial that the accusation alleges the offences committed by each accused to have been committed in the same transaction within the meaning of this section. It is not necessary that the charge should contain a statement as to the transaction being one and the same. It is the tenor of the accusation and not the wording of the charge that must be considered as the test—Emp v Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49.

Examples of offences committed in the same transaction:—

(1) Criminal breach of trust by one person, and receipt by another of the stolen property (the proceeds of the breach of trust) knowing it to be so—Emp v Balabhai, 6 Bom L.R. 517. In such a case it is not necessary that the offence of receiving should take place simultaneously with the offence of criminal breach of trust—Ibid.

(2) Where one set of accused were members of an unlawful assembly with the common object of setting fire to municipal buildings, and another accused was a member of that assembly with the object of forcibly closing a college, it was held that the proceedings of the mob consisting of several transactions from first to last showed such a continuity of purpose and action as to form one transaction, and all the rioters could be tried at one trial—In re Loganathayyar, 6 M L T 17, 11 Cr.L.J. 30.

(3) The offence of keeping a gaming house and the offence of playing therein arise out of facts so inseparably connected together as to form one transaction, and therefore the keeper and the players are clearly within the purview of this section as persons accused of different offences committed in the same transaction, and can be tried jointly—Khilinda Ram v. Crown, 3 Lah 359, 23 Cr.L.J. 621; Sheikh Moti v. Emp., 9 N.L.R. 68, 14 Cr.L.J. 293, Darab v. Emp., 50 All 412, 28 Cr.L.J. 1001 (1002); Bhana v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 6, 20 Cr.L.J. 219; Nathu Thakur v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 768 (Pat); Ganeshi Lal v. Emp., 20 A.L.J. 967. Contra—Crown v Fazel Din, 1914 P.R. 35, 16 Cr.L.J. 220, and Makhan v. Crown, 1910 P.W.R. 5, 11 Cr.L.J. 211, 5 I.C. 720, where it has been held that the two offences cannot be said to be parts of the same transaction.

(4) If several accused carry out a systematic scheme of criminal breach of trust, by successive acts done at intervals, each accused alternately taking the benefits, the unity of the project constitutes the acts as parts of one transaction, and all the accused can therefore be jointly tried—Emp. v. Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49.

(5) Charges of murder against three accused, and an alternative charge against one of them for murder or causing disappearance of evidence of murder can be jointly tried—Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191; Emp. v. Hanmappa, 25 Bom. L.R. 231, A.L.R. 1923 Bom. 262 Contra—Q. E. v. Dungar, 8 All 252.

(6) Where several persons were members of a secret society and conspired to wage war to deprive the King of the sovereignty of British India and collected arms and ammunitions for that purpose and actually waged war, it was held that the joint trial of all the accused for offences under sections 121, 121A, 122, 123 I P. C was legal—Barindra v Emp., 37 Cal. 467; and so long as the conspiracy continues, the transaction which began with the forming of the common intention continues—Khagendra v Emp., 19 C W N 700, 16 Cr L J 9.

(7) Where illegal gratification is paid to a person through another, the joint trial of both persons for offences under secs 161 and 162 I. P. C. is valid—In re Shrinivas, 7 Bom L R 637, 2 Cr L.J. 582

(8) Where several persons were entrusted with a sum of money and those persons in collusion committed criminal breach of trust or dishonestly misappropriated the amount, they could be jointly tried—In re Appadurai, 17 Cr.L.J. 30 (Mad).

(9) Cheating by A in respect of a certain sum collected from several persons on a certain date, and cheating by B in respect of another sum collected from some other persons at the same time, at the same place and in pursuance of the same conspiracy, are parts of the same transaction, and A and B may be tried together—Kailash v K E, 46 Cal 712, 29 C.L.J. 31. So also, conspiracy and acts of cheating in pursuance of that conspiracy can be tried together—Abdul Salim v K E, 49 Cal 573, 26 C W.N. 680, 35 C L J 279

(10) Where a gang of dacoits assembled on a highway for robbing passers-by, and in the course of the dacoity several offences were committed by them, held that all these offences were committed in the course of the same transaction. It is immaterial whether all the members of the gang took an active part in each offence—Ram Prosad v Emp., 20 A L J 926

(11) The offence of dacoity, the offence of dishonest possession of stolen property knowing it to have been stolen in the commission of a dacoity, and dishonest reception of such property, knowing it to be stolen, from a known dacoit can be tried together, as all the offences can be said to have been committed in the same transaction—Emp v. Durga Prosad, 45 All 223, 20 A.L.J 981, 24 Cr L J 149 It will now fall under clause (e)

(12) The offence of fabricating false evidence in order to procure the conviction of an innocent person, the offence of instituting a false prosecution against that person, and the offence of giving false evidence in that prosecution in order to secure his conviction,—all these offences can be tried together, as there was one sustained and continuous plot for procuring conviction of an innocent person—Emp. v. Ganesh, 14 Bom. L.R. 972, 13 Cr.L.J. 833.

(13) Criminal conspiracy to commit the offences of importing arms and ammunition, murder, attempt to commit murder, grievous hurt, robbery, dacoity, and the commission of those offences, in pursuance of the conspiracy (secs. 19 and 20, Arms Act, secs. 302, 307, 326, 392, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398 I. P. C., and secs. 120-B and 109 I. P. C.)—Maland Singh v Emp., 8 Lah. 230 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 215, 29 Cr.L.J. 673. Offences under sec. 121A I. P. Code (conspiring to deprive His Majesty of the sovereignty of British India, conspiring to wage war against the Government, and conspiring to overawe the Government by means of criminal force) and offences under sec. 120B I. P. Code (conspiracy to commit dacoities either accompanied by murder or not accompanied by murder)—Ram Prasad v Emp., 2 Luck. 631, 29 Cr.L.J. 129 (136).

(14) Where two persons were charged under two separate Acts (sec. 72 Provincial Insolvency Act and sec. 102 Pres. Town Insolv. Act), but the facts alleged against them were the same, viz. that the two accused carried on a joint business and each obtained credit concealing the fact that he was an undischarged insolvent, held that the two accused could be tried jointly—Ganguly v Watson, 53 Cal. 929, 27 Cr.L.J. 1269 (1272).

779. Offences not in the same transaction :—(1) In case of rioting, the two opposite factions cannot be said to commit the offence of rioting in the same transaction, the action of each side forming a separate transaction, the two parties must be tried separately—Hussain Baksh v Emp., 6 Cal. 96, Q. E. v Chandra Bhuiya, 20 Cal. 537, Ala Dya v. K. E., 1906 P.R. 5; Emp v Bandho Singh, 1881 A.W.N. 28. Contra—Emp. v Mangat, 18 A.L.J. 744.

(2) Murder and robbery on one occasion and another act of robbery committed a few hours after in another place though close to the scene of the former offences, do not form parts of the same transaction—Q. E. v Mulua, 14 All. 502. So also, murder by four men, and grievous hurt by three of them caused upon a person who tried to prevent them from carrying off the dead body some time after the murder, are not offences committed in the same transaction—Nawab Singh v. Crown, 1906 P.R. 10, 4 Cr.L.J. 285.

(3) Dacoities committed on different dates do not form part of the same transaction—Emp. v. Datta, 1882 A.W.N. 180; Shanmuga v. Emp., 8 M.L.T. 286, 11 Cr.L.J. 477. So also, offences under secs. 147 and 325 I. P. C. committed on one date and offences under secs. 147, 323 and 342 I. P. C. committed on another date, cannot be tried together, as they were committed in different transactions—Puttoo Lal v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 820, 25 Cr.L.J. 446.

(4) Where a person obtained a promissory note by cheating and on a subsequent date he went with another person and both cashed the note, the two persons could not be charged and tried together for both the offences, since the occurrence of each date formed a distinct transaction by itself—Hira Lal v. Emp., 31 Cal. 1053

(5) A charge of theft against one person and a charge against another person for rescuing the former from lawful custody cannot be tried together—Tilukdhari v. Emp., 13 C.W.N. 804, Q. E. v. Kutti, 11 Mad. 441. Similarly, one person committing an offence punishable under the Railways Act, and other persons rescuing the former from the custody of the Police while he was arrested, cannot be tried jointly—Gobind Kocri v. Emp., 29 Cal. 395.

(6) The offences of rioting and murder committed by five persons, and the offence of concealing the dead body (of a person killed in the riot) committed by the 5th accused, cannot be tried jointly. The offence of the 5th accused (concealing the dead body) should be tried separately—Surendra v. Emp., 40 C.L.J. 559, 26 Cr L.J. 467

(7) A charge against five men of having committed a riot, and a charge against four of them of having committed criminal trespass on a different occasion cannot be tried together in the same trial—Q. E. v. Chandi Singh, 14 Cal. 395

(8) A person charged under secs. 414 and 411 I. P. C. cannot be tried jointly with four others charged under section 454 I. P. C.—Sahib Singh v. Emp., 1905 P.R. 38, 1905 P.L.R. 115

(9) Two persons fabricating a kubuliyat, and two other persons fabricating another kubuliyat, the two sets of persons not having any community of interest, cannot be tried together—Kazi Safiuddin v. Fazl Sheikh, 21 C.W.N. 756, 18 Cr L.J. 833

(10) Two acts of abduction separate and distinct, though of the same girl, committed by two sets of persons at different dates cannot be tried together—Emp. v. Esua, 1 C.L.J. 475

(11) Where several dacoities were committed by several persons, but the persons implicated in one dacoity were not the same as those implicated in the other or others, the dacoities were not committed in the same transaction and could not be tried jointly—Ram Sahai v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 610, 22 Cr L.J. 397

(12) The author of a defamatory article, who is charged under sec. 500 I. P. C., and the printer of the article, who is charged under sec. 501 I. P. C. cannot be tried together when there is no evidence of conspiracy between them—Asutosh v. Purna Chandra, 50 Cal. 159, 36 C.L.J. 287, 24 Cr.L.J. 206 (Bhawal Defamation Case)

(13) Murder by one person, and intentional omission by another person who discovered the murder to give information in respect of the murder, cannot be said to be offences committed in the same transaction—Ratan Singh v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 915, 23 Cr.L.J. 8.

(14) The offence of receiving stolen property (sec. 413 I. P. C.) and the offence of belonging to a gang of thieves (sec. 401 I. P. C.) relate to different transactions and cannot be tried together—Chhajju v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1097 (Lah.).

780. Clause (e) :—Under the old law it was held that where A and B were charged with house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft, and C with having received some of the stolen articles on a certain day, and D with having received some other stolen articles on another day, the joint trial of these persons would be illegal—Emp. v. Girdhari, 1882 A W N. 215. This ruling is now superseded by the new clause (e) of this section.

Where one person has committed theft and another person received the stolen property knowing it to be stolen, they can be tried jointly—In re A David, 6 C L R 245; Emp v. Bhima, 38 All. 311, 14 A.L.J. 344; Emp v. Keshav Krishna, 6 Bom L.R. 361; Anwar v. Emp., 44 All 276, 20 A.L.J. 96, Bishnu, 1 C W N 35; Karu v. Ram Charan, 28 Cal 10; Nga Po v Emp, 4 Bur L T. 263, 13 Cr.L.J. 59; and it is not necessary that the receiving should take place simultaneously with the theft—Anwar v. Emp, 44 All. 276. Even an appreciable interval of time between the two acts which are otherwise connected does not always prevent them from being parts of the same series of connected events and from being tried together—Nga Nyo v K. E., 14 Bur.L.R. 39, 6 Cr.L.J. 28, Nga Ton Pu v. K E, 2 L B R 19. In Emp. v. Jethalal, 29 Bom 449 and Ramratan v Emp, 21 C W N. 1111, 19 Cr.L.J. 17, however, it is held that theft and receipt of stolen goods cannot be said to be acts committed in the same transaction, because the thief and the receiver of goods are not associated in the series of acts which form the same transaction from the very start, the one offence takes place after the other is completed. In another Calcutta case also it was held that unless the theft and subsequent receipt were committed in pursuance of the same conspiracy, the two offences could not be said to be parts of the same transaction and the offenders could not be tried together—Ohi Bhusan v. Emp, 46 Cal 741, 23 C W N 463, 29 C L.J. 212. Under the present clause, however, it is not necessary that the two offences must be committed in the same transaction or in pursuance of the same conspiracy; all that is now required is that one offender should commit theft and the other offender should receive the stolen property.

Dacoity, and receiving the property stolen in the dacoity may be tried together under this clause—Durga Prosad v. Emp., 45 All. 223, 20 A.L.J. 981.

The offence of belonging to a gang of thieves (sec. 401 I. P. C.) is not an 'offence which includes theft' within the meaning of this clause, because the former offence is committed as soon as a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft is formed, and before any theft is actually committed by them. Therefore, an offence of belonging to a gang of thieves and an offence of receiving stolen property cannot be tried together, under this clause—Chhajju v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1097 (Lah.).

Offences described in secs. 457 and 436 I. P. C. with which a person is charged cannot be tried along with offences under secs 411 and 414 I. P. C. with which other persons are charged, because sec. 436 does not include theft or extortion, though sec 457 does—Sultan Ahmad v. Emp., 29 Cr.L.J. 1080 (Lah.).

781. Clause (f) :—The object of this clause and the meaning of the words "possession of which has been transferred by one offence" have been thus explained by Mr. Tonkinson during the debate in the Legislative Assembly: "Take a concrete example. A is a cattle-thief, two cattle are stolen; B is the dishonest receiver to whom A has passed on one of the cattle; C is the dishonest butcher who knows the cattle to have been stolen and assists in their concealment by slaughtering the other. Well, if A is present, A, B and C can all be tried together under clause (c). If A has disappeared, then this is not possible and the provisions of clause (f) are required. The possession of these cattle has been transferred by one offence, the original offence of theft. One person has later committed an offence under sec 411 I P C and another person has committed an offence under section 414 I. P. C. The two cattle were stolen at the same time, that is one offence"—Legislative Assembly Debates, 6th February 1923, page 1992. By this clause, the ruling in 28 Cal. 104 is rendered obsolete.

The only offences mentioned in this clause are offences under secs. 411 and 414 I. P. C.; and the provisions of this clause cannot be extended by analogy to a trial of persons accused of offences other than those specifically mentioned herein. Therefore, the joint trial of two accused, both charged under sec. 412 I. P. C., is illegal—Behari v. K. E., 12 O.L.J. 339, 26 Cr.L.J. 1291, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 452.

Receivers of stolen property stolen at one theft can be tried jointly, even though the stolen articles were received by them at different times—Guljanja v. Emp., 6 Pat. 583, 28 Cr L.J. 962. "The following cases may arise when stolen property is found in the possession of different receivers : (a) there may be one theft and the several receivers may have received the property jointly i.e., at one and the same time, (b) there may be one theft and the several receivers may have received the property at different times (as in the present case), (c) there may be two or more thefts and the several receivers may have received the property jointly, (d) there may be two or more thefts and the several receivers may have received the property at different times. Now, in cases (a) and (c) a joint trial is clearly permissible, because the property was received jointly, whether there was one or more than one theft. In case (d), a joint trial is illegal, because there is no community of purpose between the receivers. In case (b) a joint trial is permitted by clause (f) of sec 239. This clause practically declares that the different acts of receipts are one and the same transaction, if the transfer of possession from the owner to the thief was made by one and the same act (i.e. if the articles were stolen at one theft). The fact that the articles were received by the receivers at different times is immaterial; the words "possession of which has been transferred by one" offence" refer to the transfer of possession from the true owner to the thief and not to the transfer of possession from the thief to the receivers"—per Mullic J in Guljania v. Emp., supra

782. Clause (g):—A person who passes counterfeit coins and another who is in possession of them can be tried jointly—Emp v. Prasanna, 31 Cal 1007

783. Separate trial:—A joint trial is not compulsory under this section, the Magistrate has a discretion to proceed jointly or separately against the accused persons—Govinda v. Emp., 16 N.L.R. 9, 21 Cr L.J. 769 Though the offences are committed in the same transaction, still it is a question for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to say whether the accused should be tried together or separately—Emp. v. Charu Chandra, 38 C L J 309, 25 Cr.L.J. 294 This section gives a judicial discretion to the Court to try the accused persons jointly or separately, and the manner in which the discretion should be exercised must depend upon the facts of each case—Dwarka v K. E., 19 C.W.N. 121, 16 Cr L.J. 348 Although a joint trial is allowed under the circumstances specified in this section, still it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that the accused are not prejudiced thereby. No joinder of charges should be allowed if it bewilders any of the accused in his defence or unduly prejudices him—Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S L R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191; Pulisanki v. Q, 5 Mad 20; Alimuddi v K. E, 52 Cal 253, 29 C.W.N. 173. Thus, a number of murders and an offence of arson were committed. Though all the accused were present, there was evidence against some of them only as regards those offences. There was evidence against all the accused together only of conspiracy to commit murder. All the accused were charged with conspiracy, murder and arson, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty against all the accused on all the charges. Held that the jury were embarrassed and the accused were prejudiced in their defence—Alimuddi v K E. (supra). If the accused appear to have acted independently and have separate defences, the joint trial is illegal—Porasu Nayaka, 2 Weir 303

Whenever the applicability of sec 239 is doubtful, it is better that the accused should be tried separately—Samuallah v. Emp., 51 M L J 692, 27 Cr.L.J 1381

A separate trial is the rule, and joint trial is the exception, and it is for the prosecution to justify a joint trial—Emp. v Durga Prosad, 45 All. 223 (224), 20 A L.J 981

783A. Applicability of sec. 234 to sec. 239:—In Burma and Oudh it has been held that the words "the former part of this chapter" occurring at the end of this section mean the part prior to the part headed "joinder of charges" i.e., the part under the heading "form of charge"; therefore sec 234 will not control the provisions of sec 239—Bishambhar v. K. E., 2 O.W.N. 760, 26 Cr L.J. 1602; Po Mya v Emp, 7 L.B.R 272, 16 Cr.L.J. 44 But in Shankar v. K. E., 11 A L.J. 188, 14 Cr.L.J. 116, it has been held that the words mean that secs 234 and 235 shall also apply to this section and that sec. 239 is governed by secs. 234 and 235. But see Janeshar v. Emp., 51 All. 544, 30 Cr L.J. 687 (688).

784. Misjoinder.—Where a case is not covered by the provisions of this section, e.g. where several persons are tried together for different offences but there is no alleged conspiracy between them nor are they accused of committing the same offence in the course of the same transaction, held that the joint trial is illegal, and not a mere irregularity curable by sec 537—Sewak v. Emp., 26 A.L.J. 623, A.I.R. 1928 All. 417. Where several persons were charged with and tried at one trial for dacoity, and one of these persons was also tried for an offence under sec 20, Arms Act, for being in possession of arms and ammunitions at a time subsequent to the dacoity and after the transaction in which the dacoity was committed, it was held that the trial was illegal, and the fact that the Sessions Court acquitted him of the offence under the Arms Act, observing that the accused could not be legally convicted at the same trial of the offence under the Arms Act, could not cure the illegality—Jaisingh v Crown, 1917 P R 44, 19 Cr L.J. 100

240. When a charge containing* more heads than one is framed against the same person, and when a conviction has been had on one or more of them, the complainant, or the officer conducting the prosecution, may, with the consent of the Court, withdraw the remaining charge or charges, or the Court of its own accord may stay the inquiry into, or trial of, such charge or charges. Such withdrawal shall have the effect of an acquittal on such charge or charges, unless the conviction be set aside, in which case the said Court (subject to the order of the Court setting aside the conviction) may proceed with the inquiry into or trial of the charge or charges so withdrawn.

785. Scope of section.—This section applies where the accused is charged with several distinct offences and not where formal charges are drawn up against him—Amir Chand v Emp., 1889 P R 24. Where the offence is one, but the charges are several because the offence falls under several sections of the I P C or because there is doubt as to which offence was committed, this section does not apply, and the conviction of the accused on one of the charges necessarily makes the other charges nugatory

If however the accused has committed several offences, and several charges are therefore drawn up, the conviction on one of the charges does not make the other charges nugatory, but it is open to a Court to convict the accused on the other charges or to withdraw the charges under this section—Amir Chand v. Emp., 1889 P R. 24 This is an enabling section offence" refer to the transfer of possession from the true owner to the thief and not to the transfer of possession from the thief to the receivers'—per Mullie J in Gulania v. Emp., supra.

782. Clause (g):—A person who passes counterfeit coins and another who is in possession of them can be tried jointly—Emp v Prasanna, 31 Cal. 1007

783. Separate trial:—A joint trial is not compulsory under this section, the Magistrate has a discretion to proceed jointly or separately against the accused persons—Govinda v. Emp., 16 N.L.R. 9, 21 Cr.L.J. 769. Though the offences are committed in the same transaction, still it is a question for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to say whether the accused should be tried together or separately—Emp. v. Charu Chandra, 38 C.L.J. 309, 25 Cr.L.J. 294. This section gives a judicial discretion to the Court to try the accused persons jointly or separately, and the manner in which the discretion should be exercised must depend upon the facts of each case—Dwarka v. K. E., 19 C.W.N. 121, 16 Cr.L.J. 349. Although a joint trial is allowed under the circumstances specified in this section, still it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that the accused are not prejudiced thereby. No joinder of charges should be allowed if it bewilders any of the accused in his defence or unduly prejudices him—Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191; Puhsanki v. Q., 5 Mad 20; Alimuddi v. K. E., 52 Cal 253, 29 C.W.N. 173. Thus, a number of murders and an offence of arson were committed. Though all the accused were present, there was evidence against some of them only as regards those offences. There was evidence against all the accused together only of conspiracy to commit murder. All the accused were charged with conspiracy, murder and arson, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty against all the accused on all the charges. Held that the jury were embarrassed and the accused were prejudiced in their defence—Alimuddi v. K. E. (supra). If the accused appear to have acted independently and have separate defences, the joint trial is illegal—Porasu Nayaka, 2 Weir 303.

Whenever the applicability of sec. 239 is doubtful, it is better that the accused should be tried separately—Samtullah v. Emp., 51 M.L.J. 692, 27 Cr.L.J. 1381

A separate trial is the rule, and joint trial is the exception, and it is for the prosecution to justify a joint trial—Emp v Durga Prosad. 45 All 223 (224), 20 A.L.J. 981.

783A. Applicability of sec. 234 to sec. 239:—In Burma and Oudh it has been held that the words "the former part of this chapter" occurring at the end of this section mean the part prior to the part headed "joinder of charges" i.e., the part under the heading "form of charge"; therefore sec. 234 will not control the provisions of sec. 239—Bishambhar v. K. E., 2 O.W.N. 760, 26 Cr.L.J. 1602; Po Mya v. Emp., 7 L.B.R. 272, 16 Cr.L.J. 44. But in Shankar v. K. E., 11 A.L.J. 188, 14 Cr.L.J. 116, it has been held that the words mean that secs. 234 and 235 shall also apply to this section and that sec. 239 is as in a warrant case—Raj Narain v. Lala Zamoli, 11 Cal. 91; In re Sobhanaran, 39 Mad. 503; Raghavalu v. Singaram, 41 Mad. 727. But in such a case if the warrant case is not proved, the Magistrate may proceed with the summons-case according to the procedure laid down in this chapter and not under chapter XXI—Q. E. v. Papadu, 7 Mad. 454

241. The following procedure shall be observed by Magistrates in the trial of summons-cases.

Procedure in summons-cases.

242. When the accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate, the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted; but it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge.

Substance of accusation to be stated.

787. Particulars to be stated to accused:—It is necessary that the accused should have a clear statement made to him (a) that he is about to be put on his trial and (b) as to the offence or facts constituting the offence of the commission of which he is accused. If these particulars are not made known to him, the conviction will be set aside—In re Acharjee Lal, 3 C L R 87. Omission to state to the accused the particulars of the offence with which he is charged amounts to an illegality vitiating the trial, and not a mere irregularity curable by sec 537—Gopal Krishna v. Moti Lal, 54 Cal 359, 31 C W N. 167, 28 Cr.L.J. 155. Where the Magistrate did not explain to the accused the particulars of the offence of which he was accused, but merely told him that he was accused of an offence under sec. 19 of the Burma Village Act, the trial was illegal—K. E v Nga Sein, (1922) 4 U.B.R. 127.

788. Charge:—Although it is not necessary to frame a formal charge in a summons-case, still the provisions of section 233 as to joinder of charges apply to summons cases as well, because a charge is an essential element in any trial—K. E. v San Dun, 3 L B R 52. See also U. N. Biswas v. K. E., 41 Cal 694 cited under sec 233.

When a summons-case is tried jointly with a warrant case, the procedure of a warrant case has to be followed, and a charge has to be drawn up not only for the warrant case but for the summons case also. Where therefore the accused was summoned for offences under secs 143 and 379 I. P. C. but only a charge for an offence under sec 379 I. P. C. was drawn up, a conviction under section 143 was set aside for the absence of a charge under that section—Hossein v Kalu, 29 Cal 481 (482).

243. If the accused admits that he has committed the offence of which he is accused, his admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him; and, if he shows no sufficient cause why he should not be convicted, the Magistrate may convict him accordingly.

789. Change:—The word 'may' has been substituted for the word 'shall', by sec 66 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Under the old law the Magistrate was bound to convict the accused if the latter pleaded guilty and there was nothing to show that the plea was not unreserved or voluntary—Crown v. Aslam, 8 S L R 213, 16 Cr L J 238. If the accused pleaded guilty, the Magistrate was bound to convict him; he had no power to discharge the accused on the ground that his criminal intention was wanting (In such a case, the Magistrate had to inflict a nominal penalty)—Emp. v Nataraja, 2 Cr L J. 468, U.B.R. 1905 Cr.P.C. 37.

Under the present amendment, the Magistrate is no longer bound to convict the accused on his own plea. "This amendment gives the Magistrate a discretion, which he does not now possess, as to convicting an accused who pleads guilty in a summons case, and the Court is thus able to refuse to accept a plea of guilty which it believes to be untrue."—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). By making this amendment, the Legislature has reverted to the wording of the 1872 Code.

790. Admission of accused:—Where in a prosecution for obstructing the road with a bullock cart, the accused on being questioned whether he drove the cart on the particular road without permission, answered that he drove the cart without permission on account of ignorance and begged to be excused, held that this did not amount to an admission that he had committed the offence, and a conviction based thereon was wrong—Emp v Gulam Raza, 25 Cr.L J 707, A I.R. 1925 Lah 153.

Where permission has been given to the accused under sec 205 to appear by pleader, the latter can, under secs. 242 and 243, make the necessary answers and plead guilty or not guilty on behalf of the accused—Dorabshah v Emp, 50 Bom 250, 27 Cr.L.J. 440 (see this case cited in Note 691 under sec 205). But the Oudh Chief Court holds that it is an incorrect procedure to convict an accused on an admission made by his counsel, without examining the accused or recording any evidence—Municipal Board v Tulshi Ram, 1 O W.N. 495, 26 Cr.L J. 179.

The Legislature requires that the admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by the accused, because the right of appeal depends upon whether he really pleaded guilty or not—Q. E. v. Md Hanif, 1889 A W.N. 81, and an omission to comply with the law in this respect cannot be countenanced, as it invariably leads to complications—Lalji Ram, A I.R. 1928 Cal. 243 (244). When an accused person makes an exculpatory statement before the framing of a charge, the Magistrate should take down the plea in the form of question and answer, and in the exact words used by the accused in answer to the charge—Emp. v Abdul Hossein, 5 Bom.L R. 999.

The admission of the accused should be recorded at once, at the time of the trial, and not afterwards from the rough notes nor from the Magistrate's memory—Q. E. v. Erugadu, 15 Mad. 83.

If a warrant case is tried under the summons case procedure, the Magistrate cannot convict the accused on his own admission without recording evidence and without framing a formal charge—Natabar v. K E., 27 C.W.N. 923.

244. (1) If the Magistrate does not convict the accused under the preceding section, or if the accused does not make such admission, the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any), and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution, and also to hear the accused and take all such evidence as he produces in his defence :

Procedure when no such admission is made.

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court.

(2) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, on the application of the complainant or accused, issue process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of any document or other thing.

(2) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, on the application of the complainant or accused, issue a summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce any document or other thing.

(3) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses, incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial, be deposited in Court.

Change —This section has been amended by section 67 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

The italicised words at the beginning of the section have been added as consequential to the amendment made in sec 243. The proviso has been introduced "to provide for the case where a complaint has been made by a Court, and we have made a similar amendment in section 252"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). In sub-sec (2) the word 'summons' has been substituted for "process", for reasons see Note 792 below

791. Magistrate's duty to examine complainant, witnesses, etc. —If a Magistrate adopts the procedure prescribed by this section on the footing that there was no admission of guilt on the part of the accused person, the Magistrate is not competent to take a further plea of guilty from the accused person, and relieve himself of the duty of examining the prosecution witnesses—Lalji Ram, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 243 (244)

The Magistrate is not at liberty to stop a case whenever he likes. If the accused does not make the admission under sec. 243, the Magistrate is bound to hear the complainant and his witnesses; and he is not competent to acquit the accused without examining them—Q. E. v. Toulman, Ratanlal 539, Kesri v. Md. Baksh, 18 All. 221; In re Ahlad Monee, 6 W.R. 75. It is not sufficient to examine the complainant alone; if the complainant has any witnesses, they must also be examined—Korapula v. Monapa, 5 Mad. 160; and the Magistrate is not entitled to acquit the accused on a consideration of the complainant's statement alone—Q. E. v. Sinnai, 20 Mad. 388.

If the complainant declines to be examined, it is the duty of the Magistrate to proceed to take the evidence of his other witnesses before dismissing the complaint, although, in any event, a strong preliminary presumption against the truth of the complainant's case would arise from his contumacious refusal to allow himself to be examined. An order of acquittal passed under sec. 245 (1) without so examining the other witnesses is a wrong order—Damdoo v. Harba, 28 Cr.L.J. 511 (Nag)

Again, it is prima facie the duty of the prosecution to call the witnesses who prove their connection with the transaction in question and who from the connection must be able to give important information—Emp v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121; Q. E. v. Ram Sahai, 10 Cal. 1070. All persons said to have witnessed the offence should be produced before the Magistrate—Kaimi v. Crown, 1916 P.R. 12, 17 Cr.L.J. 267. If such witnesses are not called, an adverse inference against the prosecution may be drawn—Emp v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121.

Moreover, the Magistrate is bound to examine the accused and his witnesses—In re Ahlad Monee, 6 W.R. 75. He is bound to examine all the witnesses that are produced by the accused, and has no discretion in this matter—In re Ameer Chand, 13 W.R. 63. The Magistrate has no power to arbitrarily limit the number of witnesses to be examined, though he has undoubted jurisdiction to curtail the number of unnecessary witnesses on the ground that their examination will delay and probably defeat the ends of justice—Biswanath v. Shivanand, 2 P.L.T. 330. It is also the duty of the Magistrate to enquire of the accused as to whether he has any witness to produce. Where no such enquiry is made, the conviction is liable to be set aside—Emp v. Jivan, 1884 P.R. 7. If the accused does not produce any witness, no unfavourable inference will be drawn against him—Emp. v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121.

The Magistrate must base his decision on the evidence produced on either side in Court, he cannot rely on statements made to him out of Court—Q. E. v. Sahadeb, 14 Bom. 572.

Cross-examination:—In summons cases the accused has no right to postpone the cross-examination of any prosecution witness, as in the case of trial of a warrant case. But if the cross-examination was postponed in accordance with the direction of the Magistrate, he is bound to give further opportunity to the accused to cross-examine the witness. Otherwise the evidence of such witness will not be legally admissible—Parmeshwar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 347.

792. Issue of summons :—If the complainant or the accused thinks that any witness is not likely to appear without summons, he should apply beforehand to the Magistrate for summons to enforce his attendance—In re Chedee Koongra, 14 W.R. 76. When such application is made, the Magistrate must either grant or refuse the application; he cannot simply 'file' it—Bhomar v. Digambar, 6 C.W.N. 548.

The Magistrate has a discretion as to whether he will issue summons or not—In re Chedee, 14 W.R. 76, Jhabbu v. Emp., 21 Cr.L.J. 385 (All.). Where a complainant mentioned the name of several witnesses but could only produce two of them, the Magistrate could decide the case on the evidence of the two witnesses alone—In re Notobur, 15 W.R. 87, and was not bound to issue summons to the other witnesses—Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App. 29.

But where a summons had already been issued to a witness and he did not appear in obedience to the summons, it was held under the old law that the Magistrate was bound to issue further process against that witness and had no discretion to refuse to issue further process—Daulat v. Brinda, 30 Cal. 121. The party at whose instance the process was originally issued had a right to call upon the Court to compel the attendance of his witness—Bhomar v. Digambar, 6 C.W.N. 548. But by virtue of the present amendment of sub-section (2), this section read with section 90 will give a discretion to the Magistrate to issue further process (warrant) or not. This amendment has been made on the recommendation of the Select Committee of 1916 who observed "The difficulty intended to be dealt with by this clause rests upon the words 'process to compel the attendance,' as seems clear from the Calcutta decisions. We think that the only alteration really required is to substitute for the words referred to above the simpler expression 'a summons to any witness directing him to attend, etc.' This we think will make section 90 clearly applicable, which is, in our opinion, all that is required."

If a witness summoned by the Magistrate does not care to appear, the Magistrate is not bound to re-issue the summons, it is in his discretion to issue fresh summons if he likes, but this section does not compel him to issue fresh summons to the witness—Selvamuthu v. Chinnappan, 27 Cr.L.J. 76, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 361. Under the old section, there was the phrase "compel the attendance of any witness" but in the present section the words used are "summon any witness directing him to attend." Under the present section, evidently the Magistrate cannot compel a witness to appear before him, if the witness refuses to appear. If the witness refuses to appear, he may be liable for disobedience of the summons, but the complainant or accused is not entitled to ask the Court as a matter of right to compel the attendance of any witness who does not care to attend in obedience to the summons—Selvarimuthu v. Chinnappan (supra).

793. Sub-section (3)—Payment of process fee :—If the complainant fails to deposit fees for summoning witnesses, the Magistrate must deal with the case on such evidence as he may have before him, but should not dismiss the complaint—Korapula v. Monappa, 5 Mad 160.

If the accused fails to deposit process fees, the Magistrate may refuse to issue process, but this order of refusal must be sparingly passed, and such order would be improper in a case where the accused is unable or unwilling to deposit the money, and the result is that he is convicted without his witnesses being heard, especially if the case is one in which a severe sentence is passed—Qadu v. Q. E., 1898 P.R. 7.

245. (1) If the Magistrate upon taking the evidence referred to in Section 244 and such further evidence (if any) as he may, of his own motion, cause to be produced, and (if he thinks fit) examining the accused, finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal.

(2) Where the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section Sentence.

349 or Section 562, he shall, if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him according to law.

Change —The italicised words in Sub-section (2) have been added by sec. 68 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. This amendment is merely one of drafting. A similar amendment has been made in sec. 258 (2) and sec. 306 (2).

794. Acquittal—Discharge :—A Magistrate who does not find the accused guilty, must record an order of acquittal. No order of discharge can be passed under this section—Amir Khan v. Emp., 1900 P.R. 19. Even if he styles his order as an order of discharge, the discharge will amount to an acquittal, for no other order is contemplated in summons cases. That being so, the Sessions Judge has no power to take action under sec. 437 (now 436) against a person alleged to be discharged—Sessions Judge v. Venkataramaiyer, 8 M L T. 78, 11 Cr L.J. 350.

If, on the contrary, the Magistrate tried a warrant case as a summons case without framing a charge and passed an order of acquittal, the so called acquittal would operate as a discharge under sec. 253 of the Code—Emp. v. Jadu, 1886 A.W.N. 260. If, however, the Magistrate framed a charge in a summons case, the acquittal should be under sec. 258 and not under this section—Radanath v. Wooma Chura, 22 W.R. 12.

Compensation to accused —When the Magistrate acquits an accused under this section on the ground that the complaint was vexatious, he can under sec. 250 direct the complainant to pay compensation to the accused—Q. E. v. Pandu, 10 Bom. 199; Number v. Ambu, 5 Mad. 381. Even if the Magistrate tries a warrant case as a summons case and acquits the accused, he can award compensation.

'Shall pass sentence':—If the Magistrate convicts the accused, he is bound to pass some sentence, at least a nominal one—Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App. 66; Q. E. v. Hanmant, 2 Bom L.R. 611, Emp v. Nataraja, U B R (1905) Cr.P.C 37, 2 Cr L J. 468

246. A Magistrate may, under Section 243 or 245, convict the accused of any offence triable under this Chapter which from the facts admitted or proved he appears to have committed, whatever may be the nature of the complaint or summons.

795. Scope of section.—This section enables the Magistrate to proceed in regard to any other offence prima facie established by the evidence for the prosecution. It is not necessary that the case started by the complainant must be the one which the Court should find proved, before it arrives at a conclusion of the guilt of the accused. The Court is not bound by all the statements of the complainant. Its duty is to find out the truth in the midst of the conflicting evidence—Emp. v. Somnath, 14 Bom L R 135. The rule is, that a Magistrate is not bound to adhere to any particular section which may happen to be mentioned by the complainant in his complaint, but may apply any section of the law which he thinks applicable to the case, so long as the parties are not misled and the proper procedure is observed—Kalidass v. Mohendro, 12 W.R. 40 (41). But it is not necessary, when the Magistrate thinks that other offences have been committed, to reopen the trial or to follow the procedure of secs 243 and 244. Such a procedure would involve the rehearing of all the evidence in the same trial and is clearly opposed to the intention of the Legislature—Dasarath v Emp, 36 Cal 869

This section applies even in the absence of a formal complaint in the first instance. The evidence of the complainant which evinces a desire on his part that the accused should be proceeded against may be treated as a complaint—Framji v Emp, 28 Bom L.R. 291, 27 Cr.L.J. 496. This section does not mean that the accused in a summons case can be convicted of an offence alleged to have been committed on a date to which no reference has been made in the complaint or summons—Sarkar v. Howrah Municipality, 22 Cr L J 559 (Cal)

247. If the summons has been issued on complaint, and upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, or any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned, the complainant does not appear, the Magistrate shall, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, acquit the accused, unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day :

Provided that, where the complainant is a public servant and his personal attendance is not required, the Magistrate may dispense with his attendance, and proceed with the case

795A. Scope —This section does not apply to cases instituted under section 195, and the Magistrate cannot dismiss the complaint for default of the complainant to appear—Q. E v Ramchandra, Ratanlal 137 (139) See proviso

This section does not apply unless the case is instituted upon a complaint. Under sec 47 of the U P. Act II of 1916, it is the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence upon Information received. So the case is not one instituted on a complaint, and sec 247 of this Code has no application. In spite of non-appearance of the complainant, the proceeding must continue—Basanti v. Maqsud, 26 Cr.L.J. 170 (All).

This section does not apply to proceedings under sec 107, because those proceedings do not amount to a trial of an accused for any offence. Consequently the non-appearance of the complainant does not enable the Magistrate to acquit the person proceeded against. The proper order to be passed is an order of discharge under sec. 119 on the ground that in the absence of any evidence on behalf of the complainant, it is not proved that the person proceeded against should execute a bond—Asrafali v. Nasu Sarkar, 31 C.W.N. 388, 28 Cr.L.J. 479 (480)

796. 'Does not appear'.—The appearance of the complainant's Vakil is not appearance of the complainant within the meaning of this section, unless the Court has dispensed with his personal attendance and has specially allowed him to appear by a pleader—Ponnaganti v. Kotajjan, 2 Weir 309; Nagarambili v. Matta Jagannath, 49 Mad. 883, 27 Cr.L.J. 988

If the complainant does not appear at the time of hearing, the Court is not bound to wait for the complainant till the Court closes for the day—Kuthali v. Paru Mahai, 7 Mad 356. The Magistrate is empowered to dismiss the complaint if the complainant does not appear when the case is called on for hearing, even though he appears soon after—Rangasami v. Narasimhulu, 7 Mad 213; Nagarambili v. M. Jagannatha, (supra).

Although a Magistrate has power to dismiss the complaint for default of the complainant's appearance, he should exercise his power with a reasonable discretion. He should not dismiss the complaint where the non-appearance of the complainant was due to circumstances beyond his control, e.g. a heavy flood which cut off all communications—Tazoonissa v. Wassil, 24 W.R. 64; Q. v. Madhoo, 5 W.R. 51; or when the case was transferred from one Magistrate to another, and the complainant was present in the Court premises, but not having had notice of the transfer did not appear before the particular Magistrate who had charge of the case, but appeared in the previous Court—In re Ramanath, 13 C.L.R. 303; Gunpat v. Good, 47 Cal. 147; Etim Haji v. Hamid, 24 C.L.J. 444, 18 Cr L.J. 104; or where the complainant had been kept out of the way by the action of the accused in getting a constable to arrest him on a false charge—In re Sinna Goundan, 38 Mad. 1028; or where the case was called on for hearing on a date not fixed for hearing and the complainant was necessarily absent—Achambit v. Mahatap, 42 Cal. 365, 18 C.W.N. 1180, 16 Cr L.J. 148, or where the complainant was in jail and could not therefore appear—Reg. v. Virbhadra, Ratanlal 59. If the complainant is ordered to appear at 11 A.M. and he appears, but the Court does not sit till 2 P.M., and he does not wait, it cannot be said that the complainant has failed to appear—Ahmed Meera v. Meeran, 25 L.W. 358, 28 Cr.L.J. 208.

Non-appearance on adjourned hearing—A Magistrate can dismiss a complaint and acquit the accused, not only where the complainant does not appear on the first day of hearing but also where he fails to appear on the date of adjourned hearing—Latchamana, 2 Weir 308; Mudoo-soodun v. Hari Dass, 22 W.R. 40, Ramjiwan v. Abilakh, 18 C.W.N. 584. But this power to dismiss a complaint must be exercised with discretion. Where the complainant has done all that is necessary for him to do to establish his case, a complaint ought not to be dismissed for his non-appearance on an adjourned date, unless his attendance is in the opinion of the Magistrate specially required on that day—Anonymous, 2 Weir 306; Nagayya, 2 Weir 306; Girish Chandra v. Bhushan Das, 46 Cal. 867, 23 C.W.N. 959, 20 Cr.L.J. 492.

Again, a Magistrate cannot dismiss a complaint for non-appearance of the complainant on the adjourned date, if the order of adjournment was not made in the presence and hearing of parties—Anonymous, 8 M.H.C. R App 5, or where the complainant had no knowledge or notice of the date to which the case had stood adjourned—Nune Panakalu v. Ravula, 52 Mad. 695, 30 Cr L.J. 191 (196), or where the Magistrate did not specify the place where the case was to be taken up, but ordered the parties to appear 'either at Aligarh or at Talibnagar'—In re Bansidhar, 1882 A.W.N. 229.

Non-appearance on date of judgment—This section applies to a case of absence of the complainant on the date fixed for his appearance or on the date of adjourned hearing, and does not apply to a case where the complainant is absent on the date fixed for delivery of the judgment. If on such a date the complainant is absent (and the attendance of the complainant on that date was not specially directed by the Magistrate) an order of acquittal of the accused on the ground of absence of the complainant is erroneous—Girish Chandra v. Bhushan, 46 Cal 867, Emp. v. Jangusingh, 19 N.L.R. 48.

797. Order of acquittal:—In a summons case, if the complainant is absent on the day of hearing, the proper order to be passed by the Magistrate under sec. 247 is one of acquittal and not one 'striking off' the complaint—In re Dubash, 10 Bom. L.R. 628.

The accused is entitled to acquittal if the complainant is absent, and unless the Court thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day. In other words, the right to an order of acquittal accrues to the accused upon two conditions, and is dependent firstly on the absence of the complainant, and secondly on the Court not adjourning the case. But if on the date of hearing the case is not taken up at all, it cannot be said that the second condition is fulfilled, and the accused is not entitled to acquittal owing to the absence of the complainant on that date—Rash Behary v. Corporation of Calcutta, 26 Cr.L.J. 1050 (Cal.)

Warrant case—If a warrant case is tried by the Magistrate as a summons case, the procedure is bad, and he cannot pass an order under this section dismissing the complaint for non-appearance of the complainant—Ram Coomar v. Ramji, 4 C.W.N. 26

Where two charges, one a summons case and another on a warrant case, are jointly tried in one trial and the complainant is absent on the adjourned hearing, the Magistrate ought to make an order of discharge under sec. 259 and not one of acquittal under this section—Raghavulu v. Singaram, 41 Mad 727, Rajnarain v. Lala Zamoli, 11 Cal 91

If a summons case is tried under the warrant case procedure, and eventually the Magistrate acquits the accused under sec. 247 on account of the absence of the complainant on an adjourned date of hearing, held that the acquittal is legal and proper. Section 247 lays down a general principle that a person charged with a summons-case offence is entitled to an acquittal if the complainant is absent, and there is no reason why this right should be denied to him simply because the Magistrate has adopted a different procedure for the trial of the case—Venkatarama v. Sundaram, 44 M.L.J. 119.

Further inquiry—Since an order under this section is one of acquittal and not one of discharge, no further inquiry can be directed under sec. 436—Bindra v. Bhagwantra, 25 Cr.L.J. 359 (Oudh).

Absence of accused—This section has nothing to do with the presence or absence of the accused. If the complainant is absent, the case will be dismissed and the accused acquitted, whether the latter is present or not—17 C.W.N. clx. If the complainant is absent, the accused must be acquitted and it is immaterial that the summons to the accused had not been served and that the accused was not present when he was acquitted—Kiran Sarkar v. Emp., 5 P.L.T. 15, 24 Cr.L.J. 815; Shankar v. Dattatraya, 53 Bom 693, 1929 Cr.C. 436 (437). (Contra—Kandappa Chetty, 2 Weir 307). If there are several accused, and one is present and the others absent, the order acquitting the accused who is present will put an end to the case also against the other accused who are not before the Court—Panchu Singh v. Umar Mahomed, 4 C.W.N. 346

Appeal to District Magistrate.—If an order of dismissal is passed under this section, the District Magistrate has no power to set aside the order of acquittal on appeal, because under sec. 417 an appeal against an order of acquittal must be directed by the Government and presented to the High Court—Rangasami v. Narasimhulu, 7 Mad. 213; Nityananda v. Rakhahari, 38 C.L.J. 196, 24 Cr.L.J. 716

798. Revival of complaint—Retrial :—The Code contains no provision empowering a Magistrate to revive a case after an order of dismissal is passed under this section—Ram Coomar v. Ramji, 4 C.W.N. 26. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to restore a case after it has been dismissed for default of appearance of the complainant and the accused has been acquitted, even though good cause is shown for the complainant's non-appearance. An acquittal under this section does not stand on any different footing from an acquittal passed under any other circumstances, and the Magistrate cannot set aside his own order of acquittal—Lakshminarasimham v. Nalluri Bapanna, 52 M.L.J. 173, 28 Cr.L.J. 270. The dismissal of a complaint under this section amounts to an acquittal and bars a subsequent trial on a fresh complaint on the same facts (section 403) even if good cause is shown for non-appearance of the complainant—Emp v. Dulla, 45 All 58, Shankar v. Dattatraya, 53 Bom. 693, 1929 Cr.C. 436 (437), In re Sinnu Goundan, 38 Mad 1028, 26 M.L.J. 160, In re Guggilappu, 34 Mad 253, 12 Cr.L.J. 41, Panchu v. Umar, 4 C.W.N. 346, Emp v. Bhawani Prasad, 1885 A.W.N. 43, Ram Mahato v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 170, Kiran Sarkar v. Emp., 5 P.L.T. 15; Nityananda v. Rakhahari, 38 C.L.J. 196. Even the District Magistrate has no power to order the entertainment of a complaint which was dismissed for default of appearance—Narayanasami v. Janaki, 2 Weir 308. He cannot order the entertainment of a fresh complaint for a different offence on the same facts—Fazar v. K. E., 37 C.L.J. 253, 25 Cr.L.J. 149. But if the proceedings are so irregular as not to amount to a trial, the dismissal will not amount to an acquittal and the complaint may be revived—Anonymous, 2 Weir 307; Reg. v. Virbhadra, Ratanlal 59. In Ram Mahato v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 170 it has been held that even if the order of acquittal is passed under a misapprehension, still the Magistrate cannot take cognizance of a fresh complaint, if the order is wrong, the complainant can take proper steps by way of revision, but he cannot file a fresh complaint.

In a Madras case it has been pointed out that the accused who is acquitted under this section owing to the absence of the complainant on the date fixed for hearing is acquitted without trial on the merits, he cannot be said to have been 'tried' within the meaning of sec. 403, and therefore an acquittal under this section is not a bar to a second complaint of the offence on the same facts—Kotayya v. Venkayya, 40 Mad 977 (Note), 19 Cr.L.J. 497, dissenting from In re Guggilappu, 34 Mad 253. But the other High Courts are of opinion that an acquittal under section 247 acts as a bar to further proceedings in the same way as an acquittal after trial on the merits—See Emp. v. Dulla 45 All 58, Panchu v. Umar, 4 C.W.N. 346; In re Guggilappu Paddy, 34 Mad 253 and the other cases cited above.

*Fresh process for other offences including the previous one :—*Where a Magistrate issued process against and summoned the accused persons for one of several offences alleged against them, and acquitted them under this section for default of complainant's appearance, no fresh process could in view of sec 403 (1) be issued against them in respect of all the offences alleged against them on the previous occasion, including the one in respect of which they were summoned and acquitted—Suresh v. Banku, 2 C.L.J. 622.

799. Order of adjournment :—On default of the complainant's appearance the Magistrate has a discretion either to dismiss the complaint and acquit the accused or to adjourn the hearing or he can even proceed to examine the witnesses in the absence of the complainant. Such a procedure is not illegal if the accused is not prejudiced—Sarafji v. K. E., 24 C.W.N. 199.

The Magistrate cannot adjourn the hearing unless there are sufficient and proper grounds for doing so. The fact that the accused has been guilty of contempt of the processes of the Court is no good reason for proceeding with the case—17 C.W.N. cliv. But a Magistrate can adjourn the hearing for the purpose of allowing the accused time to secure the attendance of his witnesses—In re Dinno Roy, 16 W.R. 21.

This section merely authorises the Magistrate to adjourn the case to enable the complainant to appear, but it does not authorise him to dispense with the presence of the complainant, except when he is a public servant—Maula Baksh v. Marshall, 27 Cr.L.J. 1022 (Lah.).

800. Death of complainant :—It is open to doubt whether this section applies where the non-appearance of the complainant is due to his death. But if on the day fixed for hearing the son of the deceased complainant appears and asks the Magistrate to proceed with the case, the Magistrate ought to proceed and should not acquit the accused under this section—Jitan v. Domoo, 1 P.L.J. 264, 18 Cr.L.J. 151; Madhu Chowdhury v. Torab, 18 C.W.N. 1211. In re Mahomed Azam, 28 Bom. L.R. 288, 27 Cr.L.J. 491. But see Purna Chandra v. Dengar, 19 C.W.N. 334 (335), 16 Cr.L.J. 322 and In re Appala Naidu, 51 Mad. 339, 29 Cr.L.J. 257 (258), where it has been held that if the complainant dies pending the trial, the Magistrate should acquit the accused and should not proceed further with the trial, he should not adjourn the case in order to enable the complainant's son to come on the record.

801. Revision :—An acquittal under this section does not stand on any different footing from an acquittal ordered in any other circumstances, and the High Court will not set aside an acquittal in revision except under very rare circumstances—Lakshminarasimham v. Nallart, 52 M.L.J. 173, 28 Cr.L.J. 270. A somewhat contrary view has been taken by the Oudh Court, under certain special circumstances, in the case of Ram Nidk v. Ram Saran, 26 O.C. 283, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 64, 25 Cr.L.J. 794.

Where an order is passed by the Magistrate acquitting an accused under sec. 247, the order can only be set aside by the High Court. The Magistrate or his successor has no power to revive the proceedings by setting aside the order—Nityananda v. Rakhari, 38 C.L.J. 196, 24 Cr.L.J. 716

248. If a complainant, at any time before a final order is passed in any case under this Chapter, satisfies the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw his complaint, the Magistrate may permit him to withdraw the same, and shall thereupon acquit the accused.

Withdrawal of complaint.

802. Scope of section.—This section applies only to summons cases. A withdrawal of complaint is permissible only in summons cases—Murray v. Q. E., 21 Cal. 103, Sambasivanna v. Bhogappa, 5 Mad. 378; Q. E. v. Lilladhar, Ratanlal 461. If the offence charged is a warrant case (and is non-compoundable), the Magistrate must proceed with the inquiry or trial in spite of the withdrawal of the complaint, if he finds the elements of the offence set forth in the complaint—In re Ganesh Narayan, 13 Bom 600; Emp. v. Ranchhod, 37 Bom 369; Maung Thu v. U Po, 5 Rang. 136, 28 Cr.L.J. 649

This section is limited in its operation to cases instituted upon complaints in the strict sense. If A gave information to the Police, and the Magistrate took cognizance of the case upon the Police report, there was no complaint within the meaning of sec. 4 (h.), and A could not be permitted to withdraw—Q. E. v. Chenchayya, 23 Mad 626

Sec. 537 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (Act III of 1923 B C) which authorises the Corporation to withdraw from legal proceedings, must be read subject to the provisions of sec. 248 Cr P. Code, which permit the complainant to withdraw his complaint "if he can satisfy the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw his complaint." It follows, therefore, that before a withdrawal can be permitted under sec 537 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, there must be sufficient grounds for the withdrawal to the satisfaction of the Magistrate—Sisir Kumar v Corporation of Calcutta, 53 Cal 631, 30 C W N. 598, 27 Cr.L.J. 984.

This section contemplates a withdrawal of the complaint as a whole. Where a complaint against several accused persons is withdrawn as against one of them, this amounts to a withdrawal of the whole complaint in respect of all the accused—Shyam Behari v Sagar Singh, 1 P.L.T. 32. The withdrawal of the case absolves not only the accused present but also all the accused—Amar Ali v. Emp. 2 P.L.T. 584, 22 Cr.L.J. 675. Contra—Rohti Singh v Makdum, 9 O.L.J. 54, 23 Cr.L.J. 271 and Anantia v Crown, 5 Lah 239 (per Le Rossignol J) where it is held that the withdrawal against some does not amount to a withdrawal against all It should be noted that this latter view is in consonance with the provisions of sec. 345 (as now amended) under which the composition of an offence with one of the accused does not amount to a composition with all the accused.

803. Withdrawal of complaint:—Withdrawal and Compromise:—There is a well-marked distinction between a withdrawal of a case under this section and a compromise under sec. 345. Compromise contemplates an arrangement between two parties; withdrawal has no such meaning. A case is said to be compromised if it is withdrawn with the consent of the accused, whereas a case is withdrawn under this section without the consent of the accused. Therefore when a petition is filed by the complainant praying for striking off the case, the Magistrate should satisfy himself under what section the petition is made. If the case is not being compromised but is being withdrawn without the consent of the accused, the petition is not a petition under sec 345 but under this section, and the Magistrate may, inspite of the petition, proceed with the trial and convict the accused—Bayan Ali v. K. E., 20 C W N, 1209, 18 Cr.L.J 107. See also Note 992 under sec 345

Who can withdraw.—Only the complainant can withdraw the case In cases of contempt of the lawful authority of a public servant, the complainant is the public servant whose authority has been resisted, and not the person injured by such resistance; and the former alone can withdraw—In re Muse Ali, 2 Bom. 653 Where a Municipal Secretary Instituted a complaint, the Municipal Council was not competent to withdraw—Paramananda v Karunakara, 27 M.L.J 617, 15 Cr.L.J 299

When to withdraw --The complainant can withdraw at any time 'before a final order is passed.' But these words do not refer to a time so early as when no process has been issued to the accused An order of acquittal passed on an application for withdrawal preferred before issue of process is unmeaning and of no avail—In re Muthia Moopan, 36 Mad 315, 14 Cr.L.J. 559

Magistrate alone can permit withdrawal:—This section does not empower a Police officer to entertain an application for withdrawal of a complaint The permission for withdrawal is a judicial act, and the Magistrate alone can do it—Anonymous, Ratanlal 91

A petition for withdrawal of a case should be judicially determined by the Magistrate himself, and it is wholly improper for him to refer the matter to the Police for report, and then to act on the report in refusing or allowing withdrawal. The Magistrate should not allow himself to be guided by what the Police thought about the matter—Azizur Rahman v Emp, 43 C L.J. 214, 27 Cr L J 394

May permit—It is discretionary with the Magistrate to permit the complainant to withdraw. The Magistrate can, inspite of the application for withdrawal, proceed with the trial and convict the accused—Bayan Ali v. K. E., 20 C W.N. 1209 (Pat.)

Revival of withdrawn complaint:—Where a Deputy Magistrate allowed a complaint to be withdrawn and discharged the accused, the District Magistrate could not revive the case against the accused—Q. v. Zuhoorul, 25 W R. 64.

But where the complaint was withdrawn, because there was no sanction (the case being one in which a sanction was necessary), and the accused was discharged, the complainant was competent to lodge a fresh complaint after obtaining the necessary sanction—In re Samsuddin, 22 Bom 711.

249. In any case instituted otherwise than upon complaint, a Presidency Magistrate, a Magistrate of the first class, or with the previous sanction of the District Magistrate, any other Magistrate, may, for reasons to be recorded by him, stop the proceedings at any stage without pronouncing any judgment either of acquittal or conviction, and may thereupon release the accused.

Power to stop proceeding when no complaint.

804. Scope :—This section deals only with summons cases instituted otherwise than upon complaints, and is inapplicable to warrant cases. Therefore, an order by a Magistrate stopping a warrant case and releasing the accused under this section is illegal, the case will be treated as still on the pending file of the Magistrate, and can be reopened either by an application by the Crown or suo motu by the Magistrate, but it cannot be started de novo upon a private complaint, the police case being already on the pending file of the Magistrate—Firangi v. Durga, 5 Pat 243, 7 P.L.T 449, 27 Cr.L.J. 698.

Where upon a report of the Police that one J. had given false information to the Police against certain persons, a Magistrate ordered the prosecution of J. under sec. 182 I. P. C. but subsequently upon receipt of another report in another case that the information given by J was true, he ordered the summons issued for the attendance of J to be cancelled, it was held that the Magistrate had full power to cancel the summons under this section—Nathu v. Emp, 1 P.L.T 28.

An order under this section neither amounts to an acquittal nor to a discharge. Since it does not amount to an acquittal (see Explanation to sec 403) it does not bar further proceedings in accordance with law—Achhru v Crown, 1913 P R 9. And since it does not amount to an order of dismissal of complaint, no order can be passed under sec 437 (now 436) directing further inquiry—Ibid.

Frivolous Accusations in Summons and Warrant Cases.

Frivolous or vexatious accusations.

False, frivolous or vexatious accusations.

instituted upon complaint * * * or up-

tion given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate, a person is accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate, and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits the accused and is satisfied that the accusation against him was frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, by his order of discharge or acquittal, direct the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made, to pay to the accused, or each of the accused where there are more than one, such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees, as the Magistrate thinks fit:

Provided that, before making any such direction, the Magistrate shall—

- (a) record and consider any objection which the complainant or informant may urge against the making of the direction, and
- (b) if the Magistrate directs any compensation to be paid, state in writing, in his order of discharge or acquittal, his reasons for awarding the compensation.

police officer or to a Magistrate, one or more persons is or are accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate, and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits all or any of the accused, and is of opinion that the accusation against them or any of them was false and either frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, by his order of discharge or acquittal, if the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made is present, call upon him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to such accused or to each or any of such accused when there are more than one, or, if such person is not present, direct the issue of a summons to him to appear and show cause as aforesaid.

(2) The Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant or informant may show, and if he is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious, may, for reasons to be recorded, direct that compensation to such amount not exceeding one hundred

(2) Compensation of which a Magistrate has ordered payment under sub-section (1) shall be recoverable as if it were a fine:

Provided that, if it cannot be recovered, the imprisonment to be awarded shall be simple, and for such term not exceeding thirty days, as the Magistrate directs.

rupees or, if the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class, not exceeding fifty rupees, as he may determine, be paid by such complainant or informant to the accused or to each or any of them.

(2A) The Magistrate may by the order directing payment of the compensation under sub-section (2) further order that, in default of payment, the person ordered to pay such compensation shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days.

(2B) When any person is imprisoned under sub-section (2A), the provisions of Sections 68 and 69 of the Indian Penal Code shall, so far as may be, apply.

(2C) No person who has been directed to pay compensation under this section shall, by reason of such order, be exempted from any civil or criminal liability in respect of the complaint made or information given by him:

Provided that any amount paid to an accused person under this section shall be taken into account in awarding compensation to such person in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter.

(3) A complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub-section (2) by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation, or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty rupees, may appeal from the order in so far as the order relates to the payment of the compensation, as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate.

(4) Where an order for payment of compensation to an accused person is made in a case which is subject to compensation) but was instituted upon 'complaint', the report of the Excise officer to the Magistrate being treated as a complaint; and that officer, being deemed to be the complainant, was liable to pay compensation. Even if the report be not treated as a complaint, it was information given to a Magistrate by the Excise officer, and in that view also he was liable to pay compensation—Radhika v. Hamid, 54 Cal. 371, 28 Cr.L.J. 316.

When a Police officer makes a report in a non-cognizable case, the report amounts to a complaint (because a Police officer has no power to make a report in a non-cognizable case) and the Magistrate can award compensation if the complaint is false—K. E. v. Sada, 26 Bom. 150.

If a report is given to the police with the intention that action should be taken against the accused persons, the report amounts to 'an information given to a Police officer' within the meaning of this section—Jairaj v. Bansi, (supra).

Complaint under Cattle Trespass Act:—This section applies to a case in which a false and frivolous complaint has been made under the Cattle Trespass Act. Under section 4 (o) of the C. P. Code, the word "offence" includes an act in respect of which a complaint may be made under sec. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act. If such complaint is false and frivolous or vexatious, compensation may be awarded—In re Ponnusawmi, 29 Mad. 517. The rulings in 18 All. 353, 13 Cal. 304, 22 Cal. 139, 23 Cal. 248, 9 Mad. 102, and 9 Mad. 374, decided under the Code of 1882, are no longer good law.

Complaint to a Village Magistrate:—A complaint of a non-bailable offence to a village headman who is bound to report the substance of the information to the Police under sec. 45 (c) is an "information to a Police Officer" within the meaning of this section; and if on such information the Police charges the accused, and the Magistrate finds the charge to be false and vexatious he can order compensation under this section—Nachimuthu v. Muthusami, 39 Mad. 1006, 27 M.L.J. 37, 15 Cr.L.J. 431; Kaliaperumal v. Bavaji, 45 M.L.J. 255; Thanikadavath v. Ammlan, 4 L.W. 73, 17 Cr.L.J. 503; Nadiabba v. Rayachitty, 32 M.L.T. 78, 18 Cr.L.J. 11; (Contra—In re Arulanandham, 22 M.L.J. 138, 13 Cr.L.J. 29). If however the information preferred to the village Magistrate is one which he is not bound to report to the Police, the preferring of such information does not amount to information to the Police within the meaning of this section, and no compensation is awardable if the information proves to be false—K. E. v. Thamman, 25 Mad. 667.

Case instituted under sec. 476:—Where a case is instituted under sec. 476, at the instance of a person, it cannot be said to have been instituted either upon complaint of that person, or upon information given to a Police Officer or to a Magistrate—In re Kisandas, 14 Bom.L.R. 1166, 14 Cr.L.J. 1.

806. 'Accused of an offence':—An institution of proceedings under Chapter VIII is not an accusation of an offence, and this section does not apply if the accusation proves to be false—In re Govind, 25 Bom.

48; Q. E. v. Lakhpat, 15 All. 365; Bindhachal v. Lal Behari, 36 All. 382; Ram Sukh v. Mahadeo, 7 A.L.J. 743, Natha Singh v. Pala Singh, 1896 P.R. 4, Emp. v. Kaura, 1902 P.R. 33, Mannu Khan v. Chandu, 20 A.L.J. 624, 23 Cr.L.J. 474, Ram Badan v. Janki, 45 All. 363, 22 A.L.J. 207, Baij Nath v. Kali Charan, 49 All. 750, 25 A.L.J. 493, 28 Cr.L.J. 604.

Similarly, an application for maintenance under sec. 488 is not a complaint of an offence (the refusal to maintain wife not being an 'offence') and no compensation can be awarded if the application proves to be false—Amboo v. Baboo, 6 M.L.T. 261.

The use of a house as a brothel is not an offence under sec. 41, Bombay District Police Act, and a complaint as to such use of a house is not a complaint of an offence. No compensation can therefore be awarded if the complaint is frivolous or vexatious—Imp. v. Khairi, 6 S.L.R. 254, 14 Cr.L.J. 320.

An order for compensation cannot be made in regard to a complaint under sec. 2 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), because neglect or refusal to perform work is not an offence—In re Ram Sarup, 4 C.W.N. 253; Q. E. v. Namdeo, Ratanlal 617, Pollard v. Mothial, 4 Mad. 234. See also Jamil v. Md. Isaq, 41 All. 322, 20 Cr.L.J. 570.

Section 28 of the Bombay Public Conveyance Act provides a summary remedy for the recovery of the legal fare of a public conveyance, and a complaint under that section is not a complaint in respect of an offence within the meaning of this section. A Magistrate has therefore no power to make an order awarding compensation under this section in respect of such a complaint if it is false—In re Valli Mutha, 44 Bom. 463 (465).

807. "Triable by a Magistrate":—This section applies only where the offence is triable by a Magistrate and not where the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, but is actually tried by a Magistrate—Poligadu, 2 Weir 315, Emp. v. Kadu, 1902 P.R. 26, Q. E. v. Bavabhai, Ratanlal 961; Emp. v. Chhaba, 19 Bom. L.R. 60, Ma E. v. Mg, 1 Bur. L.J. 38, 23 Cr.L.J. 289; Sarupsonar v. Ram Sundar, 20 A.L.J. 433, Het Ram v. Ganga, 40 All. 615, 16 A.L.J. 486, 19 Cr.L.J. 706, Bansidhar v. Chunni, 25 A.L.J. 818, 28 Cr.L.J. 983; Shankar v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 15, 20 Cr.L.J. 495, Md. Hazat v. Bhola, 1919 P.R. 1, 20 Cr.L.J. 141. Even if the Magistrate tries an offence triable by the Court of Session, by virtue of his powers specially conferred upon him under sec. 30 and discharges the accused on account of the charge being vexatious, he cannot award compensation to the accused—Emp. v. Kadu, 1902 P.R. 26; Md. Hazat v. Bhola, supra, Shankar v. Crown, supra. But where the facts in a case showed that the offence was triable by a Court of Session only, but the Magistrate regarding it as falling under a different head of offences triable by him, tried the case and in dismissing the same awarded compensation to the accused, held that the procedure was not illegal—M. Venkatraya v. Kadi Venkatrayar, 45 Mad. 29, 23 Cr.L.J. 232, Hemandas v. Ahmed, 16 S.L.R. 205, 26 Cr.L.J. 265. But when a complaint has been filed against an accused person for offences some of which are triable exclusively by the Magistrate and some by the Court of Session, and the accused after trial is discharged in respect of all the offences, an order for compensation against the complainant can not be passed—Harihar v. Maksud Ali, 48 All. 166, 23 A.L.J. 1056, 27 Cr. L.J. 6. See also Het Ram v. Ganga, supra, where one offence was triable exclusively by the Sessions Court and two other offences by the Magistrate.

It is immaterial whether the case is triable as a summons case or as a warrant case. This section makes no distinction between either—Paighambar v. Emp., 4 O.W.N. 392, 28 Cr.L.J. 450 (451).

Summary cases—Compensation may be awarded even if the case is triable summarily—Q. E. v. Basava, 11 Mad. 142.

808. Who can award compensation:—Compensation is to be awarded by the Magistrate who has heard the substantive case and passed the order of acquittal or discharge. The Legislature never intended that one Magistrate should deal with the substantive case and make the order calling upon the complainant to shew cause, and that another Magistrate may pass the order for compensation—Rajaram v. Panchanan, 33 C.W.N. 861 (865), 1929 Cr. C. 474. Where part of the evidence was heard by one Magistrate and then the case was made over to another Magistrate under section 346, and the latter Magistrate heard the rest of the evidence and decided the case, held that the latter Magistrate was competent to order compensation—Ram Devi v. Govind, 19 A.L.J. 651, 22 Cr.L.J. 406. But a Magistrate who has heard nothing of the case except the complainant's plea against the order cannot make an order under this section—In re Mahadeo, 1892 A.W.N. 58.

'The Magistrate by whom the case is heard' does not include an Appellate Court. Such a Court in setting aside a conviction cannot order the complainant to pay compensation—Mechi Singh v. Mongal, 39 Cal 157 F.B. (overruling Kari Singh v. Tufani, 14 C.W.N. 212); Harichand v. Fakir, 3 Bom. L.R. 841, In re Pitambar, 7 Bom. L.R. 998; Chedi v. Ram Lal, 21 A.L.J. 834; Notified Area v. Karta Ram, 7 Lah. 152, 27 Cr. L.J. 570.

It is doubtful whether the High Court has jurisdiction to pass an order for compensation when the matter comes up in revision—Aminullah v. Emp., 26 A.L.J. 328, 29 Cr.L.J. 274 (275).

809. "Discharges or acquits the accused":—The word 'heard' shows that the case must proceed as far as hearing. If a complaint is summarily dismissed under sec. 203, without issue of process to the accused, such a dismissal is not an order of discharge or acquittal within the meaning of this section—Bhagwan v. Harmakh, 29 All. 137, Asam v. Mir Abdulla, 1897 P.R. 14, even though the accused was present at the enquiry under sec. 202, without issue of process, compensation cannot be awarded where the case is dismissed under sec. 203—Harphul v. Minia, 1906 P.R. 3. Where after the filing of a complaint, the statement of one of the prosecution witnesses was taken and it disclosed that the complaint was false, and thereupon the Magistrate passed an order under this section, held that the order could not be passed without discharging or acquitting the accused—Ram Labhaya v Jagannath, 30 P.L.R. 361, 30 Cr.L.J. 854 (855).

An order for compensation may be passed where the accused is acquitted under sec 245—Emp. v Salik Roy, 6 Cal 581; Number v Ambu, 5 Mad. 381, Q E v Pandu, 10 Bom 199, or under sec. 247—Emp v. Lal, 1888 P.R. 14; In re Munshi, 1884 A W N. 115, Emp v Hardeo, 1891 A W N. 120, or under sec 248—Himmat v. Bakhtawar, 1883 P.R. 24 But compensation cannot be awarded when the case is compounded (sec 345) because there is neither a discharge nor an acquittal. Even though the accused is acquitted after composition, such an acquittal is not one contemplated by this section—Sangappa, Ratanlal 957, In re Harkisan, 10 Bom L R 1056, Raop, Ratanlal 700, Emp v Khushali, 1888 P R. 19; Crown v Sunder Singh, 1910 P R. 30, 11 Cr L J. 638

In order that compensation may be granted, it is necessary that there must be a complete discharge or acquittal. If the accused is charged with more offences than one, he must be discharged or acquitted of all the offences; a discharge or acquittal in respect of one of the offences is a partial discharge and cannot entitle the accused to compensation—Muktl v. Jhotu, 24 Cal 53; Mid Ali Khan v Raja Ram, 40 All. 610, 19 Cr.L.J. 670, Emp v. Nadar, 12 S L R 87, 20 Cr L J 106. If there are several accused, and some only of them are acquitted or discharged, the complainant may be ordered to pay compensation only to those who have been discharged or acquitted, but not to the others—Number v Ambu, 5 Mad 381; Gohra v Amira, 1877 P R 15

Moreover, the provisions of this section as to compensation can only apply to cases where the order of discharge or acquittal is legal—Q. E. v. Maung Tun, 1 L B R. 44.

810. False and frivolous or vexatious.—Under the old law, if the charge was frivolous or vexatious, this was sufficient to entitle the accused to compensation, if the charge was false, the accused was equally entitled to the compensation, because a false charge was held to be a vexatious charge—Benimadhab v Kumud, 30 Cal 123 (F B); Emp. v. Bai Asha, 5 Bom. L R. 128; Ponnammal, 2 Weir 313 (314); Adikkan v Alagan, 21 Mad. 237, Emp v Bindeshri, 26 All 512, In re Gopal, 37 Bom 376, 15 Bom L R 49, 14 Cr L J 75, Crown v Ismail, 1903 P R. 18; Nga Myo v Nga Kym, 1914 U B R 3rd Qr 31, 16 Cr L.J. 92 Under the present law, the charge must be false besides being frivolous or vexatious The rulings in Ram Singh v Mathura, 34 All 354 and Emp v. Asha, 4 Bom L R 645 (where it was held that this section did not apply if the charge was false) are now overruled

In a Burma case it was held that it was sufficient to make the complainant liable to pay compensation if the charge was false, even though it was neither frivolous nor vexatious—Shaik Dawood v Mid Ibrahim, 11 Bur L T 201, 19 Cr L J 172 This is incorrect "We do not think that the procedure of sec 250 should be used in every false case unless the case is also either frivolous or vexatious In more serious cases it is desirable that the Magistrate should act under section 476 with a view to the institution of a prosecution"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922) If a Magistrate orders the complainant to pay compensation to the accused on the ground that he has preferred a false complaint, it practically amounts to convicting, in a summary proceeding, the complainant under sec. 211 I. P. Code without a proper trial, which is altogether improper and open to serious objection—Parsi v. Bendhi, 28 Cal. 251.

The mere fact that a complaint is frivolous or vexatious does not necessarily mean that it must be false. Compensation can be awarded only if the complaint is false and also frivolous or vexatious—Assanmal v. Dulbar, 19 S L R 66, 26 Cr L J 1295

The word 'vexatious' indicates an accusation merely for the purpose of annoyance—Benimadhab v. Kumud, 30 Cal 123, 6 C.W.N. 799, Parsi v. Bendhi, 28 Cal. 251. An accusation cannot be said to be vexatious unless the main intention of the complainant be to cause annoyance to the person accused—Crown v. Kouroud, 11 S L R 55, 18 Cr L J 1005 The idea conveyed by the word 'vexatious' is that the object of the person making the accusation should be primarily to harass the persons accused—Bakaji v. Mukund Singh, 21 Cr L J. 226 (Nag.); Bhan v. Syed Chand, 26 Cr L J. 1033 (Nag.). If a prosecution is found to be malicious i.e. brought on account of enmity, it is necessarily a vexatious one—Kashi Prosad v. Emp., 24 A.L.J. 161, 27 Cr.L.J. 300; Sheikh Faiz v. Crown, 14 S L R 168, 22 Cr.L.J. 120.

The word 'frivolous' means 'trifling,' 'silly,' or 'without due foundation'—Jaina v. Santak, 21 Cr L J. 41 (Nag.) Whether the charge is frivolous or vexatious is a question of fact to be decided by the Magistrate investigating the complaint—Munisami Mudali, 2 Weir 319 (320). But the knowledge and intention of the complainant must be looked into Compensation should not be granted to the accused where the complainant did not know that the complaint was false and it is clear that the intention of the complainant was not to vex or harass the accused—Crown v. Kouroud, 11 S L R 55, 18 Cr L J 1005

Where the complainant believed his case to be true at first, but subsequently after enquiries found that his belief had been proved to be untrue, it would be his duty frankly to tell the Court that he had made a mistake, and if he omits to do so it would show unwarrantable malice on his part and he would be liable to pay compensation—Shaik Dawood v. Md. Ibrahim, 11 Bur. L.T. 201, 19 Cr.L.J. 172.

Where a person was charged with theft, but he was proved to have committed the act in the assertion of a bona fide claim of right, the accusation of theft is false, within the scope of sec 250 In law, no distinction can be properly made between a false accusation as to the motive or intention which prompts a man in doing a certain act, and a false accusation as to his act—Ravishankar v. Savailal, 28 Bom. L R. 89, 27 Cr L J. 448.

811. 'By his order' :—Under the old section, the order awarding compensation had to be passed in the order of discharge or acquittal of the accused, and was a part of the order of discharge or acquittal.

Under the present section, the Magistrate is not bound to award compensation at the time of passing the order of discharge or acquittal, the latter order should only contain an order calling on the complainant to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay compensation.

The order calling upon the complainant to show cause must be made in the same order by which the Magistrate acquits or discharges the accused. Thus, where the accused was discharged, and in the order of discharge a conditional order for compensation was passed subject to the complainant showing cause, and the order of compensation was made absolute on the very day or on a subsequent day to which the case was adjourned for the complainant to show cause, held that the order was rightly passed—Ghurbin v. Khalil, 36 All. 132, Jairaj v. Bansi, 23 A L J 1054, 27 Cr L J 35, Lalit Mohan v. Kunja Behari, 18 C W N 702, Ghanumal v. Crown, 7 S.L.R. 123, 15 Cr L.J. 504, Jugal Kishore v. Abdul, 2 Cr.L.J. 523, 1905 A.W.N. 214, Dhanu Kadi v. Muthusami, 17 Cr L J 314, (1916) 2 M.W.N. 159; Emp. v. Saudagar, 1917 P R 31, In re Nagindas, 22 Bom. L.R. 184, Emp. v. Punamchand, 8 Bom L.R. 847. Under the old law the order of discharge and the order directing compensation had to be made in one continuous proceeding, and not in two separate proceedings, therefore where the Magistrate at the time of discharging the accused made no order as to compensation, but on a subsequent day ordered that the complainant should pay compensation, the order was held to be illegal, because it was not passed in the same proceeding in which the accused was discharged—In re Sadur Husain, 25 All. 315, Ram Singh v. Mathura, 34 All 354; Narpat Rai v. K. E., 1905 P R. 57; Haru Tanti v. Satish, 38 Cal 302, 12 Cr.L.J. 6, Nanheylal v. Ranibahu, 10 N L.R. 8, Imamdin v. Emp., 1913 P.L.R. 99. These cases are no longer relevant. Under the present Code, it is not necessary that the order for compensation should be embodied in the order of discharge. The two orders may be passed in separate proceedings. It is only the order calling upon the complainant to show cause which is to be contained in the order of discharge or acquittal. The actual order for compensation is necessarily a subsequent order—Achhru Mal v. Emp., 7 Lah. 121, 27 Cr.L.J. 752; Saudagar v. Aroor, 29 Cr.L.J. 680 (Lah.).

Where there were two accused, and one of them was discharged, and the case against the other was adjourned to a later date when he was acquitted, and on the latter date the Magistrate required the complainant to show cause and then ordered him to pay compensation to each of the accused, held that the procedure followed was illegal. When the order of discharge was made against the first accused, the case against him was at an end, and in so far as payment of compensation to him was concerned, the order to show cause should have been made along with the order of discharge. The defect was not curable under sec 537—Suresh v. Abdul Jabbar, 29 C W N. 127, 26 Cr L.J. 449. But where several charges are brought against the same accused, and he is at first discharged on one charge and is subsequently acquitted in respect of the other charges, it is not illegal to pass an order of compensation at the time of the acquittal in respect of the latter charges. In fact, in such a case it is better for the

Notice to show cause.—Under the old law, there was a difference of opinion as to whether the Magistrate should issue a formal notice to the complainant to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay compensation. In some cases it was held that since the proviso laid down "that before making any direction for payment of compensation the Magistrate shall record and consider any objection which the complainant or informant may urge against the making of the direction," it necessarily implied that the Magistrate should give the complainant an opportunity to show cause and raise any objection which he might urge—Q. E. v. Manik, Ratanlal 725, In re Mahadev, 24 Bom. L.R. 805, Pandurang v. Longman, 3 Bom. L.R. 777, Akloo v. Nowbat, 21 Cr L J. 751, 1 P.L.T. 558; In re Appalanarasayya, 44 Mad. 51, Lalit Mohan v. Kuma Behari, 18 C.W.N. 702, Gulzari Lal v. Ganga Rao, 9 A.L.J. 170, 13 Cr.L.J. 268. But it was held in a later Allahabad case that the proviso only related to objections voluntarily urged, that this section was not intended to multiply the proceeding but to be applied in a summary manner and that in a small matter of the kind contemplated by this section it would be an unnecessary and burdensome procedure to issue a formal notice—Emp. v. Pancham, 45 All. 474. Under the present amendment, the Magistrate must call upon the complainant to show cause, if the complainant is present, the Magistrate must call upon him directly, if he is not present, the Magistrate must direct the issue of a summons to show cause.

It is imperative on the Magistrate to give the complainant an opportunity to show cause, and he cannot make the order absolute owing to the absence of the complainant—Ghafur v. Lattu, 1891 A.W.N. 63, Subans v. Mahabir, 18 C.W.N. 1277, Gulzari Lal v. Ganga Ram, 9 A.L.J. 170. Under the present law, if the complainant is absent, summons to show cause must be issued to him. If this is not done, the order of compensation must be set aside, and the Magistrate should be directed to summon the complainant and give him an opportunity of showing cause before passing the order—Kalka v. Ranjit, 24 A.L.J. 170, 27 Cr.L.J. 128. If the complainant is present, he may be directed forthwith to show cause, and in the absence of any special reason, he is not entitled as a matter of right to an adjournment to enable him to consult a pleader and to give a written reply—In re Ishwarlal, 28 Bom. L.R. 98, 27 Cr L J. 430.

812. Who can be ordered to pay compensation :—

The Magistrate can pass an order under this section against the person upon whose complaint or information an accusation was made. Therefore, it is open to a Magistrate to direct the person, upon whose information the proceedings were started, to pay compensation to the accused, even though that person was a mere informer and not the real complainant—Fariduddin v. Emp., 24 A.L.J. 221, 27 Cr.L.J. 702. Where a certain person J gave information to S to the effect that a certain constable had committed extortion, intending that a complaint should be made on his behalf to a Magistrate, and the complaint was subsequently dismissed as frivolous and the accused was acquitted, held that J was liable to give compensation to the accused. Although the information was conveyed to the Magistrate through S, still as J gave the information with the intention that it should be conveyed to a Magistrate, then clearly J was the person upon 'whose information the accusation was made' within the meaning of sec 250. The mere fact that he utilized S for conveying the information was immaterial—Emp v Bahawal Singh, 40 All 79 (81), 19 Cr L J 76. If on the other hand, he had merely in conversation told S about the case without any desire for or view to a prosecution or to the conveyance of the information to the Magistrate, then he would have been hardly liable for the intervention of S who took it upon himself to make a complaint to the Magistrate. In this latter circumstance, it would be S who would be liable to pay compensation—Ibid. In a Sind case, where A gave information of an offence to the Police at the instigation of B, and the accusation was found to be false, it was held that B was not liable to pay compensation, because he did not himself give the information to the Police, although he was the instigator—Emp v Sumar, 12 S L R 76, 20 Cr L J. 100, 48 I.C 980. Where certain persons gave information as witnesses of an offence to a constable, and upon the constable's information to the Sub-Inspector a case was instituted which was afterwards found to be false, held that those persons could not be ordered to pay compensation, because they were not the "persons upon whose information the accusation was made" within the meaning of this section. It was the police constable upon whose information to the Sub-Inspector the case was instituted. This section is a penal one and should be construed strictly. There is no authority for introducing into it words which would extend the liability to pay compensation to individuals other than the actual complainant or person who gives the information on which the case is instituted—Wali Mahomed v. Crown, 13 S L.R 166, 21 Cr L J 49, 54 I.C 401. These two Sind cases appear to be in conflict with 40 All. 79 cited above.

An order under sec. 250 cannot be passed against the complainant, unless the complainant knew that his information was false. Where a false charge was lodged by the complainant on information supplied to him by another person, but there was no suggestion of any collusion between the complainant and that person, and there was no finding that the complainant knew that the information was false, held that the complainant could not be ordered to pay compensation under this section. The object of this section is that compensation should be recoverable from the person responsible for the false accusation—Crown v Kouroud, 11 S L.R. 55, 18 Cr.L J. 1005.

Public officers are not exempted from the liability to pay compensation for frivolous and vexatious complaints—Narasayya v. Ramadas, 2 Weir 317 (318). Where a Municipal peon, under sanction of the Municipality, charged a certain person of an offence which was found to be false, the order of the Magistrate directing the peon to pay compensation to the accused was held to be legal—Q E v Bhima, Ratanlal 309.

Where a process-server of a Civil Court merely reported to the Court that he was obstructed by the accused in executing a writ of attachment, and a report was thereupon made by the Court to a Magistrate, and the Magistrate found the case to be false and directed the process-server to pay compensation to the accused, it was held that the order of the Magistrate was wrong, because the process-peon was not a complainant within the meaning of this section. It was the Civil Court which actually made the complaint—In re Keshav Lakshman, 1 Bom. 175; In re Ram Padarath, 26 All 183 (184), Bharut v Javed Ali, 20 Cal 481 (482); See also In re Krishandas, 14 Bom. L R 1166, 14 Cr.L.J. 1.

A person preferring a complaint on behalf of another is not liable to pay compensation. A master preferring a complaint on behalf of his servant cannot be ordered to pay compensation—Chorbyn v. Ameer Khan, 1869 P R 24. The question whether a servant can be held responsible for an information lodged on behalf of his master is a question of fact and depends on the question whether the servant is merely the mouthpiece of his master and is merely giving expression of his master's accusation, or whether he joins personally in the accusation himself. In the former case no order of compensation should be made against the servant—Jagdani v Mahadeo, 14 C W N 326. A guardian or next friend of a minor complainant is not liable to pay compensation—Isa v. Ranon, 1912 P L R 83, 13 Cr L J. 136.

Where a written complaint prepared by the Police Officer was sent through a constable to the Magistrate, the constable who was merely a bearer of the complaint, and acting under the order of his superior officer, could not be ordered to pay compensation—Subramaniya v. Pakia, 21 M.L.J. 844, 12 Cr L J 482. But in another Madras case, in which the complainant did not make the complaint of his own motion but under the order of his superior officer, and had no personal knowledge of the offence, but was merely the instrument of his superior officer in making the complaint, it was held that the complainant himself (and not his superior officer) must be ordered to pay compensation. If he chose to make a complaint as to a matter of which he had no personal knowledge, he must take the consequence, and look to his superiors to indemnify him if he acted under their orders—Narasayya v Ramadas, 2 Weir 317 (318).

The word 'person' includes also a juristic person; according to sec. 3 (59) of the General Clauses Act it includes any company or association, or body of individuals whether incorporated or not. Therefore a Municipal Committee can be ordered to pay compensation—Municipal Committee v. Rattan Chand, 24 Cr.L.J. 463 (Lah.).

813. To whom compensation can be awarded :—Compensation is awardable only to the person who has suffered from the accusation and not to his relatives—Abdool Rahim v. Mehrab, 1866 P R 89, Crown v. Sadoola, 1866 P.R. 97; Crown v. Debi Buksh, 1868 P R 25.

Where there are several accused and one of the accused is discharged on the ground that the complaint against him is vexatious, he can be awarded compensation but not the others—Gohra v Amira, 1877 P R. 15; Number v. Ambu, 5 Mad. 381.

814. Sub-section (2)—Record of objections, reasons, etc.—The Magistrate before passing an order for compensation must comply with the provisions of sub-section (2) of this section, he cannot pass an order for compensation, without recording and considering any objection which the complainant may urge Q E v Manik, Ratanlal 725; Narayanasami v. Buhee, 2 Weir 310, In re Mahadev Ram Krishna, 23 Cr.L.J. 574, 24 Bom L.R. 805, Pandurang v Laxman, 3 Bom L.R. 777, Emp. v. Nga Pwe, 1906 U B R (Cr P C) 51, Alloo v. Nawbat, 1 P.L.T. 558, 21 Cr L J 751, Emp v Chuant, 24 O C. 261; Deonarain v. Chhatoo, 3 P.L.T. 203, 23 Cr L J. 261, Minhomal v. Crown, 8 S.L R 25, 15 Cr.L J. 666; if he omits to record the objections, it is more than an irregularity and cannot be cured by sec 537—Emp v. Nga Pwe, supra

The Magistrate is bound to consider the objections raised by the complainant and to record a judgment with reasons. A mere statement that the cause shown is not reasonable is insufficient—Deonarain v Chhatoo, 3 P.L.T. 203, 23 Cr.L.J. 261

Moreover, a Magistrate should, in his order awarding compensation, state his reasons why he deems the complaint to be vexatious, and should also state in his judgment the facts of the case with a criticism of the incidents involved in it—Amjad Ali v. Ashruf Ali, 10 C W.N. 544 When the accused are discharged, the recording of the reasons for ordering compensation to be paid is almost a condition precedent to the proper exercise of that power, the recording of reasons is in addition to the finding by the Magistrate that the accusation was either frivolous or vexatious. The policy of the Legislature in requiring that in such a case reasons should be recorded is obviously to afford an opportunity to an appellate or revising tribunal to consider the sufficiency of the reasons so recorded. In the absence of such a recording of reasons there is no proper compliance with the provisions of this section and the order is wrong—Thadiappan v Veeraperumal, 21 L W 646, 26 Cr L J 1501

The complainant may show cause with reference to the evidence already recorded, but he cannot adduce further evidence. This section does not require that separate proceedings should be held and fresh evidence taken—Q E v Chiraj Ali, 1898 A W N 108. But where the Magistrate had discharged the accused in the main case after hearing only some of the witnesses produced by the complainant, the Magistrate, before awarding compensation, ought to hear the remaining witnesses of the complainant—In re Appalaratnayya, 41 Mad 51, Sya Kyaw v. K. E., 3 Bur. L J. 26, 25 Cr.L.J. 1280. It is only after examination of all the evidence the complainant wants to adduce that a Magistrate can come to the conclusion that the case is false and vexatious. Though the Magistrate can discharge the accused at any stage, he is not entitled to order compensation without examining all the complainant's witnesses—Parthasarathi v Krishnaswami, 51 Mad. 337, 29 Cr.L.J. 114, 1A M.L.J. 641. Though compensation can be awarded in exceptional cases before 818. Sub-section (3)—Appeal:—Under the old law, no appeal could lie against an order of compensation passed by a 1st class Magistrate.—Q. E. v. Bira, 1 Bom L.R. 350; In re Pitambar, 7 Bom L.R. 998; under the present law, an appeal is allowed from an order of such Magistrate if the compensation awarded exceeds rupees fifty.

Whenever a complainant has been ordered to pay compensation exceeding rupees fifty, he has a right of appeal, whether the amount is awarded to one accused, or is ordered to be distributed among a number of accused persons in sums not exceeding fifty rupees—Augustin v. Durning Domello, 49 Bom. 440, 26 Cr.L.J. 480, 26 Bom L.R. 1243. This clause does not limit the right of appeal to cases where the compensation awarded to each accused exceeds rupees fifty. Where the total amount directed to be paid to several accused persons exceeds Rs 50, a right of appeal exists—Assanmal v. Dilbar, 19 S.L.R. 66, 26 Cr.L.J. 1293; Sumaria v Emp., 24 A.L.J. 167, 27 Cr.L.J. 146. There is nothing in this section to show that an appeal will lie only where the compensation directed to be paid to each individual accused is more than Rs. 50. A complainant who has been ordered to pay compensation exceeding Rs. 50 has the right of appeal. It is the total amount of compensation directed to be paid by the complainant which must form the basis of the decision whether an appeal lies or not—Sobhit v Emp., 7 P.L.T. 552, 26 Cr.L.J. 1504.

Notice to accused.—Though there is no express provision that notice should go to the accused, still it is desirable that the accused should have notice of the appeal in order that he may have an opportunity of supporting the order passed in his favour—Emp v Palaniappa, 29 Mad 187; Venkatarama v. Krishna, 38 Mad 1091, Ram Chand v. Jesa Ram, 25 Cr.L.J. 209 (Lah), Momoon v Ibrahim, 20 S.L.R. 41, 27 Cr.L.J. 249. But absence of notice to the accused will not vitiate the appellate proceedings and will not make the appellate order liable to be set aside—Nagi Reddi v Bapappa, 33 Mad 89; Krishna v. Narayana, 41 A.L.J. 172, 22 Cr.L.J. 583, Rashid Muhammad, 8 Lah. 568, 28 Cr.L.J. 410.

Notice to Crown:—It is not imperative that notice of the appeal should be given to the Crown under sec 422, because it is a matter in which the accused is really interested and the Crown is very little interested—Emp. v Palaniappa, 29 Mad. 187; Krishna v. Narayana, supra. Notice to the Crown is a mere formality in an appeal of this description, for there can be very few cases in which the Crown would deem it necessary to oppose the appeal. Omission to send notice to the Crown is not a ground of interference with the Appellate Court's order—Guruswami v Tirumurthi, 1 L.W. 908, 15 Cr.L.J. 648.

819. Revision:—The High Court in revision can set aside an order of compensation passed by a Magistrate, and can order repayment of the money paid—Crown v Hiranand, 1903 P.R. 29; Ali Ahmad v. Nathu, 1884 P.R. 14; Howanna v. Jasu, 1885 P.R. 12. A superior Criminal Court has jurisdiction under sec. 435 to examine an order under sec. 250 in the exercise of its ordinary revisional jurisdiction—As v. Peal, 17 A.L.J. 896.

Death of party :—If, pending the revision, the complainant (i.e. the party who has been ordered to pay compensation) dies, the revision-petition does not abate but may be continued by his legal representatives—Prem Singh v. Bhola, 1908 P.R. 24

Where after the passing of the Magistrate's order the accused died, and the complainant applied to the High Court for revision, the High Court refused to pass any order because the accused could not be served with notice—Govinda v. Keshavrao, Ratanlal 634

CHAPTER XXI.

OF THE TRIAL OF WARRANT-CASES BY MAGISTRATES.

820. Change of procedure :—If a warrant case is tried as a summons case, the procedure is illegal and the conviction is liable to be set aside—Emp v. Chinnappayan, 29 Mad 372 If in such trial the accused is acquitted under sec 245, the order of acquittal will at best operate as an order of discharge under sec 253—Emp. v. Jadu, 1886 A W N 260, Q E v Lalp, 1888 A W N 96

The fact that a summons instead of a warrant has been issued in a warrant case does not justify the procedure to be as in a summons case—Nand Lal v. Bhagiratty, 10 W R. 31.

If a trial is commenced as a warrant case, it must be ended as a warrant case and not as a summons case, a sudden change of procedure in the midst of a trial is illegal. Therefore where a complaint alleged the commission of certain offences which were triable as warrant cases, and the processes issued to the accused as well as the commencement of the proceeding showed that the accused were being tried for those offences, but the Magistrate after taking the evidence of some of the witnesses for the complainant recorded an order that the offences as disclosed were triable as summons cases, and then he proceeded with the trial as in a summons case, without framing a charge, held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was highly illegal and the trial should be set aside—Ganga Saran v. Emp. 19 A L J 6, 22 Cr.L J. 146.

The question whether a case is triable as a summons case or as a warrant case is to be decided by reference to the complaint and the notices issued to the accused and also to the commencement of the case under certain sections of the Penal Code, and not by reference to the particular sections under which the conviction takes place—Ganga Saran v. Emp., supra

If two charges arising out of the same facts under the same circumstances are framed, one of a summons case and another of a warrant case, the procedure should be as laid down for a warrant case—Raj

Narain v. Lala Zamoli, 11 Cal. 91; In re Sobhanadri, 39 Mad. 503; Raghavulu v. Singaram, 41 Mad. 727.

Procedure in warrant-cases.

251. The following procedure shall be observed by Magistrates in the trial of warrant cases.

821. Procedure* must be followed :—In trying warrant cases, the procedure of this chapter must be strictly followed. The Magistrate cannot follow a procedure which had grown up by usage in the course of years, and which materially differs from that laid down in this chapter; such a procedure is more than an irregularity and is not curable by sec 537—Emp v Dosabhai, 17 Bom.L.R. 490, 16 Cr.L.J. 538. The Magistrate cannot follow an arbitrary procedure of his own. See Taba v Hira, 1893 P.R. 29. A Presidency Magistrate must follow the procedure laid down in this chapter, subject to the special provisions of sec. 362 as to the mode of taking down the evidence—Q. E. v. Abdul, Ratanlal 539.

During the pendency of the trial of an author of a book before a Magistrate under sec. 153A, I. P. Code, after the evidence of the prosecution witnesses was recorded, the Government proscribed the book under sec. 99A Cr. P. Code and the accused then applied under sec 99B to the High Court, but the application was dismissed on the ground that the book contained the matter falling under sec 153A I. P. Code. Thereupon the Magistrate shut out all cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and the production of defence witnesses, and convicted the accused under sec 153A, who thereupon applied in revision on the ground that the conviction was illegal as the Magistrate by shutting out all evidence had disregarded the procedure of warrant cases. Held that in view of the order of the High Court passed on an application under sec. 99B, the Magistrate was bound to treat that order as conclusive and binding, and was not bound to allow or record any further evidence in the case, and was therefore justified in shutting out all evidence and convicting the accused—Kalicharan v. Emp., 25 A.L.J. 846, 28 Cr.L.J. 785 (786).

252. (1) When the accused appears or is brought before a Magistrate, such Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution:

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court.

(2) The Magistrate shall ascertain, from the complainant or otherwise, the names of any persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution, and shall summon to give evidence before himself such of them as he thinks necessary.

Change :—The proviso has been newly added by sec. 70 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. A similar change has been made in section 244, q. v. This amendment follows clause (aa) of section 200.

822. "Is brought before the Court" :—It is immaterial if the accused is brought before the Court by illegal arrest. Where a subject of a Native State committing an offence in British territory fled to his own country, and the British Police, without the intervention of the State authorities, persued him and arrested him in that State, it was held that his illegal arrest would not vitiate his subsequent trial and conviction in British India—Sobha v Emp., 1889 P R 6; Emp. v. Nga Po, 7 Bur.L R 66

'Hear the complainant' :—Hearing a complainant within the meaning of this section does not involve his examination on oath, and a trial of a warrant case is not vitiated merely because it did not begin with an examination of the complainant by the Court—Puthen Veetil Kunhi v Emp., 42 M L J 108, 23 Cr L J 203

823. Taking evidence for the prosecution :—As soon as the accused is brought before the Magistrate he has a right to have the evidence against him recorded at as early a period as possible; and the fact that there is or may be a great body of evidence forthcoming against him is not a good ground for his detention for an inordinate period—Manikam v. Q., 6 Mad. 63

It is the duty of the prosecution to bring before the Court all the persons who are alleged or are known to have knowledge of the facts or are likely to give important information—Q E v Ram Sahai, 10 Cal. 1070, Emp. v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121; Q E. v Santon, 14 All 521; Q E. v. Bankhandi, 15 All. 6; Emp v Kaliprosanna, 14 Cal. 245 If such witnesses are not called, without sufficient cause being shown, the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution—Emp. v Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121.

The Magistrate is bound to examine every one of the witnesses called by the complainant—Q. v Parasurama, 4 Mad 329; Begum Bibi v. Ghulam, 1908 P.W.R. 3; he cannot say beforehand whether the evidence of a certain witness will be material or not—Reg v. Daya. Ratanlal 21 (22). He cannot refuse to examine any witnesses simply because their evidence will be a mere repetition of what has been already given by the other witnesses—Emp. v Hematulla, 3 Cal. 389; Emp v. Kashi, 2 All 447 But if the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless, he can discharge the accused without examining all the witnesses (sec 253)—Navanna v Suresetti, 9 M L T. 302, 12 Cr.L.J. 158; Dhanubhai v. Pyarji. Ratanlal 201. See Note 828 under sec. 253.

The witnesses must be examined orally Where the witnesses common to three cases were first examined-in-chief in only one case, and their deposition was recorded by a typewriter in triplicate, one copy being made part of the record in each case, held that the procedure in the other two cases was illegal—Mazahar Ali v. Emp., 50 Cal. 223 (226).

An accused should be given, if he so desires, an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, even though a charge is not framed—Ashirbad v. Maju, 8 C.W.N. 838. But the prosecution is not bound to tender the witness for cross-examination; the prosecution is not bound to do anything more than make a witness appear in Court, so that the accused may call him or not as he likes—Emp. v. Kaliprosanna, 14 Cal. 245. Moreover, the prosecution is not bound to put such of those as he does not examine into the witness box to be cross-examined. But he should not refuse to put into the box for cross-examination a truthful witness, merely because his evidence may be favourable to the defence—Q. E. v. Durga, 16 All. 84 (F B).

If a prosecution witness is examined after the whole of the defence evidence has been taken, the procedure is illegal and vitiates the trial, so that the trial should commence anew from the stage where the prosecution witness should have been examined—Karam Chand v. Emp., 29 P.L.R. 613, 29 Cr.L.J. 844.

824. Summoning witnesses:—Sub-section (1) lays down that the Magistrate shall take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution. This means that the complainant should first of all himself produce what evidence he can in support of the prosecution, and the Magistrate shall proceed to hear it. The Court is apparently not bound to issue process for such witnesses or to grant time for the production of such witnesses, but if produced, he must record their evidence. Next, when the complainant has done all he can without the assistance of the process of the Court, it is then for the Magistrate to ascertain, under sub-section (2), from the complainant or otherwise, the names of other persons likely or able to give evidence, and he must summon such of those as he thinks necessary i.e. such of those as he thinks will be of value in assisting the prosecution case—Menon v. Krishna Nayar, 49 Mad. 978, 51 M.L.J. 328, 27 Cr.L.J. 1123. The Magistrate has a discretion in summoning witnesses, and he is not bound to summon every person named as a witness for the complainant—Chulan v. Sukedad, 23 W.R. 9. The Magistrate can use his discretion in selecting, out of the list of witnesses, those who seem to be necessary and those who seem to be unnecessary. But the power is to be exercised with caution and the Magistrate must see that there be no miscarriage of justice by excluding an important witness—Sitab Singh v. Dalganjan, 12 A.L.J. 15, 14 Cr.L.J. 682. The duty of seeing that all evidence essential to the prosecution case is before the Court is thrown upon the Magistrate himself. So it is not open to a Magistrate to acquit on the ground that the prosecution has failed to produce a necessary witness—Emp. v. Maiku Lal, 12 O.L.J. 632, 2 O.W.N. 581, 26 Cr.L.J. 1266.

The Magistrate cannot arbitrarily refuse to summon the witnesses named by the complainant; it is his duty to assist and not to hamper the prosecution, and for that purpose he must issue summons to persons of whom the complainant has informed him and who, he considers, are likely to give useful evidence. The Magistrate is not bound to or expected to exercise this duty of ascertaining more than once, and the proper time is when the evidence 'produced' in support of the prosecution has been taken, and that ordinarily includes the cross-examination, if any, and re-examination, if any, before the charge. In order to ascertain the names of necessary witnesses, the Magistrate should put questions to the complainant in proper form. The question to be asked is not whether the complainant has any more witnesses whom he can produce without summons, but whether he can inform the Court of any witnesses who will have to be brought by process—Menon v Krishna Nayar, 49 Mad. 978, 51 M L J. 328, 27 Cr. L J. 1123

After the witnesses in support of the prosecution are heard, it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that the prosecutor is not allowed to set the Court on to a roaming inquiry, summoning persons in the hope that something might be elicited which may help his case. The prosecutor must come with his case fully prepared and there is no section in the Code which authorises him to file a fresh list of prosecution witnesses—Sitab Singh v. Dalganjan, 12 A L J 15, 14 Cr L J. 682

Where witnesses do not obey the summons, the prosecution has a right to call upon the Court to compel their attendance—Bhomar v. Digambar, 6 C W N. 548

It is not proper for the Magistrate to issue a warrant in the first instance, it is only when the summons is disobeyed that serious measures may be taken—Kala Singh v K. E., 1907 P W R 22.

Process fee :—There is nothing in this Code which enables a Magistrate to demand from even the complainant the expenses to be incurred by his witnesses, though such a power is conferred by sec. 244 (3) in a summons case—Bridhichand v. Lakhmichand, 8 N. L R. 65, 13 Cr. L J. 554. The dismissal of a complaint in a warrant case for non-payment of process fee is illegal—Palannagari Pitchivadu, 2 Weir 323.

Inspection of documents .—The accused is entitled to inspect all the documents produced by the complainant as evidence against the accused and filed as exhibits, and not merely to get certified copies thereof—In re Francis, 1 Bom. L R 433. But so long as the documents are not filed, but merely in the possession of the prosecution, the accused has no right to call for their production or to inspect the same, until after a charge has been framed—Tahilram v Pitambardas, 8 S L R. 267, 14 Cr L J 245 (cited in Note 847 under sec 257)

253. (1) If upon taking all the evidence referred to Discharge of accused. in Section 252, and making examination (if any) of the evidence as the Magistrate thinks necessary, he finds that the evidence against the accused has been made out wholly or partly rebutted, would warrant his conviction, the Magistrate shall discharge him.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case, if, for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless.

825. Procedure :—The procedure prescribed by these sections should be strictly followed. The Magistrate should first take the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses (sec. 252) and if necessary examine the accused (sec. 253) and then apply the law to the criminal acts to find whether there is prima facie evidence, then frame charges (sec. 254) and call upon the accused to plead thereto (sec. 255) and enter upon his defence (sec. 256)—Goonath v. Troylocko, 9 W.R. 15. If the Magistrate after examining the prosecution witnesses (sec. 252), examined the accused and the witnesses for the defence (sec. 256), without having drawn up a charge, and then discharged the accused under sec. 253, the procedure was contrary to law and the accused should be treated as acquitted under sec. 258—Taba v. Hirba, 1883 P.R. 29. In Orlial v. Kalu, 18 Cr.L.J. 1006 (Bur.) however, where the Magistrate followed the same procedure as in the Punjab case, it was held that although the procedure adopted was highly irregular and unwarranted, still as the procedure was in substance that laid down in this chapter, the omission to frame a charge and record a plea would not invalidate the order of discharge, and that sec. 535 (1) would cure the irregularity.

"Taking all the evidence" etc.—A Magistrate is not competent to discharge an accused person until the evidence of all the witnesses named for the prosecution has been taken—Q. v. Parasurama, 4 Mad. 329; In re Gangoo, 2 C.L.R. 389, Q. v. Japit, 22 W.R. 25; Reg. v. Daya, Ratanlal 21; Begam Bibi v. Ghulam, 1908 P.W.R. 3. Although he has a discretion to summon or not every person named as a witness by the complainant, Chulan v. Sukedad, 23 W.R. 9, still he is not justified in discharging an accused person without examining all the witnesses who are present in Court—Rakhai v. Monmotha, 11 C.W.N. 1xxxii. If, however, upon examination of some of the witnesses, the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless, he can discharge the accused under sub-section (2) without examining the other witnesses—Navanna Chinna v. Suresetti, 9 M.L.T. 302, 12 Cr.L.J. 158.

Where a case was transferred from a Bench of Magistrates, who had already recorded some evidence, to a Deputy Magistrate, the latter is bound to examine the evidence already recorded, and cannot discharge the accused without considering the evidence—Amodini v. Darsan, 38 Cal. 829.

826. Discharge :—Orders which amount to discharge.—Where a warrant case which cannot be compounded, is compounded and the case dismissed, such dismissal amounts only to a discharge—Reg. v. Devama, 1 Bom. 64; Q. E. v. Motidas, Ratanlal 391. When after the issue of process, the Magistrate does not think it proper to proceed any further, the termination of the proceedings amounts to an order of discharge—Moul Singh v. Mahabir, 4 C.W.N. 242. Where no charge was drawn up, and the accused was not called upon to plead or enter on his defence, the release of the accused did not amount to an acquittal but to a discharge under this section—Q. v. Purna Chandra, 4 B.L.R. App 1

Order of discharge when improper—A Magistrate ought not to discharge the accused merely because he was illegally arrested e.g. where the Police arrested him without warrant in a non-cognizable case—Reg v Sangara, Ratanlal 73. So also, a Magistrate ought not to discharge a person merely because he has no jurisdiction to try the case; in such a case he ought to proceed under section 346—Munisami, 2 Weir 323

A Magistrate cannot discharge or acquit the accused upon withdrawal of complaint in a non-cognizable case. Such a procedure is allowed in summons cases (sec 248) and not in warrant cases. The Magistrate has to proceed with the inquiry in spite of the withdrawal of complaint—In re Ganesh, 13 Bom. 600, Emp. v Ranchhod, 37 Bom 369, Maung Thu v. U Po, 5 Rang 136, 28 Cr L.J. 649 (650). A Magistrate cannot dismiss the complaint and discharge the accused under this section if the complainant is absent, and the offence is a warrant case and a non-compoundable one. Such a dismissal amounts to an application to a warrant case of the procedure prescribed by sec 247 in respect of a summons case—Govinda v Dulal, 10 Cal. 67, Ram Coomar v. Ramji, 4 C.W.N. 26, Alexander v Conners, 20 C.W.N 698; Q. E. v Nanaji, Ratanlal 524; Niralan v. Jogesh, 1 C.W.N 57. But under section 259, as now amended, the Magistrate can discharge the accused owing to the absence of the complainant, if the offence is non-cognizable, even though it is non-compoundable.

An order of discharge can be made when according to the words of this section, no case has been made out which if unrebutted would warrant the conviction of the accused; but when there is a body of evidence which if believed would justify a conviction, it is better to draw up a charge and dispose of the case finally, than to discharge the accused—Radhi v. Phulchand, 1909 P.W.R. 18, 11 Cr L.J. 110

An order of discharge cannot be made after a charge has been framed; such an order is erroneous and would amount to an acquittal under section 258—Crown v. Nathu, 1903 P.R. 14.

827. Rehearing :—The discharge of an accused person does not bar a fresh complaint being entertained either by the same Magistrate who passed the order of discharge or by another Magistrate, and it is not necessary that the previous order of discharge must be set aside before fresh proceedings can be taken—Dwarka v Beni Madhab, 28 Cal. 652 (F.B.), Q. E. v. Dolegobind, 28 Cal. 211; Emp. v. Maheswara, 31 Mad. 543; Harj Dass v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608 (F.B.).

This power of revival of proceedings is vested in all Magistrates including the Magistrate who discharged the accused. But Magistrates are bound to exercise due discretion, to take that discharge into account, and to avoid any such oppressive proceedings as may either expose them to punishment under section 219 or 220 I P. C. or to a civil action on the part of the accused—Q. E. v. Bapuda, Ratanlal 350. No rehearing should be made of a case which has been disposed of by an order of discharge by a Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction, except where there has been a manifest error or miscarriage of justice—Emp. v Chinn Kaliappa, 29 Mad. 126 (F.B.). An order of discharge passed under this section cannot be set aside and prosecution started afresh, unless there are new materials before the Magistrate which were not before him formerly, and unless upon those materials there is a probability of the conviction of the accused persons—Biso Ram v. Emp., 23 Cr L.J. 236 (Pat)

If an order of discharge is passed by a Presidency Magistrate, the High Court can interfere under sec. 439 of this Code (and not merely under sec. 15 of the Charter Act) and direct a further inquiry—Malik Protap v Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal. 994. See this case and other cases cited in Note 682 under sec 203

Power of District Magistrate.—Where an accused person has been discharged under this section, the District Magistrate can himself hold a further inquiry or can direct such inquiry to be held by a Subordinate Magistrate (sec. 436)—Parbhu Lal v Janki, 18 Cr.L.J. 706 (All); Q E v Chotu, 9 All 52, Q E. v. Balasinnathambi, 14 Mad 334; Narayana-swami v. Emp., 32 Mad. 220; Hari Singh v. Dinesh, 20 W.R 46; Kistoram v. Anis, 20 W.R. 47.

828. Sub-section (2) :—When a Magistrate is reasonably convinced, on what has been already deposed, that a criminal charge cannot be sustained, he is relieved from the necessity of going on with the trial and can discharge the accused—Dhanjibhai v. Pyari, Ratnial 201; Navanna v. Suresetti, 9 M.L.T 302. The Magistrate can discharge the accused even before the date fixed for hearing, if upon the materials then before him he is satisfied that the offence could not have been committed—Watson v Metcalfe, 25 Cr L.J. 696 (Pat.). A Magistrate has power to discharge an accused, under sub-sec (2), even if no witnesses are examined under sec. 252—Kunj Behari v. Emp., 24 A.L.J. 512, 27 Cr L.J 541 (542) The Magistrate can discharge the accused before all the complainant's witnesses have been examined—Kashinatha v. Shanmugam, 52 Mad. 987, 31 Cr.L.J 275 (277) The word 'groundless' in this sub-section is not capable of any precise definition. The amount of evidence which would enable a Magistrate to say that a particular charge is groundless is so entirely dependent on circumstances that no general rule or direction is likely to be of any use, except that the Magistrate is required to arrive at his conclusion judiciously and not capriciously. If acting judicially a Magistrate has come to the conclusion that the charge must fail either because the allegations are false or because they disclose a dispute of a civil nature distorted into a criminal case, or for any other reason, then there is nothing to prevent the Magistrate from discharging the accused before all the prosecution witnesses have been examined—Kasinatha v. Shanmugam, supra But where a complaint prima facie discloses an offence, a Magistrate can hold the charge to be groundless and discharge the accused under sub-section (2), only when he has at least ascertained from the complainant the nature of the evidence his witnesses are going to give; and he cannot refuse to examine all the witnesses cited by the complainant and discharge the accused, without ascertaining from the complainant the nature of the evidence the remaining witnesses are expected to give. If he so ascertains, and then finds that even if that evidence was given the charge would be groundless, it is open to him to discharge the accused on that ground—Muhammad Sheriff v. Abdul Karim, 51 Mad. 185, 53 M.L.J. 757, 28 Cr.L.J. 995

If the evidence recorded does not raise any presumption that the accused has committed any offence but merely leads to a doubt, the proper course would be to discharge the accused and not to proceed to frame a charge—Mul Chand v. K E, 1906 P.R. 2.

Under this section, the Magistrate can discharge, but not acquit the accused—Q. v. Robert, 6 W.R. 13.

Recording reasons.—The Legislature does not render the writing of reasons necessary when the Magistrate discharges the accused person after he has heard all the evidence for the prosecution. It is only when he discharges under sub-section (2) without hearing all the evidence that he is bound to record reasons. But even in the former case the Magistrate should record his reasons, having regard to the fact that the order is not final—Emp. v. Nabi Fakira, 9 Bom L.R. 250.

254. If, when such evidence and examination have Charge to be framed when offence appears

been taken and made, or at any previous stage of the case, the Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under this Chapter, which such Magistrate is competent to try, and which in his opinion could be adequately punished by him, he shall frame in writing a charge against the accused.

"Evidence and examination"—It is not necessary for a Magistrate to examine more witnesses than are sufficient to convince him of the truth of the charge, and with that view he can put questions to the accused. The answers given to such questions will have a great effect upon the question as to the witnesses to be examined for the prosecution. And if on questions put to the accused, answers which leave no doubt as to the commission of the offence are elicited, the Magistrate may frame a charge and call upon the accused to plead—Anonymous, 3 M.H.C.R. App. 2

829. Charge when to be framed.—It is not necessary that the Magistrate should wait till the whole of the evidence for the prosecution has been taken. Cf. the words "or at any previous stage", the moment the stage is reached when there is ground for presuming that the accused person has committed an offence, the examination of the accused should be taken up and the charge sheet drawn up; and the remaining witnesses for the prosecution should be examined—Mulua v. Sheoraj, 8 A.L.J. 707, 12 Cr.L.J. 471

Charge to be framed when offence appears proved—It is only when the prosecution has proved all the facts necessary to constitute has been a manifest error or miscarriage of justice—Emp v. Chinn Kaliappa, 29 Mad. 126 (F.B.). An order of discharge passed under this section cannot be set aside and prosecution started afresh, unless there are new materials before the Magistrate which were not before him formerly, and unless upon those materials there is a probability of the conviction of the accused persons—Biso Ram v. Emp., 23 Cr.L.J. 236 (Pat.)

If an order of discharge is passed by a Presidency Magistrate, the High Court can interfere under sec. 439 of this Code (and not merely under sec. 15 of the Charter Act) and direct a further inquiry—Malik Protap v. Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal 994. See this case and other cases cited in Note 682 under sec. 203.

Power of District Magistrate:—Where an accused person has been discharged under this section, the District Magistrate can himself hold a further inquiry or can direct such inquiry to be held by a Subordinate Magistrate (sec. 436)—Parbhu Lal v. Janki, 18 Cr.L.J. 706 (All.), Q. E. v. Chotu, 9 All. 52; Q. E. v. Balasinnathambal, 14 Mad. 334; Narayana-swami v. Emp., 32 Mad 220; Hari Singh v. Danesh, 20 W.R 46; Kistoram v. Anis, 20 W.R. 47.

828. Sub-section (2):—When a Magistrate is reasonably convinced, on what has been already deposed, that a criminal charge cannot be sustained, he is relieved from the necessity of going on with the trial and can discharge the accused—Dhanjibhai v. Pyarji, Ratanlal 201; Navanna v. Suresetti, 9 M.L.T. 302. The Magistrate can discharge the accused even before the date fixed for hearing, if upon the materials then before him he is satisfied that the offence could not have been committed—Watson v. Metcalfe, 25 Cr.L.J. 696 (Pat.). A Magistrate has power to discharge an accused, under sub-sec (2), even if no witnesses are examined under sec. 252—Kunj Behari v. Emp., 24 A.L.J. 512, 27 Cr.L.J. 541 (542). The Magistrate can discharge the accused before all the complainant's witnesses have been examined—Kashinatha v. Shanmugam, 52 Mad 987, 31 Cr.L.J. 275 (277). The word 'groundless' in this sub-section is not capable of any precise definition. The amount of evidence which would enable a Magistrate to say that a particular charge is groundless is so entirely dependent on circumstances that no general rule or direction is likely to be of any use, except that the Magistrate is required to arrive at his conclusion judiciously and not capriciously. If acting judicially a Magistrate has come to the conclusion that the charge must fail either because the allegations are false or because they disclose a dispute of a civil nature distorted into a criminal case, or for any other reason, then there is nothing to prevent the Magistrate from discharging the accused before all the prosecution witnesses have been examined—Kashinatha v. Shanmugam, supra. But where a complaint prima facie discloses an offence, a Magistrate can hold the charge to be groundless and discharge the accused under sub-section (2), only when he has at least ascertained from the complainant the nature of the evidence his witnesses are going to give; and he cannot refuse to examine all the witnesses cited by the complainant and discharge the accused, without ascertaining from the complainant the nature of the evidence the remaining witnesses are which the allegation in a positive form is not justified by the materials before the Court—Sant Singh v. Emp., 1889 P.R. 26.

Effect of framing charge :—Proceedings before a Magistrate in a warrant case under this chapter are only an inquiry until a charge is framed, and on a charge being framed, become a trial—Sriramulu v. Nalan Krishna Rao, 38 Mad. 585; Manna v. Emp., 9 N L R. 42, 14 Cr L J. 230 (231).

When a Magistrate frames a charge under this section, he indicates thereby that a prima facie case exists against the accused, and he cannot acquit the accused or dismiss the case without hearing the prosecution and the defence evidence; he is bound to proceed with the case—Bellow v. Parker, 7 C.W.N. 521

But the mere fact that a charge has been framed against the accused does not justify the view that the Magistrate is bound to convict the accused. If after carefully considering all the evidence adduced in the case he comes to the conclusion that the guilt of the accused has not been satisfactorily established, he is bound to acquit him under sec 258 although he may have framed a charge against him in the first instance—Damodar v. Juharsingh, 26 Cr L J 1348 (Nag)

Omission to frame charge —It is imperative on the Magistrate to frame a charge, and an omission to do so vitiates the trial—Md. Rafique v. K. E., 43 C L J. 100 The Allahabad High Court holds that an omission to frame a charge according to this section would not invalidate an order of acquittal nor would render the acquittal equivalent to a discharge—Emp v. Gurdu, 3 All. 129.

255. (1) The charge shall then be read and explained to the accused, and he shall be asked whether he is guilty or has any defence to make.

(2) If the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate shall record the plea, and may in his discretion convict him thereon.

831. Security cases :—Sec. 117 lays down that proceedings under sec 110 shall be conducted as nearly as possible in the manner of conducting trials of warrant cases, except that no charge need be framed. Therefore, secs. 254 and 255 apply to an enquiry under sec 110 except in so far as the framing of the charge and the reading of it to the accused is concerned; in other words, at any stage of the inquiry the Magistrate, if he is prima facie satisfied that there is a case against the accused, may ask him whether he pleads guilty or whether he has any defence to make—Tirlok v. Emp., 50 All 71, 25 A L J 742, 743, 744, 792.

'Explained' .—The charge must be read out and explained to the accused, and the record must show that the Magistrate has done so. Where all that is found on the record is only a narrative of what occurred and of the statements made by the accused, it cannot be inferred from the record that the charge has been explained to the accused.

accused as required by this section—Emp v. Gopal Dhanuk, 7 Cal. 96. The charge should be so explained to the accused that the Magistrate is sure that the accused has understood the nature of it thoroughly, and it is then that his plea should be received—Emp. v. Vaimbilec, 5 Cal. 826. If there are any aggravating circumstances of the offence, those circumstances should be set forth in the charge, so that the accused person may know what it is to which he pleads guilty and the full effect of such plea, or in case he pleads not guilty, he may know what material facts he is called upon to rebut—Reg. v. Mukta, Ratanlal 55.

Where the charge was not explained to the accused, the High Court set aside the conviction and ordered a new trial—Aiyavu v. Q. E. 9 Mad 61.

832. Plea : An admission which does not admit all the elements of a charge is not a plea of 'guilty' to a charge. Therefore, where, on a charge of murder, the prisoner pleaded that he struck his wife with a dao but he did not intend to kill her, it was held that the acknowledgment could not be treated as a plea of guilty, since the intention to murder was denied—Q v. Sonaula, 25 W.R. 23.

Where certain facts are stated in the charge, and also an offence punishable under a particular section, but the facts mentioned in the charge do not disclose an offence under the section quoted, the plea of the accused cannot amount to an admission of guilt under that section. An accused person does not plead to a section of a criminal statute. He pleads guilty or not guilty to the facts alleged in the charge, and a plea of guilty amounts only to an admission that he occupied the position as stated in the charge and committed the acts therein specified; but unless the facts averred in the charge amount in law to an offence under a particular section, a plea of guilty cannot amount to an admission of guilt under that section—Basant v. Emp. 7 Lah. 359, 27 Cr.L.J. 907.

When an accused person does not formally plead guilty, the fact that he throws himself at the mercy of the Court should not prejudice him—Dy. Leg. Rem v. Upendra, 12 C.W.N. 140.

Plea of Pleader—Where the accused is present in Court, his pleader cannot be called upon to plead under this section on behalf of his client, and it is improper for a Magistrate to act upon such plea, though made in the presence and hearing of the accused. It would be more regular in form for the Magistrate to call upon the accused to say with his own lips whether he denies the truth of the complaint—Emp v. Surung, 6 Bom.L.R. 861, 1 Cr.L.J. 939. But when the accused has been permitted under sec. 205 to appear by a pleader, the latter may perform all acts which devolve upon the accused in the course of the trial, and he can plead guilty or not guilty under this section—Crown v. Jamal, 6 S.L.R. 206, 14 Cr.L.J. 272; Dorabshah v. Emp., 50 Bom. 250, 27 Cr.L.J. 410.

Record of plea :—If the plea is not recorded, the conviction is liable to be set aside—Emp v. Gopal Dhanuk, 7 Cal. 96. The Court must record the actual words used; a narrative of what occurred and of the statements made by the prisoners is not a proper record of the plea—

Gopal Dhanuk, 7 Cal. 96. If the statement of the accused is in a foreign language, the Magistrate need not record it in the language in which it is made, but the record must be in the language in which it is interpreted—Emp. v. Vaimbilee, 5 Cal. 826

833. Conviction on plea—If after a charge is framed the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate can refuse to convict on the plea, and can proceed to take further evidence—Emp v Rash Behari, 25 C. W.N. 212 In a warrant case, although an accused can be convicted on his own plea of guilty, still a conviction should not be made unless there is evidence on the record to support the conviction It is highly improper in a warrant case to convict an accused on his own admission alone without recording any evidence for the prosecution and without framing a formal charge—Emp v Chinnappayan, 29 Mad 372.

Again, in order that a conviction on a plea of the accused may be sustained, it is necessary that the accused should admit in his plea all the elements of the offence If he admits that he killed the deceased but he denies that he had any intention of killing her, the Magistrate cannot convict him on such statement Such a confession does not amount to a plea of guilty—Q v Sonaulah, 25 W R 23 If the accused pleads guilty to one offence, the Judge cannot convict the accused for another offence; e.g if the accused pleads guilty to a charge of murder, he cannot be convicted for culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Q. v. Gobadur, 13 W.R 55 (56)

If the accused person admits some or all of the facts alleged by the prosecution, but pleads "not guilty," the proper procedure for the Magistrate is to proceed to trial according to law, and not to convict him on the admission without taking evidence—Emp v Sonabhai, 9 Bom.L R 1346, 6 Cr.L.J 424

834. This new section has been added by section 71 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

"We think that this addition is necessary after section 255, to provide for a case where previous conviction is also charged Definite provision is made for this in the case of trials before a Court of Session (see section 310), but it does not seem to have been provided for by the Code in t case of a Magistrate's trial."—Report of the Select Committee of 1
 "It was suggested to us that the new section 255A is unnecessary on does not deprive him of the right given him by this section of recalling and cross-examining those witnesses after the charge is framed—Zamunia v. Ram Tahal, 27 Cal. 370; Inder v. Emp., 37 Cal. 236; Nilkanta v. Q. E., 20 Cal. 469, Q. E. v. Sagal, 21 Cal. 642; Ngā Pya v. Emp., 14 Cr.L.J. 388, 6 Bur.L.T. 67; Q. E. v. Nasarvanji, 2 Bom L.R. 542. Even when the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined by the accused before frame of charge on the understanding that the accused would not require those witnesses to be recalled for further cross-examination after the charge, still the Magistrate cannot refuse the application of the accused to recall and cross-examine those witnesses after the charge is framed—Kokil Ghose v. Kasimuddi, 6 C.W.N. 424. Where the witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examined by the pleader for the accused before the frame of charge, and the pleader then stated that he no longer required their attendance, but after the framing of the charge the pleader for the accused wanted to further cross-examine the witnesses, held that under sec 256, the accused was entitled to the same—Ramchandra v. Emp., 5 Pat 110, 7 P.L.T. 304, 27 Cr.L.J. 499.

837. According to the plain language of this section, the accused has a right to have the witnesses for the prosecution recalled and cross-examined after frame of charge—Gopal Sheikh v. Emp., 7 C.L.J. 240, Talluri Venkayya v. Q., 4 Mad 130; Titu Sahu v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 852, Mahan Singh v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 371, 1923 P.W.R. 9; and it is not necessary for the accused to show that he has a reasonable ground for exercising the right of recalling and cross-examining the prosecution witnesses. He is, as a matter of right, entitled to cross-examine—Q v. Amiruddin, 21 W.R. 29; In re Nobin Chand, 25 W.R. 32, and the Magistrate is not justified in refusing to recall the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, specially when the accused had not cross-examined any witnesses before the frame of charge—Ramyad v. K. E., 5 P.L.J. 94, 21 Cr.L.J. 814. Where there are several accused, each of the accused should be given an opportunity to cross-examine. A Magistrate cannot refuse to allow the further cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution by one of the accused, on the ground that they had been cross-examined by another—Lala Ram v. Emp., 11 C.W.N. exl.

The right referred to in this section is absolute and unqualified and is intended to apply only where the witnesses are still before the Court and before they have been discharged from further attendance. Under sec 257, however, there is a discretion vested in the Court to resubmit the prosecution witnesses already examined; and where a witness has been allowed to depart under sec 256 on the representation of the accused that he is not required, any further application to re-examine him must be deemed to fall under sec 257—In re Lockley, 43 Mad 411, 38 M.L.J. 209, 21 Cr.L.J. 297.

Magistrate's duty to ask:—Under this section, it is the duty of the Magistrate, after a charge has been framed, to require the accused to state whether he desires to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses already examined—Zamunia v. Ram Tahal, 27 Cal. 370. Omission on the part of the Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wishes to recall any witnesses for cross-examination will invalidate the conviction, and the case will be retried from the point of framing the charge—Moola v. Crown, 1914 P.R. 11, 16 Cr.L.J. 146; Mahan Singh v Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 371, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 215 Omission to so ask the accused, and the rejection of the accused's application on the ground that it was too late, would prejudice the accused in his trial—Q E v Henry Kaps, 1902 A.W.N. 5. In Munian Chetty v Emp., 16 Cr.L.J. 5 (Mad.) however it has been held that such omission is a mere irregularity and the conviction is not thereby vitiated. If the case is tried summarily, the omission on the part of the Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wishes to recall the witnesses for further cross-examination, does not vitiate the trial—Umaji v Emp., 28 Bom L R 95, 27 Cr.L.J. 431.

Adjournment —A Magistrate cannot insist on the prosecution witnesses being cross-examined by the accused immediately, whether they wish it or not—Tirlok v Emp., 50 All 71, 25 A L J 749, 28 Cr L.J. 792. An accused, against whom a charge was framed without any previous intimation, when required by the Magistrate to state whether he wished to cross-examine, said that he had no question to put at present but that time should be granted him for engaging a pleader and for cross-examining witnesses, it was held that the application for adjournment was reasonable under the circumstances, and ought to be granted—Arumugam v Emp., (1911) 2 M.W.N. 192, 12 Cr L.J. 548. Where the charges are complicated and the accused are ignorant persons, they should not be called upon to cross-examine the witnesses immediately after the charge is framed, but a reasonable time should be given to them to get proper legal advice and to engage a pleader before they are called upon to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses—In re Rangasami, 18 Cr L.J. 786 This is now made clear by the addition of the words "at the commencement of the next hearing of the case." The provision that the accused should be asked whether they wish to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on a date subsequent to that upon which they are called upon to plead to the charge, is a new proposition deliberately introduced into the Code by the Amendment Act of 1923, and the only possible reason for the change is that the Legislature has intended to give the accused persons against whom charges are framed an interval of time to think out the lines of their defence before they are called upon to inform the Court how they intend to proceed. Omission of this new procedure is an irregularity which vitiates the whole trial—Phuman v Emp., 7 Lah L.J. 114, 26 P L R 460, 26 Cr L.J. 1158 The words inserted by the Amending Act of 1923 indicate the intention of the Legislature that sufficient time should be given to the accused to consider whether he wishes to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses after the framing of the charge, and it is only in special cases that the Magistrate can require him to state forthwith if he so wishes—Ram Chandra v K. E., 5 Pat 110, 27 Cr.L.J. 499 Where the accused stated that his pleader was absent as he was engaged in another Court, and the accused applied to the Magistrate to adjourn the hearing, but the Magistrate refused the application on the ground that it was his usual practice to proceed forthwith with the cross-examination, held that it was not a cogent or adequate reason for not adjourning the hearing, and the Magistrate committed an illegality which vitiated the trial—Emp. v. Lakshman, 53 Bom. 578, 1929 Cr. C. 130 (132)

Recording reasons—Where the accused is represented by a pleader from the outset, he may generally be asked under this section if he wishes to cross-examine forthwith, for the simple reason that the accused will not be prejudiced, and it is convenient to arrange a date for the subsequent attendance of the prosecution witnesses before they disperse. If, however, he is asked forthwith, with a view to recalling the witnesses forthwith, fuller reasons will be required, because it is usually convenient for the accused to have an interval in which to study the deposition already on record, and discover material for the cross-examination of the witnesses. If an accused is not represented by a pleader, reason must be shown for not postponing the question to the next hearing by which time he can have consulted a pleader. Where the accused who was not represented by a pleader was required forthwith to state if he wished to cross-examine, and the Magistrate did not record his reasons, held that this was an illegality vitiating the trial, and not a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—In re Raju Achari, 50 Mad. 740, 51 M.L.J. 687, 28 Cr.L.J. 12. The Allahabad High Court, however, holds that the failure of the Magistrate to follow these provisions strictly amounts to no more than irregularity in procedure, and where the irregularity does not result in a failure of justice, it does not affect the legality of the trial. Thus, the witnesses for the prosecution were examined on the 10th May, and cross-examined on the same day, and the accused also made their statements on the same day. On that day the accused were not represented by counsel. The Magistrate did not record any reasons for requiring the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on the same day. There was a subsequent hearing on 19th May, on which the accused were represented by counsel, but no application was made on behalf of the accused to resummon the prosecution witness. Held that this showed that the accused had not been prejudiced by having being required by the Magistrate to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on the 10th May; consequently the trial was not illegal, although the Magistrate did not record reasons—Chhajju v. Emp., 49 All. 316, 25 A.L.J. 111, 28 Cr.L.J. 229. The Lahore High Court is also of opinion that although this section (as amended in 1923) lays down that the Magistrate shall record his reasons for requiring the accused to state forthwith whether they wish to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, still the omission to record the reasons does not render the trial illegal, if it has not caused any prejudice to the accused—Ghasiti v. K. E., 6 Lah. 554, 27 Cr.L.J. 408.

If summons-case tried as a warrant case :—Where an inquiry commenced as a warrant case and the accused curtailed their cross-examination of prosecution witnesses under the impression that they would have a further opportunity of cross-examining them, but no offence triable as a warrant case having been disclosed, the Magistrate closed the case and convicted the accused as in a summons case, it was held that it was the duty of the Magistrate to allow the accused an opportunity of completing the cross-examination before proceeding with the case—In re Appavu, 16 Cr.L.J. 250 (Mad.).

Similarly, where a Magistrate while trying a summons case and a warrant case in one trial under the warrant-case procedure, dismissed the complaint in respect of the warrant case and proceeded with the complaint in respect of the summons case, and, on being requested by the accused to recall the prosecution-witnesses for their further cross-examination, refused to do so, it was held that the refusal was illegal and the accused must certainly have been prejudiced by the same. The privilege conferred by this section is a substantial one, and when denied it is for the prosecution to shew that there was no prejudice—In re Sobhanadri, 39 Mad. 503, 16 Cr L.J. 540.

838. Time of cross-examination:—If an accused person desires to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution, the time at which he should express such desire is when the charge is read over to him—Faiz Ali v Koromdi, 7 Cal 28 See also Note 837 supra. The accused should cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution before he enters upon his defence. But of course it is open to the Magistrate to allow cross-examination at any subsequent stage, before the case has been closed—Inder v. Emp, 37 Cal 236 The accused may, after the charge has been drawn up and the witnesses for the defence have been examined, recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution—Venkayya v. Q, 4 Mad. 130 See sec 257. But although it is in the discretion of the Magistrate to recall the witnesses at a subsequent stage of the case, the accused has no right to insist upon the witnesses being recalled—Faiz Ali v Koromdi, 7 Cal, 28

'Any remaining witnesses':—The words "any remaining witnesses" do not refer only to those witnesses who have been named by the complainant under sec. 252 (2); these words are wide enough to include any witness who according to the prosecution is able to support its case though he has not been summoned, provided he is not sprung upon the defence all on a sudden and sufficient opportunity is given to the accused to prepare for the cross-examination of such witness—Emp. v. Percy Burn, 11 Bom.L R. 1153, 10 Cr.L J. 530.

839. Discharge of prosecution witnesses:—A Magistrate ought not of his own motion to discharge the witnesses for the prosecution until the accused person has exercised or waived his right of cross-examination—Q. v. Lall Mahomed, 6 N.W.P 284, Q. v. Ram Kishan, 25 W.R. 48 Witnesses for the prosecution should not be discharged until the Court has ascertained whether their cross-examination after the charge will be desired—Bridhuchand v Lakhmichand, 8 N.L.R. 65, 13 Cr.L.J 554. Where it becomes necessary to adjourn the hearing, the Magistrate should inquire of the accused if he desires to exercise his right of recalling the witnesses for the prosecution or consents to the discharge of all or any of them. If the accused consents to their discharge, he is not entitled to have them re-summoned as a matter of right—Lall Mahomed, 6 N.W.P.

Adjournment for defence :—According to the provisions of secs. 256 and 257, the accused is entitled as a matter of right to ask for an adjournment, after a charge has been framed against him, to enable him to adduce evidence in support of his defence—Sh. Emlaz Ali v Jagat, 1 C.W.N 313. Where a trial is commenced as a warrant case, it should be concluded by the procedure laid down in this chapter for warrant cases; and the Magistrate acts illegally in concluding the trial as a summons case and convicting the accused, without giving him an opportunity to have his witnesses produced by giving him the adjournment asked for—Munshi Teli v. Emp, 2 P.L.T. 482.

842. Subsection (2)—Written Statement :—Where certain legal practitioners were convicted under sec 17 (1) of the Cr Law Amendment Act, XIV of 1908, for being members of an Association called the "National Volunteers' Association" which was declared by the Government to be an unlawful association under sec 15 (2) (b) of that Act, and were removed or suspended from practice under clause 8 of the Letters Patent, whereupon one of them proposed to file a written statement, held that the proceedings under clause 8 of the Letters Patent were not of a criminal nature, in this sense that the rules of procedure of a criminal trial such as the filing of a written statement under sec 256 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code were not applicable to them, and the respondent's written statement could not therefore be received—In re Abdul Rashid, 4 Lah 271.

A written statement filed by the accused cannot take the place of the examination of the accused which is imperative under sec. 342. See notes under that section under heading "Written statement."

257. (1) If the accused, after he has entered upon his defence, applies to the Magistrate to issue any process for compelling the attendance of any witness for the purpose of examination or cross-examination, or the production of any document or other thing, the Magistrate shall issue such process unless he considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Such ground shall be recorded by him in writing :

Provided that when the accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witness after the charge is framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under this section unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(2) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial be deposited in Court.

The procedure of this section applies to summary trials, and the accused is entitled to have processes issued for compelling the attendance of prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, when he is called upon to enter on his defence, if they have not been cross-examined before—Nepal v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 271 (Cal).

843. Issue of process :—The language of this section is imperative. A Magistrate has no discretion to refuse to issue process to compel the attendance of any witness unless he considers that the application should be refused on the ground specified in this section—Emp v. Purshottam, 26 Bom. 418. The Magistrate must summon every witness named in the list. He cannot arbitrarily limit the number of witnesses to be examined—Purshottam, 26 Bom. 418. Thus, where the accused put in a list of 72 witnesses, and the Magistrate ordered him to cite only 12 of them, it was held that the Magistrate's order was arbitrary and illegal—Narayana v. Emp., 31 Mad. 131.

Once the Magistrate has issued summons, he is bound to assist the accused in enforcing the attendance of the witnesses. If the witnesses do not obey the summons, the Magistrate cannot refuse to issue a second summons—Q. E v. Dhananjay, 10 Cal. 931; Gohar v. Emp., 1884 P R 28, Sohara v. Emp., 1922 P.L.R. 5, 22 Cr.L.J. 501; Md. Din v. Emp., 1922 P.L.R. 6, 22 Cr.L.J. 497; Bhomar v. Digambar, 6 C.W.N. 548; Q. E v. Shamsherka, Ratanlal 594; Emp. v. Ruknuddin, 4 All 53; Muhammad Din v. Emp., 9 C.W.N. cccxix; Amrit mondal v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 490. It is the duty of the Court to see that the summonses or warrants are duly executed. If the witnesses do not attend, the accused can insist upon the Court to issue further process. Where the witnesses cited by the accused failed to attend, and it appeared that the summonses were not duly executed, but the Magistrate proceeded to give judgment remarking that it was the business of the accused to take suitable steps for bringing his witnesses before the Court, held, that the conviction of the accused was illegal and must be set aside—Byoy v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 945. When once a Court has issued a summons to a witness under this section and the witness fails to appear, it is not justified in dispensing with the evidence of the witness on the ground that at the most he would merely support the accused in his statement—Sohara v. Emp., 1922 P L R 5, 22 Cr L.J. 501.

844. Refusal to summon prosecution witnesses :—An absolute right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses is not conferred by this section. The Magistrate can refuse to allow the accused to recall such witnesses for cross-examination, if he considers that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. But it lies upon the party who thinks himself aggrieved to show that the ends of justice have been frustrated in consequence of the refusal to recall the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination—Nilkanta v. Q. E., 20 Cal. 469.

Where the accused was given an opportunity under section 256 to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, but he refused to do so, leaving no option for the Magistrate but to close the case, and after the case was closed the accused applied to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, held that the accused's attitude was deliberately designed to harass the Court and that the Magistrate would be justified in refusing the application—Vyasa Rao v. K. E., 21 M L J 283 (F B) Where the witnesses for the prosecution were subjected to a very lengthy and strict cross-examination before the framing of charge, the Magistrate was right in declining to re-summon those witnesses, if he was of opinion that the application to re-summon the witnesses was made for vexation etc.—Q. E. v. Govind, Ratanlal 930; Nilkanta v Q. E., 20 Cal 469, Ramsakal v Emp., 26 Cr.L J 1627 (Cal.), but unless the Magistrate considers that the application to re-summon the witnesses is made for the purpose of vexation or delay, the accused is entitled to have the prosecution witnesses summoned for cross-examination—Monmohan v. Bankim, 51 Cal 1044 (1047), 26 Cr.L.J 384, and the Magistrate cannot refuse to summon the witnesses merely on the ground that they were fully cross-examined before—Sreenath v Emp., 4 C W N 241, Mauli v Naurangi. 4 C W N 351

The proviso to sub-section (1) is to the effect that when an accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witness after the charge has been framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under this section, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the ends of justice The mere fact that it might have been possible from a cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses to have extracted from them something which might have been of advantage to the accused is not a sufficient ground to enable the Magistrate to recall those witnesses; it must appear that there was to be obtained from the witnesses sought to be cross-examined something which would have materially affected the result of the trial—Ajo Mian v K. E., 6 P L.T. 626, 27 Cr L J 353.

The mere fact that the accused's lawyers had previously declined to cross-examine such witnesses or the mere fact that such witnesses were not cross-examined before does not compel a Court to summon them; for to do so would be to render the proviso meaningless—Ajo Mian, supra.

"After he has entered upon his defence"—It is only after the accused has entered upon his defence that the Magistrate can in his discretion refuse the application of the accused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice—Zamunia v Ram Tahal 27 Cal 370

845. Examination of defence witnesses :—A Magistrate cannot refuse to examine a defence witness who is present in Court, if he is requested by the accused to do so—Emp. v. Nagar, 4 Bom L.R. 461. Though it is competent for a Magistrate to decline to summon witnesses for the defence under this section, it is not competent for him to refuse to examine the defence witnesses, on the ground that their evidence is unnecessary—Emp. v. Nanbasappa, 14 Bom.L.R. 360 Where in a trial involving a capital charge the accused is denied his right to have his defence witnesses examined in Court, it must be held that it has resulted in a failure of justice, and the conviction ought to be set aside and a retrial ordered—Ayarvali v. Emp., 45 M.L.J. 305, 24 Cr.L.J. 840 If a witness is unable to attend the Court owing to illness, and he appears to be an important witness, the Magistrate should ascertain whether it will be possible for that witness to attend the Court within a reasonable time, and if not, then his evidence should be taken on commission—Jamuna Singh v. K. E., 3 Pat 591 (594), 25 Cr.L.J. 1255. A Magistrate cannot refuse to summon witnesses cited by the accused on the ground that they are implicated in the charge—Ram Sahie v. Sunker, 15 W.R 7; or on the ground that the accused is unable or refuses to pay the costs of the witnesses—Debi Singh v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 831 (Pat.); or on the ground that the Magistrate is of opinion that they will not be able to give any reliable evidence one way or the other (without giving any reason for holding such opinion)—Arumugam v. Emp., 12 Cr.L.J. 548, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 182, or on the ground that they are living at a great distance—Ayarvali v. Emp., 45 M.L.J. 305, 24 Cr.L.J. 840 The Magistrate cannot refuse process to a defence witness merely because he thinks that no useful purpose will be served by summoning that witness—Ganpat v. Emp., 24 Cr L.J. 686 (Lab) Where after a case on both sides having been closed, the Magistrate summoned a witness to give evidence, whereupon the accused prayed to have certain witnesses summoned to rebut the evidence of the Court witness, held that the Magistrate was bound to summon such witnesses, and could not refuse to do so on the ground that the accused had stated at the close of his case that he did not wish to examine any more witnesses—Deela Mahton v. Sheo Dayal, 6 Cal 714.

If a Magistrate rejects the application for summoning the witnesses, he should specify his reasons for such refusal. If he fails to record the reasons, the conviction and sentence will be set aside—Sreenath v. Emp., 4 C.W.N 241, Manmohan v. Bankim, 51 Cal 1044 (1047), In re Sat Narain, 3 All. 392, Debi Singh v. Emp., 24 Cr L.J. 831 (Pat); Abdul Jabbar v. Emp., 25 Cr L.J 310, A.I.R 1925 Cal 80

It is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section, if the Magistrate states facts which led him irresistibly to the conclusion that the application was for no other purpose than that of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice, although he does not say expressly that the application was made for that purpose—Wahid Ali v. Emp., 11 C.W.N. 789 Where a Magistrate rejects an application after recording on it "too late", this is a sufficient compliance with this section—Kudrutulla v. Emp., 39 Cal. 781, 13 Cr.L.J 218

846. Cross-examination :—The accused in a warrant case has three opportunities of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses; once, under sec. 252, before the charge is framed; secondly, under section 256 after the charge is framed; and under section 257, the accused is given the third opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses, unless the Magistrate decides that the application for cross-examination is vexatious—Ramyad v. K. E., 5 P.L.J. 94, 21 Cr.L.J. 814; Varisai v. K. E., 46 Mad. 449 (463).

Where on a refusal by the Magistrate to resubmit the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, the accused cited those witnesses on their own behalf as defence witnesses, and then proceeded to cross-examine them, but were disallowed by the Magistrate, it was held that the mere fact that the accused had been compelled to treat the witnesses for the prosecution as their own witnesses did not change their character, and that although the accused were compelled to obtain their attendance as witnesses for the defence, they were really prosecution witnesses and summoned under sec 257 for the purpose of cross-examination, and the Magistrate was wrong in refusing to allow their cross-examination—Sheo Prakash v. Rawlins, 28 Cal. 594, Moula Bux v. Derasatulla, 1 C.W.N. 19, Venku Reddi v. Emp., 1922 M.W.N. 120, 23 Cr.L.J. 192.

Where an accused first obtained process for the attendance of a witness, but subsequently declined to examine him, whereupon the Court examined him as a Court-witness under section 540, it was held that the witness could not be treated as a defence witness, and that the accused had the right to cross-examine him—Mohendra v. Emp., 29 Cal. 387.

An accused may be allowed to cross-examine the witnesses called by his co-accused, when the case of the co-accused is adverse to his case—Ram Chand v. Hanif, 21 Cal. 401.

847. Inspection of documents :—In a warrant case the accused has no right to call for the production of documents in the possession of the prosecution and to inspect the same, until after a charge has been framed and read out to him under secs 254 and 255. This right is given by section 257, after a charge has been framed. But the Magistrate should satisfy himself that the documents called for have some bearing on the issues in the case and are relevant, before granting a summons for their production—Tahilram v. Pitamberdas, 8 S.L.R. 267, 16 Cr.L.J. 245.

848. Expenses :—It has been held in some cases that the inability or even refusal to pay the expenses would not be an adequate ground for refusing to summon the defence witnesses—Debi Singh v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 831 (Pat), Qadu v. Q. E., 1898 P.R. 7. But the Lahore High Court recently holds that if the rule laid down in 1898 P.R. 7 is to be literally followed, then sub-section (2) of this section would become an entirely dead letter, because one can hardly conceive of a case where an accused person would willingly deposit the expenses of his witnesses if he knew that he had only to express his unwillingness to entitle him to get his witnesses summoned at the expenses of the Government. Sub-section (2) fully empowers a Magistrate to order that the reasonable expenses of a witness shall be deposited by the accused before the witness is summoned. But the Magistrate should only summon so many witnesses at one hearing as he thinks he will be able to examine on that hearing, to save the expense of parties—Ganpat v. Crown, 24 Cr.L.J. 686 (Lah.).

If the accused, after the framing of the charge, applies for recall of prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination, it is he who should pay the expenses and not the complainant. The Magistrate should call those witnesses either at the expense of the Government or at the expense of the accused, but he cannot demand the expenses from the complainant—Faiz Mohd. v. Nabu, 29 Cr.L.J. 20 (Lah.); Abdul Majid v. Mehr, 30 Cr.L.J. 664 (Lah.).

As regards the expenses of causing the attendance of the accused's witnesses the general rule in warrant cases is that such costs are usually borne by the Crown (and not by the accused). Any departure from the usual rule must be supported by adequate and cogent reasons—Habib v. Mehdi Husain, 29 Cr.L.J. 459 (460) (Lah.); Sayed Habib v. Emp., 30 Cr.L.J. 814.

Although the Magistrate can under this sub-section require the accused to deposit in Court the expenses for the attendance of his witnesses, still if the Magistrate has once allowed the witnesses to be summoned without demanding expenses from the accused, and if by any chance the witnesses summoned for a particular date have not been examined on that date, the Magistrate has no power afterwards to say that on the next date of hearing the witnesses shall not be summoned except on payment of their expenses by the accused—Kishan Lal v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 711 (Lah.), 63 I.C. 871 (872).

A Court ordering a party to deposit the travelling allowance of a witness should state the amount of the travelling allowance to be deposited—Gourishankar v. Collector, 6 P.L.T. 215, 26 Cr.L.J. 965.

258. (1) If in any case under this Chapter in which a charge has been framed the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal.

(2) Where in any case under this Chapter the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 349 or section 562, he shall, if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him according to law.

Change :—Sub-section (2) has been amended by section 73 of the Cr.P.C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. A similar amendment has been made in sec. 245 (2) and sec. 306 (2).

849. Acquittal :—An order of acquittal can be recorded only after a charge has been drawn up, and not before—Q. v. Jupit, 22 W.R. 25; Emp. v. Ranchhod, 37 Bom. 369. But an omission to prepare a charge does not invalidate an order of acquittal—Hanuman v. Ahmad Ali, 1881 A.W.N. 142. If, however, a warrant case is tried as a summons case, and no charge is framed, the acquittal amounts to a discharge under sec. 253—Emp. v. Isha, 1886 A.W.N. 280.

After a charge is framed, the Magistrate can pass no other order except that of acquittal or conviction. He cannot pass an order of discharge. Even if he discharges the accused, the discharge would amount to an acquittal—Taha v. Hirba, 1893 P.R. 29, Sreeramah v. Veerasalingam, 38 Mad 585, Bishambar v. Emp. 1 O.W.N. 705. So also, an order of dismissal of complaint would amount to an acquittal—In re Jadubar, 5 C.L.R. 359.

Where a Magistrate passes an order of acquittal under this section, the Sessions Judge cannot treat it as an order of discharge and direct a commitment of the accused under sec. 436 (now 437)—Apparaju v. Emp., 43 Mad. 330, 21 Cr.L.J. 91.

An order of acquittal can be passed in a warrant case only where after the frame of a charge the Magistrate is of opinion that the evidence is insufficient to justify a conviction. It is not competent to a Magistrate to enter an order of acquittal in a warrant case on a private complainant's offering to withdraw from the prosecution in a non-compoundable case—Emp v Ranchhod, 37 Bom 369, 14 Cr.L.J. 77. The acquittal must be based on the finding that the accused is not guilty. The Magistrate cannot acquit the accused merely because the complainant is absent. Where a charge has been framed against the accused and the latter have entered upon their defence and produced some defence witnesses, they cannot be acquitted on account of the absence of the complainant—Ram Baksh v. Jairam, 27 O.C. 316, 26 Cr.L.J. 264, 1 O.W.N. 613. But where after a charge is framed, the complainant is absent, and it is obvious that the complainant has no desire to proceed with his complaint, the Magistrate should acquit the accused, and not merely discharge him—Emp. v. Godhan, 1 O.W.N. 586, 26 Cr.L.J. 400. See also Note 852 under sec. 259.

850. Conviction:—An accused must be convicted on the strength of the case made against him, and not in consequence of his inability to put forward proof of his innocence—Reg. v. Jenkoo, Ratanlal 5. Although a Magistrate has thought fit to frame a charge, he is not bound to convict the accused person merely because the latter does not produce any rebutting evidence. If he feels reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, he is bound to acquit him—Q. E. v. Chanbasapa, Ratanlal 854.

It is not necessary that the conviction or acquittal should be by the same Magistrate who drew up the charge—Emp v Kudrutulla, 3 Cal. 495.

Sentence.—See notes under sec. 245.

259. When the proceedings have been instituted upon complaint, and upon any day fixed for the hearing of the case the complainant is absent, and the offence may be lawfully compounded, or is not a compoundable offence, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, withstanding anything hereinbefore contained, at

Absence of complainant.

If the accused, after the framing of the charge, applies for recall of prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination, it is he who should pay the expenses and not the complainant. The Magistrate should call those witnesses either at the expense of the Government or at the expense of the accused, but he cannot demand the expenses from the complainant—Faiz Mohd. v. Nabu, 29 Cr.L.J. 20 (Lah.); Abdul Majid v. Mehr, 30 Cr.L.J. 664 (Lah.).

As regards the expenses of causing the attendance of the accused's witnesses the general rule in warrant cases is that such costs are usually borne by the Crown (and not by the accused). Any departure from the usual rule must be supported by adequate and cogent reasons—Habib v. Mehdi Husain, 29 Cr.L.J. 459 (460) (Lah.); Sayed Habib v. Emp., 30 Cr.L.J. 814.

Although the Magistrate can under this sub-section require the accused to deposit in Court the expenses for the attendance of his witnesses, still if the Magistrate has once allowed the witnesses to be summoned without demanding expenses from the accused, and if by any chance the witnesses summoned for a particular date have not been examined on that date, the Magistrate has no power afterwards to say that on the next date of hearing the witnesses shall not be summoned except on payment of their expenses by the accused—Kishan Lal v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 711 (Lah.), 63 I.C. 871 (872).

A Court ordering a party to deposit the travelling allowance of a witness should state the amount of the travelling allowance to be deposited—Gourishankar v. Collector, 6 P.L.T. 215, 26 Cr.L.J. 965.

258. (1) If in any case under this Chapter in which a charge has been framed the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal.

(2) Where in any case under this Chapter the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 349 or section 562, he shall, if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him according to law.

Change :—Sub-section (2) has been amended by section 73 of the Cr.P.C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. A similar amendment has been made in sec. 245 (2) and sec. 306 (2).

849. Acquittal—An order of acquittal can be recorded only after a charge has been drawn up, and not before—Q v. Japit, 22 W.R. 25; Emp. v. Ranchhod, 37 Bom. 369. But an omission to prepare a charge does not invalidate an order of acquittal—Hanuman v. Ahmad Ali, 1881 A.W.N. 142. If, however, a warrant case is tried as a summons case, and no charge is framed, the acquittal amounts to a discharge under sec. 253—Emp. v. Jadu, 1886 A.W.N. 260.

marily, it was held that the Magistrate had acted bona fide in the interests of justice, and the High Court refused to interfere—Q. E. v. Rangamani, 22 Mad 459. But in Gosta Behari v. Balstam, 20 C.W.N. 831, 37 C.L.J. 105, 24 Cr.L.J. 157, it was held that such a change of procedure in the midst of the trial was prejudicial to the accused, and that there should be a retrial.

Power to try summarily.

260. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Code,—

- (a) the District Magistrate,
- (b) any Magistrate of the first class specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government, and
- (c) any Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class and specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government, may, if he or they think fit, try in a summary way all or any of the following offences:—

- (a) offences not punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months;
- (b) offences relating to weights and measures under sections 264, 265 and 266 of the Indian Penal Code;
- (c) hurt, under section 323 of the same Code;
- (d) theft, under sections 379, 380 or 381 of the same Code, where the value of the property stolen does not exceed fifty rupees;
- (e) dishonest misappropriation of property under section 403 of the same Code, where the value of the property misappropriated does not exceed fifty rupees;
- (f) receiving or retaining stolen property under section 411 of the same Code, where value of such property does not exceed fifty rupees;
- (g) assisting in the concealment or receiving of stolen property, under section 411;

- same Code, where the value of such property does not exceed fifty rupees;
- (h) mischief, under section 427 of the same Code;
 - (i) house-trespass, under section 448, and offences under sections 451, 453, 454, 456 and 457 of the same Code;
 - (j) insult with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, under section 504, and criminal intimidation, under section 506, of the same Code;
 - (k) abetment of any of the foregoing offences;
 - (l) an attempt to commit any of the foregoing offences, when such attempt is an offence;
 - (m) offences under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871:

Provided that no case in which a Magistrate exercises the special powers conferred by section 34 shall be tried in a summary way.

(2) When in the course of a summary trial it appears to the Magistrate or Bench that the case is one which is of a character which renders it undesirable that it should be tried summarily, the Magistrate or Bench shall recall any witnesses who may have been examined and proceed to re-hear the case in manner provided by this Code.

856. Magistrates empowered :—The District Magistrate of Bangalore has no power to try European British subjects summarily under this section, as his powers are confined to those conferred on him by the Declarations of the G. G. in Council, and the power to try European British subjects summarily under this section is not included in such powers—In re Jeremiah, 39 Mad. 942, 16 Cr.L.J. 773 Under the present law however all such restrictions have been removed.

Where an Assistant Commissioner of a district who was, before his going to England on furlough, authorised to exercise summary powers in a certain local area, was on his return from furlough posted to another local area as a first class Magistrate, it was held that he had no jurisdiction to exercise summary powers in the latter area—In re Pursooram, 2 Cal. 117. But see sec. 40 as now amended.

Presidency Magistrates :—The provisions of this chapter do not apply to trials before Presidency Magistrates—Q. E. v. Abdul, Ratanlal 539.

Responsibility of Magistrates :—The responsibility thrown on Magistrates entrusted with summary powers is very great, and the responsibility of those who have to entrust them with such powers is equally great. Magistrates who are sufficiently alive to the responsibility entrusted to them will take care that the procedure or the record is not made more summary than what the law has laid down—Q E v Mukundi, 21 All. 189.

857. Offences triable summarily .—Whether an offence is to be tried summarily or not is to be determined by the facts stated in the complaint as well as the sworn testimony of the complainant—Fanindra v. Emp., 36 Cal 67 Chandra Mohan v. K. E., 27 C.W.N 148. The Magistrate is competent to dispose of a case summarily where the facts reported disclose an offence triable summarily, without reference to the particular charge pressed—In re Mewa 6 N.W.P 254, Golap Pandey v. Boddam, 16 Cal. 715, Q E v Vallabh, 1 Bom L.R 683.

Where a person is charged with a graver offence, the Magistrate ought not to cut down the offence to a less serious one at his own will, in order to give himself jurisdiction to try it summarily—Emeral v. Mohammadi, 24 W.R 48, Mewa Lal, 51 All 540, 30 Cr L.J 686. Sheo Bhajan v. Mosawi, 27 Cal 983, Bishu Shaik v. Saber, 29 Cal 409, Ramanund v. Koylash, 11 Cal 236, Chandra Mohan v K E., 27 C.W.N. 148, In re Chunder Seekor 1 C.L.R 434, Ghamman v Emp., 1888 P.R. 5. Thus, a charge of dacoity cannot be treated as one of unlawful assembly for the purpose of trying it summarily—Dwarkanath v. Nalu Das, 21 W.R. 89; see also, Q. E v. Lakshman, Ratanlal 670, Barkat Khan v. Crown, 1907 P.L.R 21, Sharma v. Emp., 6 Bur L.T 137, 14 Cr L.J 462. So also, no Magistrate is entitled to split up an offence into its component parts for the purpose of giving himself summary jurisdiction, thereby depriving the prisoner of his right of appeal—Emp v. Abdool Karim, 4 Cal 18. Where the value of the property stolen exceeded Rs. 50, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to reduce it to Rs. 50, in order to give himself jurisdiction to try it summarily—Q v. Buzleh Ali, 22 W.R. 65

Where neither the complaint nor the evidence adduced in a case of criminal trespass (see 457 I P Code, which is triable summarily) shows the actual offence which the accused intended to commit, and the only finding which could be arrived at is that the accused intended to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment, the conviction of the accused in a summary trial cannot be held to be illegal on the ground that the intention of the accused might have been to commit an offence which cannot be tried summarily—Madhab Chandra v Emp., 53 Cal 738, 27 Cr.L.J. 1295. A Magistrate can try a person summarily for offences under secs 143 and 427 I P C, and the fact that there are major offences suggested against the accused in the complaint does not debar the Magistrate from taking recourse to the summary procedure—Naubat v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 140 (All.).

Joint charge of summary and non-summary offences :—Where an accused person is charged with offences not triable summarily along with offences triable summarily, the Magistrate cannot disregard the former offences, and proceed to try the case summarily—Ramanand v. Koy

11 Cal. 236; Ghamman v. Emp., 1888 P.R. 5 Contra—Q. E. v. Jagjivan, 10 All. 55, where it has been held that the mere fact of the complainant charging the accused with summary offences along with non-summary ones will not oust the summary jurisdiction of the Magistrate.

Where the accused was charged with summary as well as non-summary offences, but the Magistrate tried the accused summarily for the offence triable summarily, and ignored the non-summary offence, held that it would have been preferable had the Magistrate proceeded regularly and tried the accused upon both the charges; but as there was no miscarriage of justice in the present case, a retrial need not be ordered—Govt v. Kantila, 31 C.W.N. 583, 28 Cr L.J. 697.

Summary trial of non-summary offences—Effect:—Where a Magistrate deliberately disregards the offence complained of, which is an offence not triable summarily, and tries it summarily, his proceedings are absolutely void under sec. 530 (g) Where a complaint is made for an offence not triable summarily, and process is issued in respect of that offence, a summary trial is illegal and void even though the accused is ultimately convicted of an offence triable summarily—Ganu v. Emp., 52 Bom 254, 29 Cr.L.J. 492 (493), Chandra Mohan v. K. E., 27 C.W.N. 148, 25 Cr.L.J. 528; Kailash v. Joynuddi, 5 C.W.N. 252, Emp v. Ram Narain, 46 All. 446.

858. Instances of summary offences:—(i) Offences under sec 121, Indian Railways Act—K. E. v. Bindeshri, 1902 A.W.N. 24;

(ii) offences under sec. 65 (a), Stamp Act, for failure to give a receipt—Navoo Routhen, 1 Weir 906;

(iii) proceedings under sec. 84, Bombay Act VI of 1873, for recovery of Municipal Taxes—Municipality of Ahmedabad v. Jumna, 17 Bom. 731;

(iv) offences under the Companies Act for not filing the balance sheet with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies—Dina Nath v. Emp., 35 All 173, 14 Cr.L.J. 105;

(v) offences under sec. 49, Bengal Abkari Act XXI of 1856, the confiscation provided in that section being merely a consequence of the conviction and not part of the punishment—Emp. v. Baidanath, 3 Cal. 366.

(vi) violation of rule 8, div. (c) cl (b) framed under the Criminal Tribes Act (XXVII of 1871) is punishable with a maximum sentence of 6 months rigorous imprisonment and is triable summarily—Bihari, 50 All. 718, 30 Cr L.J. 214 (215).

Property of value not exceeding fifty rupees:—Where a box containing fifty Rupees was stolen and the price of the box was annas eight, the theft was of property exceeding Rs 50 in value (i.e. Rs 50-8 annas) and could not be tried summarily—Q. v. Buzleh Ali, 22 W.R. 65 Since a tenant is entitled to the exclusive possession of the whole produce until it is divided under sec. 71 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, his complaint against the landlord for theft for having cut and carried away paddy worth Rs. 88 of which the latter was entitled to one-half, cannot be summarily tried by a Magistrate, as the value of the property in this case must be regarded as Rs. 88 and not Rs. 44 only—Shaikh Haboo v. Sk. Hariman, 1 P.L.J. 230, 20 C.W.N. 1212, 17 Cr.L.J. 473.

859. Offences not triable summarily :—(i) Offences which are punishable with imprisonment for more than 6 months, e.g. an offence under sec. 60 of the U. P. Excise Act (IV of 1910) which is punishable with imprisonment for one year—Bhikha v. Emp., 28 O.C. 123, 26 Cr.L.J. 800;

(ii) offences under sec. 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act—Emp. v. Dhondu, 6 Bom L.R. 255; K. E v Periaswamy, 2 L.B.R. 163; Pollard v Mothial, 4 Mad. 234, Q. E. v. Kallayan, 20 Mad. 235; Q. E. v. Rajab, 16 Bom 368; Aviram v. Abdool, 27 Cal 131; Emp. v. Dhondu, 33 Bom. 22; Crown v Sohrab, 6 S.L.R. 165, 14 Cr.L.J. 256, Emp. v. Har Lal, 1912 P R 3, 13 Cr.L.J. 194; (Contra—Q. E. v. Indarjit, 11 All. 262 and Abdus Samad v Yusuf, 43 All 281),

(iii) offences under sec. 6 of Act VII of 1851, for illegal demand of toll—Ultam Chunder v Isser Chunder, 22 W.R. 76,

(iv) offences under the Press Act, e.g. omission to make a declaration—Bava Narain v Emp., 1889 P R 9,

(v) maintenance proceedings under sec. 488—Kali Dasi v. Durga, 20 Cal 351, Hur Kishore v Bharati, 24 W R. 61,

(vi) offence under sec. 60 of the U P Excise Act (IV of 1900) in respect of exciseable articles other than cocaine (punishable with one year's imprisonment)—Emp. v. Ram Narain, 46 All. 446;

(vii) offences under sec. 9 Opium Act (punishable with one year's imprisonment)—Emp v. Nga Sit, 4 Bur L.T. 271, 13 Cr.L.J. 58;

(viii) cattle-lifting—Crown v. Allahrakho, 6 S.L.R. 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 780 (781), in Sind, the offence of cattle-theft is so prevalent and so often go unpunished that deterrent sentences should be passed, and the offence should not be tried summarily—Emp v Amir Bux, 28 Cr L.J. 959 (Sind).

(ix) offences under sec. 224 I P. C.—Q. E v Hassan Ali, 1894 A W N 176,

(x) offences under sec. 452 I P C.—R. S Sharma v. Emp, 6 Bur. L.T. 137,

(xi) theft of property of value more than Rs. 50—Buzleh Ali, 22 W.R. 65, Dipchand v Emp, 14 N.L.R. 190; Sk. Haboo v. Sk. Kariman, 1 P.L.J. 230; under clause (i) of this section, an offence under sec. 457 I P C. (house breaking by night in order to commit theft) is triable summarily, but if the property stolen is worth more than Rs. 50, a summary trial would be improper—Dipchand v Emp, 14 N.L.R. 190,

(xii) a summary offence combined with a charge of previous conviction—Anonymous, 2 Weir 324, Emp v. Bashir, 30 Cr.L.J. 505 (All.)

860. When summary trial undesirable or improper :—A summary trial is undesirable in a case where a large number of correspondence has to be gone into and the case is by no means of a simple character—Dina Nath, 35 All 173; or in a case in which from the nature of the dispute and the plea taken by the accused it is apparent that complicated questions of right and title and production of documentary evidence are involved—Bhim Bahadur v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 121, 21 Cr.L.J. 374, 55 I.C. 854; Parmeshwar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 347, Maung Shewe v. Emp., 2 Bur. L.J. 55, 24 Cr.L.J. 929; Emp. v. Tirthdas, 6 S.L.R. 120, 13 Cr.L.J. 771. A summary procedure is also undesirable where the accused is a deaf and dumb person—In re a deaf and dumb man, 8 Bom. L.R. 849. A summary trial is also improper where the Magistrate takes cognizance of the case from his own knowledge or suspicion, and holds the trial on inadequate materials—Emp. v. Hamed, 3 C.W.N. ccxxx; Kanhaiya Lal v. K. E., 1905 P.L.R. 31. It is also undesirable in offences of a very serious nature—Crown v. Allahrakho, 6 S.L.R. 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 780, Dipchand v. Emp., 14 N.L.R. 190. It is improper where the charge is a serious or complicated one, and the trial goes on for a considerable time and a local inquiry has to be made or a large number of witnesses and accused persons are examined—Emp. v. Rustomji, 23 Bom. L.R. 984, 23 Cr.L.J. 21, Ghasida Mal v. Crown, 3 Lah.L.J. 346, 22 Cr.L.J. 145, 59 I.C. 849; In re Isser Chunder, 25 W.R. 65; Rahimtulla v. Emp., 19 S.L.R. 136, 26 Cr.L.J. 1026. But a summary trial is not improper merely because there is a large number of accused in the case—Naubat v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 140 (All).

A summary trial is also improper in a case where the conviction of the accused may entail further serious consequences (e.g. dismissal from service). Thus, where a Police officer of many years' standing was charged with criminal intimidation with a view to prevent a person from giving evidence against certain grave offenders, and was tried summarily and convicted, held that the Magistrate did not exercise a sound discretion in trying the case summarily and depriving the accused of the privilege of an appeal—Subramanya Ayyar v. Q., 6 Mad. 396. So also, where a village Kulkarni is charged with offences under secs. 176 and 202 I.P.C. (intentional omission to give information of offences to a public servant) the Magistrate should not try the accused summarily, in as much as cases under sec. 202 are complicated and the conviction of the accused may entail further serious consequences (dismissal from service)—Q. E. v. Hari Gopal, Ratanlal 778; Q. E. v. Waman, Ratanlal 784.

261. The Local Government may confer, on any

Power to invest
Bench of Magistrates invested with less power.

Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the second or third class, power to try summarily all or any of the following offences:—

(a) offences under the Indian Penal Code, sections 277, 278, 279, 285, 286, 289, 290, 292, 293, 294, 323, 334, 336, 341, 352, 426, 447 and 504;

(b) offences against Municipal Acts, and the conservancy clauses of Police Acts which are punishable only with fine or with imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month with or without fine;

(c) abetment of any of the foregoing offences;

(d) an attempt to commit any of the foregoing offences, when such attempt is an offence.

The italicised words at the end of clauses (a) and (b) have been added by section 75 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

A Bench of Magistrates cannot try summarily any other offence except those mentioned in sec. 260 and this section—Q v Babheki, 21 W.R. 12, Hasaldar v Jagu Mian, 9 Cal 45.

262. (1) In trials under this Chapter, the procedure prescribed for summons-cases shall be followed in summons-cases, and the procedure prescribed for warrant-cases shall be followed in warrant-cases, except as hereinafter mentioned.

(2) No sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months shall be passed in the case of any conviction under this Chapter.

861. Procedure:—The scanty procedure laid down in this Chapter should be strictly followed—Q. v Johree, 22 W.R. 28; Q. E. v. Erugadu, 15 Mad 83. Magistrates should take care that the procedure and the record are not made more summary than what the law has laid down—Q. E. v. Mukundi, 21 All 189, Damodar v. Emp 3 P.L.T. 499. Thus, where the Magistrate without issuing process or making a record of the proceedings and without dismounting from the horse on which he was riding, convicted and fined a man summarily for causing obstruction in a public way, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was illegal—Q. E. v. Erugadu, 15 Mad 83.

In a summary trial of a warrant case, the Magistrate must adopt the procedure laid down in Chapter XXI (except that he has not to frame a charge and is not bound to record the evidence of the witnesses). Therefore the provision of section 256 which gives the accused an absolute right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses after they have been examined-in-chief must apply to a summary trial of warrant cases—Tittu Sahu v. Emp, 1 P.L.T. 652 21 Cr.L.J. 630, In re Raju, 50 Mad. 740 28 Cr.L.J. 12. The accused is entitled to have processes issued for compelling the attendance of the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination—Nepal v. Emp, 22 Cr.L.J. 271 (Cal).

In a summary trial of a warrant case, though a charge need not be framed, the accused person cannot be called dilatory, if he delays to that complicated questions of right and title and production of documentary evidence are involved—Bhim Bahadur v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 121, 21 Cr.L.J. 374, 55 I.C. 854; Parmeshwar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 347; Maung Shewe v. Emp., 2 Bur. L.J. 55, 24 Cr.L.J. 929; Emp. v. Tirithdas, 6 S.L.R. 120, 13 Cr.L.J. 771. A summary procedure is also undesirable where the accused is a deaf and dumb person—In re a deaf and dumb man, 8 Bom. L.R. 849. A summary trial is also improper where the Magistrate takes cognizance of the case from his own knowledge or suspicion, and holds the trial on inadequate materials—Emp. v. Hamed, 3 C.W.N. cccxxx; Kanhaya Lal v. K. E., 1905 P.L.R. 31. It is also undesirable in offences of a very serious nature—Crown v. Allahrakho, 6 S.L.R. 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 780, Dipchand v. Emp., 14 N.L.R. 190. It is improper where the charge is a serious or complicated one, and the trial goes on for a considerable time and a local inquiry has to be made or a large number of witnesses and accused persons are examined—Emp. v. Rustumji, 23 Bom. L.R. 984, 23 Cr.L.J. 21, Ghesita Mal v. Crown, 3 Lah.L.J. 346, 22 Cr.L.J. 145, 59 I.C. 849, In re Isser Chunder, 25 W.R. 65, Rahimtulla v. Emp., 19 S.L.R. 136, 26 Cr.L.J. 1026. But a summary trial is not improper merely because there is a large number of accused in the case—Naubat v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 140 (All).

A summary trial is also improper in a case where the conviction of the accused may entail further serious consequences (e.g. dismissal from service). Thus, where a Police officer of many years' standing was charged with criminal intimidation with a view to prevent a person from giving evidence against certain grave offenders, and was tried summarily and convicted, held that the Magistrate did not exercise a sound discretion in trying the case summarily and depriving the accused of the privilege of an appeal—Subramanya Ayyar v. Q., 6 Mad. 396. So also, where a village Kulkarni is charged with offences under secs. 176 and 202 I.P.C. (intentional omission to give information of offences to a public servant) the Magistrate should not try the accused summarily, in as much as cases under sec. 202 are complicated and the conviction of the accused may entail further serious consequences (dismissal from service)—Q. E. v. Hari Gopal, Ratanlal 778; Q. E. v. Waman, Ratanlal 784.

261. The Local Government may confer, on any Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the second or third class, power to try summarily all or any of the following offences:—

Power to invest
Bench of Magistrates
power.

(a) offences under the Indian Penal Code, sections 277, 278, 279, 285, 286, 289, 290, 292, 293, 294, 323, 334, 336, 341, 352, 426, 447 and 504;

(b) offences against Municipal Acts, and the conservancy clauses of Police Acts which are punishable

- (f) the offence complained of and the offence (if any) proved, and in cases coming under clause (d), clause (e), clause (f) or clause (g) of sub-section (1) of section 260, the value of the property in respect of which the offence has been committed;
- (g) the plea of the accused and his examination (if any);
- (h) the finding, and, in the case of a conviction, a brief statement of the reasons therefor;
- (i) the sentence or other final order; and
- (j) the date on which the proceedings terminated.

863. Record—Although the object of a summary procedure is to shorten the course of trial, it is nevertheless incumbent on the Magistrate to put on record sufficient evidence to justify his order—Ainuddi v. Q. E., 27 Cal 450; Kath Md. v. Emp., 10 C.W.N. 79, Q. E. v. Gopal, Ratanlal 778 If the particulars required by this section are not clearly given in a judgment in a summary trial convicting the accused, the judgment is defective and the conviction cannot stand—Ghulam v. Emp., 23 Cr L.J. 161.

The record should be written by the Magistrate himself; there is no provision enabling him to delegate this duty to a clerk—Subramaniya Ayyar v. Q., 6 Mad. 396 The record should be made at the time of the trial, and not afterwards The admission of the accused should also be recorded at once—Q. E. v. Erugadu, 15 Mad. 83 "District Magistrates should satisfy themselves from time to time by examination of the records of summary trials that the law regarding such trials is properly observed and especially that Magistrates do not exceed their jurisdiction in this regard"—Cal G R & C O., p 16.

864. Evidence—In a summary trial of a non-appealable case the Magistrate need not record the evidence of witnesses in writing—Emp. v. Shomeshar, 2 Cr L.J. 336, 1905 A.W.N. 143, Howard v. Rustomji, Ratanlal 334 But this does not mean that this section excuses a Magistrate from hearing the evidence of witnesses. If the accused denies the charge, the complainant and his witnesses must be examined, and the case must be decided upon the effect of their evidence, though the evidence need not be recorded—Jabbar v. Tomiz, 39 Cal 931, 16 C.W.N. 984.

Notes of evidence—If at the commencement of the trial, the Magistrate is unable to determine whether the proper sentence to be passed should be an appealable one or not, he must make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as his examination proceeds But if he can, at this stage, determine that the sentence will be, in any event, non-appealable, he need not record the evidence. If, however, he actually does so, the notes of the evidence form part of the record

The Magistrate is not required to record a full statement of this examination of the accused. A brief note of the examination is sufficient—Bhawani v. Emp., 3 O.W.N. 946, 28 Cr.L.J. 76

868. Finding—In summary trials, it is very important that there should be clear findings on questions of fact, because it is only through such findings that the Court of Revision can form its own judgment with regard to the legality or otherwise of the proceedings of the trial Court—Emp. v. Jagmohan, 24 Cr.L.J. 916 (Oudh).

869. Reasons for conviction :—The Magistrate, in a summary trial must, in recording the reasons for the conviction, state them in such a manner that the High Court may in revision judge whether there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to justify the conviction—Murat Singh v. Emp., 26 A.L.J. 109, 29 Cr.L.J. 265; Lalit v. Chunder, 3 C.W.N. 281; Jagan Nath v. Emp., 16 O.C. 357, 14 Cr.L.J. 594; Emp. v. Punjab Singh, 6 Cal 579, Me Da Li v. Crown, 1 L.B.R. 208; Damodar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 499, 23 Cr.L.J. 94, Janaki v. Raghunath, 19 Cr.L.J. 719 (Pat.) Magistrates should set out so much of the reasons that have influenced them, as to satisfy the accused that the Magistrate has considered each of the ingredients of the offence necessary in law for the conviction to which the Magistrate has proceeded—Q. E. v. Mukundi, 21 All 189; Brijbasi v. K. E., 10 A.L.J. 251, 13 Cr.L.J. 708; Ram Harakh v. Crown, 9 S.L.R. 89, 16 Cr.L.J. 713; and while this should be recorded with brevity, the brevity should not be such as to tend to obscurity—Q. E. v. Mukundi, 21 All. 189 Thus, a judgment in a single line is not a judgment according to law—Jankey v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 431 (Pat.).

Failure to record a brief statement of reasons is fatal, and the whole proceedings are illegal and liable to be set aside—Dina Nath v. Jogendra, 6 C.W.N. 40, Emp. v. Punjab Singh, 6 Cal 579, Q. E. v. Shidgauda, 18 Bom. 97; In re Dervish, 46 Mad. 253; Maqsd v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 716; K. E. v. Mianjan, 24 O.C. 293; Nisarali, 28 Cr.L.J. 495 (Nag.) Even the defect could not be cured by the Magistrate (Presidency) subsequently submitting the reasons to the High Court when the record was called for under section 441—In re Dervish Hossain, 46 Mad 253 K. E. v. Haladhar, 9 C.W.N. lxxv But if the record submitted under section 441 disclosed sufficient grounds for the Magistrate's decision, the High Court condoned the irregularity, if no failure of justice had occurred—Dervish, 46 Mad 253 (256). The Bombay High Court holds that the omission to record reasons for conviction on the part of the Bench Magistrate is only an irregularity which can be cured by sec. 537, where there is clear evidence justifying the conviction. It is an omission which does not occasion failure of justice—Emp. v. Namdeo, 26 Bom.L.R. 1236. See also In re Thurman, 20 L.W. 330, 25 Cr.L.J. 1084

264. (1) In every case tried summarily by a Magistrate or Bench in which an appeal lies, such Magistrate or Bench shall, before passing sentence, record a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence and also the particulars mentioned in section 263.

(2) Such judgment shall be the only record in cases coming within this section.

870. Record—The record of the trial must be made at the time of the trial, and not subsequently prepared, after the close of the trial, from memory or from rough notes—Q E v Erugadu, 15 Mad 83 The judgment, which is the only record in appealable cases, must be written by the Magistrate himself (see sec 265) He cannot delegate that duty to a clerk, nor can affix his signature to the record or judgment by a stamp—Subramanya v Q, 6 Mad 396

Where a Magistrate passes an appealable sentence he can not make his record in the manner prescribed by sec 263, but must record the evidence and frame a charge. Whereas in non-appealable cases it is stated in so many words in sec 263 that no charge need be framed, but in sec. 264 which deals with appealable cases there are no words to this effect, this omission when coupled with sec 262 is tantamount to a clear direction that the ordinary procedure in warrant cases is to be followed and a formal charge is to be framed—Natabar v K E, 27 C W N 923 But in a more recent case the same High Court has expressed the opinion that there is no provision requiring the framing of a charge in a summary trial, whether in appealable or non-appealable cases. Sec. 264 states what the record shall consist of, viz a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence, and the particulars set out in sec. 263; and in sec. 263 it is not necessary to frame a formal charge In any case, the omission to frame a formal charge under sec. 264 would be cured by sec 535—Madhab Chandra v. Emp., 53 Cal 738, 27 Cr L.J. 1295 In Kallu v Emp, 26 Cr.L.J. 1334 (Oudh) and Emp v Salig Ram, 7 Lah, 303, 27 Cr L J 639, it is laid down that even in appealable cases it is not necessary to frame a charge, and a similar view has been taken in Q E v Karu, Ratanlal 768, and Tifu v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 652, 21 Cr.L.J. 630.

871. Substance of evidence :—The Magistrate is not bound to record the substance of every separate deposition, but he is to state generally what is the substance of the witnesses' evidence—Jamna Prasad v Emp, 6 O W N 45, 30 Cr.L.J. 557; Kristodhone v. Chairman, 25 W R 6 The substance of the evidence should be recorded in such a way as to enable the Appellate Court to form an opinion whether the evidence is sufficient to support a conviction—Po Ka v. K. E., 9 Cr L J 23, 4 L B R 338; Emp v Karam Singh, 1 All. 680 Where the judgment convicting the accused did not embody the substance of the evidence but the Magistrate merely recorded that the prosecution witnesses supported the complainant and that the evidence of the defence witnesses was conflicting and unreliable, held that the judgment was defective and the conviction could not stand—Salim v. Emp., 24 Cr L.J. 484, A I.R. 1924 Oudh 167; Emp. v. Nurudin, 30 Bom. L.R. 954, 29 Cr.L.J. (1006)

The Magistrate is not required to record a full statement of this examination of the accused. A brief note of the examination is sufficient—Bhawani v. Emp., 3 O.W.N. 946, 28 Cr.L.J. 76

868. Finding.—In summary trials, it is very important that there should be clear findings on questions of fact, because it is only through such findings that the Court of Revision can form its own judgment with regard to the legality or otherwise of the proceedings of the trial Court—Emp. v Jagmohan, 24 Cr.L.J. 916 (Oudh)

869. Reasons for conviction—The Magistrate, in a summary trial must, in recording the reasons for the conviction, state them in such a manner that the High Court may in revision judge whether there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to justify the conviction—Murat Singh v. Emp., 26 A.L.J. 109, 29 Cr.L.J. 265; Lalit v Chunder, 3 C.W.N. 281; Jagan Nath v Emp., 18 O.C. 357, 14 Cr.L.J. 594; Emp v Punjab Singh, 6 Cal 579; Me Da Li v Crown, 1 L.B.R. 208; Damodar v Emp., 3 P.L.T. 499, 23 Cr.L.J. 94, Janaki v. Raghunath, 19 Cr.L.J. 719 (Pat) Magistrates should set out so much of the reasons that have influenced them, as to satisfy the accused that the Magistrate has considered each of the ingredients of the offence necessary in law for the conviction to which the Magistrate has proceeded—Q. E. v. Mukundi, 21 All. 189; Brijbasi v. K. E., 10 A.L.J. 251, 13 Cr.L.J. 708; Ram Harakh v Crown, 9 S.L.R. 89, 16 Cr.L.J. 713; and while this should be recorded with brevity, the brevity should not be such as to tend to obscurity—Q. E. v. Mukundi, 21 All 189 Thus, a judgment in a single line is not a judgment according to law—Jankey v Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 431 (Pat)

Failure to record a brief statement of reasons is fatal, and the whole proceedings are illegal and liable to be set aside—Dina Nath v Jogendra, 6 C.W.N. 40, Emp v Panjab Singh, 6 Cal 579; Q. E. v Shidgauda, 18 Bom. 97, In re Dervish, 46 Mad 253, Maqsood v Emp., 1 P.L.T. 716; K. E. v. Mianjan, 24 O.C. 293; Nisarali, 28 Cr.L.J. 495 (Nag). Even the defect could not be cured by the Magistrate (Presidency) subsequently submitting the reasons to the High Court when the record was called for under section 441—In re Dervish Hossain, 46 Mad. 253 K. E. v Haladhar, 9 C.W.N. 1xxv. But if the record submitted under section 441 disclosed sufficient grounds for the Magistrate's decision, the High Court condoned the irregularity, if no failure of justice had occurred—Dervish, 46 Mad. 253 (256). The Bombay High Court holds that the omission to record reasons for conviction on the part of the Bench Magistrate is only an irregularity which can be cured by sec 537, where there is clear evidence justifying the conviction It is an omission which does not occasion failure of justice—Emp. v. Namdeo, 26 Bom.L.R. 1236. See also In re Thurman, 20 L.W. 330, 25 Cr.L.J. 1084

264. (1) In every case tried summarily by a Magistrate or Bench in which an appeal lies, such Magistrate or Bench shall, before passing sentence, record a Record in appealable cases.

871A. Cl (3)—Sub-section (3) lays down that if the record is prepared by a member of the Bench, it shall have to be signed by each member taking part in the proceedings. This clause does not apply to the case of preparation of record or judgment by the presiding officer of the Court. If the presiding officer himself prepares the record or judgment, it is not necessary that the other members of the Bench should sign the record or judgment. Sec. 367 requires the presiding officer of the Court to write the judgment, and it shall be dated and signed by him in open Court at the time of pronouncing it. That being so, when the judgment of a Bench is prepared by the presiding officer, it is sufficient if he alone signs it, and it is not necessary that the other members should sign—Ramakottiah v Subba Rao 52 Mad. 237, 55 M L J 576, 29 Cr L J 973 (1974). But the other members must be aware of the contents of the judgment and must approve of the judgment. So, where after the other members of the Bench had left the Court premises, the presiding officer prepared the judgment and delivered it so that those members had no opportunity either to express assent or dissent, held that the judgment was not a proper judgment—Ramakottiah, supra.

CHAPTER XXIII.

OF TRIALS BEFORE HIGH COURTS AND COURTS OF SESSION.

A.—Preliminary.

266. In this Chapter, except in sections 276 and 307, and in Chapter XVIII, the expression “High Court” means a High Court of Judicature established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and includes the Chief Court of Oudh, the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners of the Central Provinces and Sind and such other Courts as the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare to be High Courts for the purposes of this Chapter and of Chapter XVIII.

The words “Chief Court of Oudh” have been added by the Oudh Courts Act (XXXII of 1925); and the other italicised words in the middle of the section have been added by sec. 12 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1922. The words “and of Ch. XVIII” at the end of the section have been added by sec. 12 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1922.

the section were accidentally omitted when the Act of 1898 was framed, and have now been added by sec. 76 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923).

871B. The Judicial Commissioner (e.g. of Sind) is a High Court only for the purposes of Chapters 18 and 23, but not for the purpose of Ch. 31 (Appeal). A Judicial Commissioner holding a sessions trial on the Original Side is to be deemed a Sessions Judge and not a High Court for the purpose of Ch 31, so that an appeal will lie from his decision to the Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court—Khudabux v. Emp., 19 S L R 309, 26 Cr L J 562, A.I.R. 1925 Sind. 249

267. All trials under this Chapter before a High Court shall be by jury; and notwithstanding anything herein contained, in all criminal cases transferred to a High Court under this Code or under the Letters Patent of any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, the trial may, if the High Court so directs, be by jury.

Trial before High Court to be by jury.

Trials before Courts of Session to be by jury or with assessors.

268. All trials before a Court of Session shall be either by jury, or with the aid of assessors.

Trial ordinary with assessors—In the absence of any Notification under sec 269, a trial in the Court of Session must be with the aid of assessors—Skilling v Emp, 1888 P.R 18

872. Trial by jury and trial with assessors—Difference :—In a trial by jury, the jury is the real tribunal and is aided by the Judge, and in certain matters directed by the Judge; but in a trial with the aid of assessors, the Judge is the sole tribunal and judge of law and fact, and the responsibility of the decision rests solely with him, though in the decision of the case he is expected to take into consideration the opinion of each assessor. In a trial by jury, the jury form a tribunal or body with a foreman, and the verdict is the verdict of the body, and when there is no unanimity among the members of the body, the opinion of the majority prevails as the verdict of the body. But in the case of a trial with the aid of assessors, the assessors do not form a body but each acts and expresses his opinion individually and the Judge is to invite the opinion of each separately and record it—K. E. v. Thirumalai, 24 Mad 523; Q. E. v. Jadub Das, 27 Cal 295; Emp v Shanker, 14 Bom.L R 710, 13 Cr L J. 677; Jaisukh v. Emp., 43 All. 125, 19 A.L.J. 1; Jairam v. Emp, 20 N.L.R. 129, 25 Cr.L.J. 459. In a trial held with the aid of assessors, the individual opinion of each assessor is taken, but in a trial by jury, the individual opinions of the members of the jury are never intended to be disclosed—Pub. Pro v. Abdul Hamid, 36

Mad 585, 15 Cr.L.J. 197. But the law makes no distinction as to the procedure between a trial by jury and a trial with the aid of assessors, except as to the summing up of the case in the former and the manner in which the verdict in the former and the opinions of the assessors in the latter are respectively taken—Emp v. Mansing, 33 Bom. 423

As regards appeal, the considerations governing the appeal from the trial held with aid of assessors differ greatly from those governing an appeal from the trial by a jury. In the latter case, the appeal is restricted by the provisions of sec. 423 (2) whereas in the former case the whole case is before the Appellate Court—Champa v Emp., 29 Cr.L.J. 325 (329)

Trial when begins.—A trial by jury or with assessors begins only when the charge has been read and the accused claims to be tried—Q E. v Silva, 15 Bom 514

269. (1) The Local Government may, * * by order in the official Gazette, direct that the trial of all offences, or of any particular class of offences before any Court of Session, shall be by jury in any district, and may, * * revoke or alter such order.

(2) The Local Government, by like order, may also declare that, in the case of any district in which the trial of any offence is to be by jury, the trial of such offence shall, if the Judge on application made to him or of his own motion so directs, be by jurors summoned from a special jury list, and may revoke or alter such order.

(3) When the accused is charged at the same trial with several offences of which some are and some are not triable by jury, he shall be tried by jury for such of those offences as are triable by jury, and by the Court of Session, with the aid of the jurors as assessors, for such of them as are not triable by jury.

The words "with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council" which occurred in the first line of sub-section (1) have been omitted by the Devolution Act XXXVIII of 1920. The words "with the like sanction" occurring near the end of that subsection have been deleted by the Repealing and Amending Act X of 1927.

873. 'Class of offences':—The classes of offences referred to in this section are not restricted to the classification found in the Penal Code, e.g., offences against the State, offences against public tranquillity etc., or to the classification found in this Code, e.g., bailable cognizable offences, etc. Offences may be classified according to persons who commit them, or according to the person or property against whom or which they are committed, or in regard to the particular occasion in connection with which they are committed—Q E. v. Ganapathi, 23 Mad 632.

Where by a Notification the Government directed that in a particular district an offence under sec 436 I P. C. was to be tried by jury and not with the aid of assessors, held that an offence under sec. 436 read with sec. 149 I P. C should also be tried by jury and not with the aid of assessors, because an offence under sec. 436-149 I. P. C is not a different offence from an offence under sec. 436 I P. C.—Ramsundar v Emp., 5 Pat. 238, 7 P L T. 178, 27 Cr.L J 512.

874. Trial of jury-case with assessors and vice versa :

—If a jury-case is tried with the aid of assessors, and no objection is taken at the trial, the trial will stand good by virtue of sec 536 (2)—Q E v Ganapathi, 23 Mad 632.

So also, the trial by jury of a case properly triable with assessors is not invalid on that ground—Emp v Mohim Chunder, 3 Cal 765 And unless the accused objects to such procedure before the verdict is delivered, he cannot be allowed to object with regard to it subsequently in appeal—Emp v. Mansingh, 33 Bom 423, 11 Bom. L.R. 350, Gulab Chand v Emp, 27 Bom.L.R 1416, 27 Cr L J 650 The accused were charged under sec 412 I P. Code, which was an offence triable by jury, and were tried by jury The jury however brought in a verdict of guilty under sec 411 I P Code which was an offence triable with the aid of assessors It was contended that the jury was wrong in convicting the accused for an offence triable with assessors and that the trial ought to have been held with the jurors as assessors, under sec 269 (3). Held that sec 269 (3) did not apply, as no charge was framed for an offence under sec 411 I P Code. The conviction of the accused under sec. 411 I. P. C was not illegal, vide sec 238 Cr P. Code—Gulab Chand v Emp, (supra) Where an assessor-case is tried by jury, the Judge cannot treat the verdict of the jury as the opinion of assessors so as to be able to concur with the opinion of the minority, if he disagrees with the opinion of the majority If the Judge disagrees with the opinion of the majority, he must submit the case to the High Court under sec. 307—Surja v. Q E., 25 Cal 555.

875. Joint trial of jury case and assessor-case :—

Under sub-section (3) an accused may be tried simultaneously at one trial by the jury for offences triable by jury, and by the Judge with the aid of the same jurors as assessors for offences triable with the aid of assessors—In re Sennimalai, 2 L.W. 933, 16 Cr L J 717 But in such a trial, the Judge must always preserve a distinction between the two cases (the jury-case and the assessor-case) and must not treat the whole case as a jury-case. He must separately record the verdict of the jury in the jury-case, and must separately record the opinions of the jurors as assessors in the assessor-case If he disagrees with the verdict of the jury, he must not send the whole case to the High Court but must send only the jury-case under sec. 307, and pass judgment with reference to the assessor-case under sec. 309—Emp. v Vyankatsingh, 9 Bom L.R. 1057, 7 Cr.L.J. 236; Q. E. v Devu, Ratanlal 600. In such cases it is desirable that the Judge should explain clearly to the jurors and assessors the double capacity in which they were acting—Sivaga, 2 Weir 334. If in the course of such trial it appears that only one offence was committed, viz. an offence triable with assessors, and the Judge tries the case with the jury and disagrees with the verdict of the jury, he cannot send the case to the High Court under sec. 307, but should pass judgment under sec. 309, because he must treat the case as one triable with the aid of assessors, and he must treat the jurors as assessors—Q. E. v Anga Valayan, 22 Mad 15.

Again, in such joint trial of two cases (a jury-case and an assessor-case) all persons who would serve as jurors in the jury-case must serve as assessors in the assessor-case. Where the Judge after taking the verdict of the jurors in the jury-case, took only the opinion of two of them in the assessor-case, it was held that the Judge's procedure was illegal, he should have taken the opinion of all the jurors as assessors—Ramkrishna v Emp., 26 Mad. 598. Similarly, where in such joint trial the Judge selected five gentlemen as jurors in the jury case, and two of them only as assessors in the assessor-case, it was held that the Judge acted illegally, he ought to have taken all the five jurors as assessors in the assessor-case—Pingal v K. E., 21 M.L.J. 520, 12 Cr.L.J. 239, 10 I.C. 281.

876. Transfer of case from jury-district to non-jury-district and vice versa—The words "trial shall be by jury in any district" mean that the trial shall be by jury if the case is tried in a district in which the notification is in force, they do not mean that the case shall be tried by jury even if it is transferred from a jury-district to a district where jury trial does not prevail. The High Court has power under sec. 526 to transfer a sessions case from a jury-district to a non-jury-district, and section 269 does not in any way limit that power; but in such a case the trial in the latter district will be with the aid of assessors—Emp. v Jumo, 10 S.L.R. 154, 18 Cr.L.J. 51.

Similarly, the High Court has power to transfer a case from a non-jury-district to a jury-district under section 526 (d) on the ground of convenience of parties, and the High Court cannot refuse to do so on the ground that by such a transfer the accused will get the benefit of a jury trial where previously he had none—Durga Charan v Emp., 8 C.L.J. 59, 8 Cr.L.J. 121.

Trial before Court of Session to be conducted by Public Prosecutor.

270. In every trial before a Court of Session, the prosecution shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor.

877. The prosecution shall be conducted by the Public Prosecutor; if the complainant engages a counsel, the Public Prosecutor may always avail himself of the services of such counsel and in doing so he does not

C.R. 102. An Advocate of the High Court may appear on behalf of the prosecution in the Court of Session and may conduct the prosecution without being specially empowered by the District Magistrate for that purpose—In re Gungadhar, 23 W.R. 14. But it is highly undesirable that the prosecution should be conducted by Police Officers—Q E. v. Ram Chander, 13 W.R. 18

The provisions of this section are merely directory, and therefore the omission to appoint a Public Prosecutor is merely an irregularity curable by sec. 537—Q E v. Ismail, 1887 P R 35

B—Commencement of Proceedings.

271. (1) When the Court is ready to commence the trial, the accused shall appear or be brought before it, and the charge shall be read out in Court and explained to him, and he shall be asked whether he is guilty of the offence charged, or claims to be tried.

(2) If the accused pleads guilty, the plea shall be recorded, and he may be convicted thereon.

878. Charge shall be read and explained :—Where the charge is merely read out to the accused but not explained, the conviction will be quashed, especially in a case of trial for murder—Aiyaru v Q E, 9 Mad 61; K. E v Trimbaka, 3 Bom L R 489 The charge should be read out and so explained to the accused that the Court is sure that he has understood the nature of the charge thoroughly and it is then only that he should be called upon to plead—Emp. v. Vaimbilee, 5 Cal. 826; Gurrapu, 2 Weir 336; Jinga, 2 Weir 339; and the Judge ought to satisfy himself by interrogation of the accused, if necessary, that he fully understands the responsibility which he assumes in making a plea of guilty—Kesho Singh v. K. E, 20 O C. 136, 18 Cr.L.J. 742.

The charge sheet to which the accused is called upon to plead is a very important document. It should be drawn up and considered with extreme care and caution, so that the accused may have no doubt whatever as to the offences to which he is called upon to answer, and the Judge of the Appellate Court also may have no doubt upon the matter. Every addition and alteration made in the charge has to be read over and explained to the accused—Jagdeo v Emp, 18 A.L.J 442, 21 Cr.L.J 410, 56 I C 58

Record of charge :—On the record of a trial in a Court of Session there should be the charge, which under sec 271 has been read over and explained to the accused, and when this is not so, the record should contain an explanation of its absence The fact that this is an omission covered by sec. 537 is not a sufficient answer—Jagdeo v. Emp, supra

879. Plea :—If there are two heads of a charge (e.g. if the accused is charged with the offence of culpable homicide or in the alternative with the offence of grievous hurt) the accused should not be called upon to plead in the alternative but to each of the heads of the charge separately. Where in such a case he pleaded guilty to the second charge only (grievous hurt) and the Judge convicted him on that plea, the conviction was set aside—Q E v Lakshman, Ratanlal 327.

The accused must plead guilty or not guilty by his own mouth, and not through his counsel or pleader—Obhoy, 15 W R 42; Emp. v. Sur Singh, 6 Bom L R 861, 1 Cr L J 939. Admission by a pleader, especially by a pleader engaged by the Court for the accused and not by the accused himself, is not binding on him—Q E v Sangaya, 2 Bom. L R 751.

After the accused has claimed to be tried, any confessional statement made by him should be laid before the jury, such an admission should not be taken as a plea of guilty upon which a Judge may record a finding without taking the verdict of the jury—Anonymous, 2 Weir 334, Emp. v. Bai Nani, 7 Bom. L R 731, 2 Cr L J 609.

880. What is a sufficient plea .—The accused must distinctly and unequivocally admit the guilt, otherwise it is not sufficient. Where the accused instead of pleading guilty made a long rambling statement more or less admitting the guilt, it would be much safer if the Judge recorded a formal plea of 'not guilty' and proceeded to try the accused in the ordinary way—Deoki v. Emp., 5 A.L J 157. The plea must distinctly admit every fact necessary to constitute the offence. Thus, where the accused merely admitted that he beat his wife and she died but he did not say whether he had any intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, it was held that this was not a sufficient plea of guilty to a charge of culpable homicide, because the intention was absent—Gurrapu, 2 Weir 336; Emp. v. Chinia, 8 Bom L.R. 240, 3 Cr L J 337, Q v Sonooliah, 25 W R 23. If the prisoner pleads guilty, but goes on to say that he did not commit the offence with which he is charged, this is tantamount to a denial of the guilt and does not amount to a plea of guilty—Q. v Mutun, 11 W R 53. Where the prisoner admitted that he had accompanied the dacoits for some distance, but returned back almost immediately and had nothing to do with the dacoity afterwards committed, it was held that such a statement did not amount to a plea of guilty—Q. v Greedhary, 7 W R. 39. Where the plea of guilty is accompanied by qualifying statements, such a plea is not, properly speaking a plea of guilty. Thus, where the accused said that he killed his wife, but that he did so under grave provocations (e.g. in consequence of discovering her in an act of adultery), such a statement was not a plea of guilty to murder—Netal v. Q E., 11 Cal. 410. So also, where the prisoner admitted the guilt, but said that he had committed the offence under the influence of certain persons mentioned, it was held that the plea was not one of guilty—Emp v Sandar, 1886 A W.N. 66. Where the prisoner pleaded guilty but stated further that he committed the offence because he was subject to epileptic fits, it was held that this was not a plea of guilty on which the accused could be properly convicted—Q. v. Mhatarya, Ratanlal 698. Where the prisoner admitted that he killed his wife, but stated that he was not in his right mind at the time, it was held that this was not a plea of guilty—Q v Chet Ram, 5 N.W.P. 110.

Partial plea of guilty.—Where the accused is charged with having made two contradictory statements and he pleads guilty to one charge, that does not show that he pleads not guilty in respect of the other charge. It may be that both statements may be false. In such a case the prisoner ought not to be allowed to elect which statement he shall admit to be false—Q v. Gaub, 8 W R. (Cr. Let) 6.

Plea of 'not guilty'—The accused can plead "guilty" under sec. 271 or he can claim to be tried under sec. 272, or he can refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried. The plea of "not guilty" is not recognized by this Code—Emp. v Nirmal Kanta, 41 Cal. 1072 A plea of 'not guilty' amounts to a claim to be tried.

Record of plea.—If the accused pleads guilty, the plea should be recorded. Where no such plea appears on the record, the conviction is bad and must be set aside—Emp. v. Gopal, 7 Cal 96; Emp v. Deoki, 5 A.L.J. 157, 7 Cr L.J. 295

If the statement is made by the accused in a foreign language, it is not necessary that the plea must be recorded in the words of that language. It should be recorded in the language in which it is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter—Emp v. Vaumbilee, 5 Cal. 826

881. Conviction on plea—The word 'thereon' shows that the conviction must be upon the plea recorded before the Sessions Judge, and not on a confession made before the committing Magistrate. If the prisoner before the Court of Session has pleaded what in effect amounts to a plea of not guilty, the Judge is not justified in convicting him upon a confession made by him before the committing Magistrate—Q v. Hursook, 2 N.W.P. 479. Some corroborative evidence is necessary to warrant a Court of Session in acting upon a confession made before the committing Magistrate but retracted at the trial—Q E. v. Ram Sarup, 1898 A.W.N. 22; Q E. v. Gangia, 23 Bom. 316.

Where an accused person pleads guilty to the specific offence with which he is charged, he cannot on such plea be convicted of an offence other than that specifically charged—Anonymous, 2 Weir 335. Thus, where the prisoner has pleaded guilty to the offence of murder, he can not be convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Crown v Watu, 3 S.L.R. 58; Anonymous, 2 Weir 335. Where the accused has pleaded guilty to a charge of culpable homicide, he cannot be convicted of the offence of grievous hurt for which he was not tried—Q E. v. Raghu, Ratanlal 413

Conviction discretionary.—It is discretionary with the Sessions Judge to accept or not the plea of guilty of the accused. He may or may not convict the accused on such plea. It is open to the Judge to go into the evidence and leave the case to the jury, despite a plea of guilty—Anonymous, 2 Weir 335; Keso Singh v K E., 20 O.C. 136, 18 Cr.L.J. 742; Shanker v Emp., 24 A.L.J. 318, 27 Cr L J 449. If the Judge does not think fit to convict the prisoner on the charge to which he has pleaded guilty, he should proceed to try him as if the plea has been one of 'not guilty,' and he will have to take all the evidence in order to determine whether the prisoner has committed the offence to which he has pleaded guilty, or any other offence with which he is charged—Q v. Gobadur, 13 W R. 55 (56), Q E v. Chinna, 23 Mad 151. Where there are several co-accused who are to be tried jointly, and one accused has pleaded guilty, the Judge has a discretion to decide either that the accused be convicted on such plea or that he should be put on his trial inspite of his plea of guilty. The proper procedure to follow in such a case is, that if the Judge convicts the accused on the plea of guilty, he should be removed from the dock, in which case he can be called as a witness against the other accused, or that the Judge should put it on his record that he decides to put the accused on his trial inspite of his plea of guilty—Kesho Singh v K E., 20 O C 136, 18 Cr L J. 742; Q E v. Chinna, 23 Mad 151.

Where the Judge ought not to convict on plea—Where the accused has pleaded guilty to one offence, but there is clear prima facie evidence of a different offence, the Judge ought not to convict the accused on his plea, but should proceed to try the case. Thus, where there is clear prima facie evidence of the offence of murder but the prisoner has pleaded guilty to a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder on grave and sudden provocation, the Judge ought not to convict him for the latter offence, but should proceed to try him for the former offence—Q. E. v. Malhari, Ratanlal 410.

A plea of guilty should not be accepted in capital offences—Pala Singh v. K E., 1905 P.R. 54; Emp v Larmya, 19 Bom L.R. 356. In a case of murder, it has long been the practice of the Court not to accept the plea of guilty, for murder is a mixed question of fact and law. Unless the Court is perfectly satisfied that the accused knew exactly what was implied by his plea of guilty, the case should be tried, especially where the accused is an illiterate person—Dallu v Emp., 20 A L J. 326, 23 Cr L J. 283, Sukha v. Emp., 20 A L J. 669. In capital cases, where there is doubt whether the persons who pleaded guilty to the charge of murder fully understood the meaning and effect of such plea, the Judge should proceed with the trial and take evidence—Q E. v Bhadu, 19 All 119. A person may plead that he hit somebody who thereby died, without necessarily admitting that he committed murder, for murder under the I. P. C. requires a certain intention or a certain knowledge. In such cases it is advisable not to convict solely upon the plea of the accused but to proceed to trial—Emp v. Chinia, 8 Bom. L.R. 240, 3 Cr.L.J. 337. The Nagpur Court holds that it is not illegal to convict in a murder case on a plea of guilty, and in each case the circumstances must be examined to see whether the plea of guilty is one which should have been acted on. Where the accused is represented by a pleader, and a trial is not claimed, and the accused's answer amounts to a plea of guilty, it is quite legal to convict him on that plea—Manjoo v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 570 (Nag.).

882. Charge for one offence, conviction on plea for another :—It is illegal to convict a person of an offence upon his own plea, when there is no formal charge in respect of that offence. Thus, where an accused person was charged with the offence of murder, and the charge was not proved, but the Court convicted her of the offence of concealment of birth which, it considered, was admitted by her in her examination by the Court, it was held that such conviction was illegal. A charge of concealment of birth should have been framed and the accused tried thereon—Q. E. v. Sarwel, Ratanlal 386.

Postponement of conviction :—Where an accused person pleads guilty, the Court should record his confession and forthwith convict him thereon. If there are other persons being tried with him for the same offence, the Court should not postpone his conviction merely for the purpose of allowing the statements he may have made to be considered against the co-accused. It is against the spirit of the law to postpone his conviction so that he may technically be said to be tried jointly for the same offence with the other co-accused, and any statement in the nature of a confession he may make may be used against them—Emp. v. Kheraj, 30 All. 540; Surjan v. K. E., 12 A.L.J. 1239, 16 Cr.L.J. 103; Sukdeb v. K. E., 13 C.W.N. 552. After a plea of guilty, a trial may be continued when it is thought necessary to ascertain the part taken by the accused in order to assess the punishment, but it is unfair to defer the conviction of the accused solely with the view of having his confession considered against his co-accused who have pleaded not guilty—Q. E. v. Paltua, 23 All. 53.

Trial ends, if plea accepted :—If the Court accepts the plea of guilty and convicts the accused, his trial is at an end and he may be called as a witness against or for any person who has been accused along with him—Q. E. v. Chinna, 23 Mad 151. Where in a joint trial of several persons, one of the accused pleads guilty, his statement affecting himself and the other accused is not entitled to be considered under sec. 30 of the Evidence Act, for the statement following the plea of guilty ceases to be the statement of a person jointly 'tried,' because the trial ends, so far as he is concerned, with his plea—Q. E. v. Lakhshmayya, 22 Mad 491; Kanhaiya v. Crown, 1911 P.R. 15; Q. E. v. Khandia, 15 Bom. 66; Q. E. v. Pahuji, 19 Bom. 195; Venkatarami v. Q. 7 Mad 102; Emp. v. Asootosh, 4 Cal 483; Manki v. Amir, 2 C.W.N. 749; Q. E. v. Pirbhu, 17 All 524, Q. E. v. Nirmal, 22 All 445; Q. E. v. Kallu, 7 All 160.

272. If the accused refuses to, or does not, plead or if he claims to be tried, the Court shall proceed to choose jurors or assessors as hereinafter directed and to try the case :

Provided that, subject to the right of objection hereinafter mentioned, the same jury may try, or the same assessors may aid in the trial of, as many accused persons successively as the Court thinks fit.

883. 'If the accused refuses to or does not plead':—The accused cannot be called upon to plead 'not guilty'; such a plea is not recognised in the Code. The accused may either claim to be tried, or refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried—Emp. v Nirmal Kanta, 41 Cal 1072. If he pleads 'not guilty' the Judge will proceed to try him.

In a case where the prisoner pleads not guilty and the Public Prosecutor does not offer evidence in support of the charge, the Judge ought to instruct the assessors that they are bound to find the prisoner not guilty—Anonymous, 4 M H C.R App 39. Where there is nothing which can, if believed, amount to proof, the case should not be put to the jury at all, as a verdict of guilty (if the jury pronounces such a verdict) cannot under such circumstances be sustained—Q v Rutton Dass, 16 W R. 19.

If the accused makes no answer to the inquiry whether he is guilty or has any defence to make, it should be ascertained whether he is obstinately mute or dumb ex visitatione Dei. If he be found to be obstinately mute, the plea of 'not guilty' should be recorded, and the trial should proceed. If he is found to be dumb, an inquiry should be made whether he is sane or insane or incapable of being tried. If he is found to be sane, a plea of 'not guilty' should be recorded, and the trial should proceed; but if he is found to be insane, the procedure laid down in Chapter XXXIV should be followed—Reg v. Sattya, Ratanlal 19.

Claims to be tried.—The actual trial does not begin until the charge has been read and the accused claims to be tried—Q. E v. Silva, 15 Bom. 514; K. E v Jayram, 25 Bom. 694.

"Same jury may try several persons successively":—By the term 'successively' is understood that one trial is to follow the other i.e. on the conclusion of one trial the same jury may proceed to try the accused in the next case. The law does not contemplate that the two trials shall be conducted piecemeal in such a manner that at their conclusion the jury shall be called upon to decide at one and the same time upon two distinct classes of evidence, which, though they may have points in common, require careful discrimination as bearing upon the guilt or innocence of two sets of accused—Hussain v. Emp., 6 Cal. 96.

Where the law requires the trial of two accused to be separate, the accused must be tried separately, but it is not necessary that the two trials should be held by separate juries. The accused in the second case is not entitled as of right to be tried by a separate jury; there is thing illegal in the Judge hearing the second case with the same jury.

has tried the first case. Such a procedure is provided by the proviso of sec. 272. No doubt the accused in the second case can ask for a second jury, and it would be in the discretion of the Judge to grant or refuse such application. Prima facie there would seem to be no more reason why a jury should not try a second case than there is reason why a Sessions Judge should not try two cross-cases of riot—Rafuzzaman v. Chhotey Lal, 48 All. 325, 24 A.L.J. 472, 27 Cr L J. 445.

273. (1) In trials before the High Court, when it appears to the High Court, at any time before the commencement of the trial of the person charged, that any charge or any portion thereof is clearly unsustainable, the Judge may make on the charge an entry to that effect.

Entry on unsustainable charges.

(2) Such entry shall have the effect of staying proceedings upon the charge or portion of the charge, as the case may be.

Effect of entry.

884. If the Court is clearly of opinion that no offence has been made out, it is the duty of the Court to stay the proceedings by making an entry as contemplated by this section—Q. E. v. Sukee, 21 Cal 97.

Applications under this section should be disposed of by the High Court in its original criminal jurisdiction—Charoo Chander v. Emp, 9 Cal. 397.

C.—Choosing a Jury.

274. In trials before the High Court the jury shall consist of nine persons.

Number of jury.

(2) In trials by jury before the Court of Session the jury shall consist of such uneven number, not being less than five or more than nine, as the Local Government, by order applicable to any particular district or to any particular class of offences in that district, may direct :

Provided that where any accused person is charged with an offence punishable with death, the jury shall consist of not less than seven persons and, if practicable, of nine persons.

The word 'five' has been substituted for 'three' and the proviso has been added, by sec 13 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923 "In the Sessions Court the number should be any uneven number from five to nine which the Local Government may select. Thus, five should he substituted for three in section 274, as the minimum number of jury in a Sessions Court. In murder cases, before the Sessions Court, we are of opinion that the number of jury should if practicable be nine"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, Para 25

884A. The number fixed by the Local Government must be strictly adhered to. Where the Local Government has fixed the number at five, a trial by a jury consisting of seven members is ultra vires—Emp. v Booth, 26 All 211. But where no objection as to the number of jurors was raised at the trial, but was raised for the first time at the hearing of the appeal before the High Court, and there was no allegation that the accused were prejudiced in any way, the High Court refused to entertain the objection—Supdt of Legal Affairs v Bhajoo, 34 C.W.N. 106 (110).

Secs 274 and 326 —The proviso to sec 274 lays down that if in the Court of Session the accused is charged with an offence punishable with death, the jury shall consist of not less than seven persons, and if practicable, of nine persons. In sec 326 it is provided that the number of persons summoned to serve on the jury must not be less than double the number required for the trial. A large number of cases have recently cropped up in the Calcutta High Court as to the effect of these two sections read together, and the result of these decisions may be summed up as follows —

(1) According to the proviso to sec. 274, in a trial of an offence punishable with death, the jury must consist of 9 persons, and before the case can be tried with a jury of 7 persons, it must be shewn that it was not practicable to have a jury of 9 persons—Amir Khan v. K. E., 33 C.W.N. 1053 (1054). But it cannot be said that it was impracticable to have a jury of 9 if an insufficient number of persons have been summoned (under sec. 326) from the jury list. Thus, where only 12 persons were summoned under sec 326, of whom 8 persons appeared, and consequently 9 persons could not be chosen, and so 7 persons were chosen as jurors, held that the jury was not properly constituted, and the trial was illegal—Serajul Islam v Emp, 55 Cal 794, 29 Cr.L.J. 927.

(2) If it is practicable to empanel a jury of 9 persons, it is illegal to choose only 7. Thus, where 14 persons were summoned under sec 326, of whom 11 attended, so that the Judge could have a jury of 9 persons, but he chose only 7, the jury was illegally constituted, and the trial must be set aside—Dwarika v Emp, 33 C.W.N. 692 (693). So also, where 14 persons were summoned, of whom 9 attended, but the Judge empanelled a jury of 7, the jury was not properly constituted and the trial was illegal—Amir Khan v K E., 33 C.W.N. 1053 (1054).

(3) The provision in sec. 326 which speaks of summoning not less than double the number required is not mandatory. Therefore, in a trial of a murder case, which is to be tried by a jury of 9 persons, if 14 persons are summoned, and 9 attend, and the 9 persons are chosen as jurors, the trial is not vitiated. It is not necessary that 18 persons should be summoned under sec. 326—Emp. v Eman Ali, 34 C.W.N. 296 (F.B.)

overruling Emp. v. Munshi Tamizuddin, 33 C.W.N. 1054, where it was held that it was compulsory to summon 18 persons for the constitution of the jury. The Full Bench decision also overrules Amir Khan, 33 C.W.N. 1053, and Dwarika, 33 C.W.N. 692 so far as they lay down that 18 persons must be summoned under sec. 326.

275. (1) In a trial by jury before the High Court or Court of Session of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European or Indian British subject, a majority of the jury shall, if such person before the first juror is called and accepted so requires, consist, in the case of an European British subject, of persons who are Europeans or Americans and, in the case of an Indian British subject, of Indians.

(2) In any such trial by jury of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European (other than an European British subject) or an American, a majority of the jury shall, if practicable and if such European or American before the first juror is called and accepted so requires, consist of persons who are Europeans or Americans.

This section has been redrafted by sec. 14 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. Prior to the amendment, it stood as follows :—

"In a trial by jury before the Court of Session of a person not being an European or an American, a majority of the jury shall, if he so desires, consist of persons who are neither Europeans nor Americans "

The reason of the amendment has been thus stated :—"The most difficult question for the Committee to decide is that of trial by the jury of European British subjects. This is the point on which non-official European opinion is most emphatic, namely that it is essential that a mixed jury should remain both in the High Court and in the Sessions Court in all cases which are to be tried by jury under our proposals, subject however to certain provisions and safeguards, namely :—The same law as to the composition of the jury shall apply to Indians as to Europeans, that is to say, the majority of the jury, if an Indian accused so desires, shall consist of persons who are not Europeans or Americans. This is already the law in Sessions Court, and section 275 should be so amended as to make it apply to the High Court also"

—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, Para. 25.

885. This section must be read as controlled by the provisions of section 528B. That section lays down that if a person does not claim to be dealt with as an Indian subject before the committing Magistrate, he shall not assert the claim at any subsequent stage of the case. It follows, therefore, that if an Indian subject does not claim to be dealt with as such before the committing Presidency Magistrate, he will not be entitled to claim, before the High Court, to be tried by a jury the majority of which must be Indians, according to the provisions of section 275—Emperor v. Harendra, 51 Cal 980 (1911), 29 C W N 384, 26 Cr L J 385. The same result will happen if the claim to be dealt with as an Indian subject is made before the Presidency Magistrate but is rejected by him—Ibid (at p. 990).

A Native Christian is not entitled to say that he must be tried by a Christian jury. But he can, like any other accused, object to the jurors individually—Bharat Chunder Christian, 1 W.R. 2.

276. The jurors shall be chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act as such, in such manner as the High Court may from time to time by rule direct:

Jurors to be chosen by lot.

Provided that—first, pending the issue under this section of rules for any Court, the practice now prevailing in such Court in respect to the choosing of jurors shall be followed;

Existing practice maintained.

secondly, in case of a deficiency of persons summoned, the number of jurors required may, with the leave of the Court, be chosen from such other persons as may be present;

Persons not summoned when eligible.

thirdly, in a trial before any High Court in the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court, Trial before special jurors.

(a) if the accused person is charged with having committed an offence punishable with death, or

(b) if in any other case a Judge of the High Court so directs, the jurors shall be chosen from the special jury list hereinafter prescribed; and fourthly, in any district for which the Local Government has declared that the trial of certain offences may be by special jury, the jurors shall, in any case in which the Judge so directs, be chosen from the special jury list prescribed in section 325.

Change.—In the third proviso, the words “in a trial.....sitting of such High Court” have been substituted for the words “in the presidency towns,” by sec. 77 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The object of this amendment is to include those High Courts which are not situated in Presidency Towns, e g., the High Courts at Allahabad, Lahore, Patna, Rangoon. Similar amendments have been made in sections 315 and 316.

886. ‘Chosen by lot’ :—The object of the Legislature in choosing a jury by lot is to render impossible any intentional selection of jurors to try a particular case, and the accused is entitled to a strict observance of the provisions contained in this section and sec. 279. Irregularities in choosing the jury by lot affect the constitution of the Court, and cannot be cured by sec. 537—Brojendra v. K. E., 7 C.W.N. 188; Bradshaw v. Emp., 33 All. 385, 12 Cr.L.J. 46. In Emp. v. Jhubboo, 8 Cal. 739 and Anipe Pelladu, 1917 M.W.N. 1, 18 Cr.L.J. 15 (16), however, where the Judge himself selected the jurors instead of choosing them by lot, it was held that such a procedure was merely irregular and the verdict would not be interfered with if no prejudice was caused to the accused, and no objection was taken by him to such a procedure at the trial.

The persons who are to be chosen by lot ought to be selected from the entire number of persons summoned to act as jurors, and the selection ought to be made from one box—Reg. v. Vithaldas, 1 Bom. 462.

“In order to nominate a jury for the trial of any prisoner or other person to be tried by a jury, a Sessions Judge shall cause to be put together in one box, cards or pieces of paper containing the names of all the persons summoned to attend, except such of the said persons as shall have been excused by the Sessions Judge from serving on that day in consequence of their having served as jurors on the previous day or for any other cause. Such cards or pieces of paper shall be, as nearly as may be, of equal size, and shall bear the name of one person summoned to attend. The Sessions Judge shall then, in open Court, draw or cause to be drawn, out of the said box, one after another as many of the said cards or pieces of paper as may represent the number of jurors required to try the case, and if any of the jurors whose names shall be so drawn shall not appear or if any be objected to, and the objection be allowed, then such further number shall be drawn as may be necessary to complete the number of jurors required for the case”—Cal. G. R. & C. O
p. 19

Second proviso :—The second proviso provides that in case of a deficiency of persons summoned, the number of the jurors required may, with the leave of the Court, be chosen from such other persons as may be present. Where the Judge acts under this proviso and chooses some jurors from the persons present in Court, it is not necessary for him to choose them by lot. The method of choosing by lot applies only to persons summoned as jurymen and not to persons chosen under the second proviso. This is evident from sec. 279 (2)—In re Anise Pelladu, 1917 M.W.N. 1, 18 Cr.L.J. 15 (16). The words "the jurors shall be chosen by lot" occurring in the first para are not applicable to the second proviso. This proviso does not require that in case of deficiency in the number of persons summoned to act as jurors, the deficient jurors (chosen from bystanders) should be chosen by lot or from among persons who are on the jury list—Gout of Bengal v. Mucha Khan, 29 C.W.N. 652, 26 Cr.L.J. 819. If the Judge is unable to obtain a panel in the manner provided by the second proviso, his duty is to postpone the trial and to summon jurors under the provisions of sec. 326 (2) Bhrendra v. K. E. 7 C.W.N. 188.

The second proviso distinctly lays down that in case of deficiency of persons summoned, other persons must be added to fill up the deficiency. When out of 12 jurors summoned in a case only five attended and those five persons were empanelled as jurors and the Court proceeded to hear and decide the case, held that the provisions of sec. 276 were not complied with and the trial was vitiated. The proper course for the Judge to follow was to choose some other persons, who were present, as jurors, to add their names to those of the jurors who attended, and from the whole body to choose the necessary quorum by lot to act as the jury in the case—Bholanath v. Emp., 44 C.L.J., 541, 28 Cr.L.J. 191, Roshan Ali v. K. E., 31 C.W.N. 1102 (1107), 28 Cr.L.J. 859, Emp. v. Bradshaw, 33 All. 385, Tajali v. Emp., 7 Pat. 50, 28 Cr.L.J. 843 (846). The word 'required' in the second proviso does not mean required to constitute the quorum for a jury, but it means 'required to make up the minimum number of jurors summoned under sec. 326 to attend'—Roshan Ali v. K. E., (supra).

But a contrary view has been taken in the following cases. Thus, where of the persons summoned to act as jurors only five persons appeared and those five persons were appointed jurors, it was held that the procedure followed was not illegal and the trial was not vitiated. It was further held that the provision of choosing jurors by lot in the first para of this section is applicable only when the persons summoned to act as jurors are present in such number as to make it possible to choose them by lot, but when such number is not present, the Judge is to take the help of the persons present in Court to form the jury, according to the second proviso, without any further drawing of lots. The words "deficiency" and "number of jurors required" in the second proviso mean deficiency in the number of jurors required to make up the jury and not to make up a sufficient number for the purpose of selection by lot—Rahamat v. K. E., 54 Cal. 1026, 31 C.W.N. 711 (715) (dissenting from Bholanath, 44 C.L.J. 541). The same view has been taken by the Patna High Court in Alkar Ali v. Emp., 7 Pat. 61, 8 P.L.T. 800, 28 Cr.L.J. 881 (882) (following Mucha Khan, 29 C.W.N. 652, and dissenting from Bholanath, 44 C.L.J. 541).

In the Full Bench case of Kedar Nath Mahato v. K. E. 55 Cal. 371, 32 C.W.N. 221, 29 Cr.L.J. 437, the view taken in Rahamat v. K. E., (supra) has been approved, and the contrary view taken in Bholanath, 44 C.L.J. 541 and Roshan Ali, 31 C.W.N. 1102 disapproved.

277. (1) As each juror is chosen, his name shall be called aloud, and, upon his appearance, the accused shall be asked if he objects to be tried by such juror.

Names of jurors to be called.

(2) Objection may then be taken to such juror by the accused or by the prosecutor, and the grounds of objection shall be stated:

Objection to jurors.

Provided that, in the High Court, objections without grounds stated shall be allowed to the number of eight on behalf of the Crown and eight on behalf of the person or all the persons charged.

Objection without grounds stated.

Where the Judge, instead of hearing and deciding objections, proceeded to exempt some of the persons present merely on their own representations, the procedure was irregular and the irregularity could not be cured by sec 537—Brojendra v. K. E. 7 C.W.N. 188.

278. Any objection taken to a juror on any of the following grounds, if made out to the satisfaction of the Court, shall be allowed:—

Grounds of objection.

- (a) some presumed or actual partiality in the juror;
- (b) some personal grounds, such as alienage, deficiency in the qualification required by any law or rule having the force of law for the time being in force, or being under the age of twenty-one or above the age of sixty years;
- (c) his having by habit or religious vows relinquished all care of worldly affairs;
- (d) his holding any office in or under the Court;
- (e) his executing any duties of police or being entrusted with police duties;

- (f) his having been convicted of any offence which, in the opinion of the Court, renders him unfit to serve on the jury;
- (g) his inability to understand the language in which the evidence is given, or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted;
- (h) any other circumstance which, in the opinion of the Court, renders him improper as a juror.

886A. Clause (a) :—An objection to a juror on the ground that there was a litigation pending between the accused's master and the juror's principal, must be allowed—Tajali v Emp 7 Pat 50, 28 Cr L.J. 843 (844)

Clause (d).—The fact that a person is a clerk in the office of the Magistrate of the district is not sufficient to disqualify him from sitting as a juror—Emp v Rocha 7 Cal 42

279. (1) Every objection taken to a juror shall be decided by the Court, and such decision shall be recorded and be final.

Decision of objection.

(2) If the objection is allowed, the place of such juror shall be supplied by any other juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen in manner provided by section 276, or if there is no such other juror present, then by any other person present in the Court whose name is on the list of jurors, or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury :

Supply of place of juror against whom objection allowed.

Provided that no objection to such juror or other person is taken under section 278 and allowed.

887. Under subsection (1) the trial Judge has a wide discretion in the matter of accepting or overruling objections to jurors, and his decision is final—Govt of Bengal v Muchu, 29 C.W.N 652, 26 Cr.L.J. 819

It is provided in clause (2) that the place of a juror may be taken by any other person present in Court whose name is on the list of jurors or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury. This shows that the legislature contemplated the possibility of a person not in the jury list being chosen to serve on the jury in the case of emergency—Govt. of Bengal v. Muchu Khan, (supra). Under clause (2) the Court may allow some non-summoned persons present in Court to serve on the jury, where by reason of challenges or other causes such as some of them being excused, no summoned jury is left to take the place of the last challenged juror. In such an eventuality some other person present in Court may be empanelled. But this is to take place only in the exceptional conditions stated and in emergent circumstances—Roshan Ali v. K. E., 31 C W N. 1102 (1107), 28 Cr.L.J. 889. This clause lays down that the place of a juror against whom objection has been allowed may be supplied by a juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen in the manner provided by sec. 276, and failing him, by any other person present in Court whose name is on the list of jurors or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury. But the vacancy cannot be filled up by a person who is then not present in Court, by requisitioning him from outside the Court, even though his name is on the special jurors' list—Abedali v. Emp., 56 Cal 835, 33 C W.N. 722, 1929 Cr. C 364.

280. (1) When the jurors have been chosen, they shall appoint one of their number to be foreman.

Foreman of jury.

(2) The foreman shall preside in the debates of the jury, deliver the verdict of the jury, and ask any information from the Court that is required by the jury or any of the jurors.

(3) If a majority of the jury do not, within such time as the Judge thinks reasonable, agree in the appointment of a foreman, he shall be appointed by the Court.

281. When the foreman has been appointed, the jurors shall be sworn under the Indian Oaths Act, 1873.

Swearing of jurors.

282. (1) If, in the course of a trial by jury, at any time before the return of the verdict, any juror, from any sufficient cause, is prevented from attending throughout the trial, or if any juror absents himself and it is not practicable to enforce his attendance, or if it appears that any juror is unable to understand the language in which the evidence is given or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted, a new juror shall be added, or the jury shall be discharged and a new jury chosen.

Procedure when juror ceases to attend, etc.

(2) In each of such cases the trial shall commence anew.

888. 'Unable to understand language':—Where a juror was deaf and blind, he was held to be 'unable to understand the language' of the trial, and was discharged, and the case was tried de novo—Q. E. v. Virasami, 19 Mad. 375.

Illness of juror:—Where a juror is prevented from attending throughout the trial by illness, the Judge has a discretion, under this section, either to postpone the trial to a date on which the juror would be able to attend, or to discharge the jury, or to have another juror. If a juror is going to be able to attend in a very short time, it is a wrong exercise of discretion to discharge the jury—Emp v Monmotha 28 Cr L.J. 141 (143) (Cal.)

Absence of witness—The Judge can discharge the jury owing to the absence of a juror but he cannot do so owing to the absence of a witness—In re Putaswamy, 4 Bom. L.R. 939.

Trial shall commence anew.—Where a juror was discharged and replaced by another, and the trial was not commenced anew, but the Judge called the witnesses who had been examined, read out their statements to them which they admitted to be correct and the trial proceeded, it was held that there was no valid trial—K. E. v. Narain, 36 All. 481, 15 Cr.L.J. 538. But the trial which becomes null and void owing to the incompetence of a juror under this section is not null and void for all purposes. Thus, if a witness has given false evidence during such trial, he can be prosecuted under sec 193 I. P. C. The nullity of the trial will not affect the liability of the witness for prosecution for perjury—Q. E. v. Virasami, 19 Mad. 375.

889. Discharge of jury for misconduct:—After the close of the prosecution case, and before the counsel for the accused called his witnesses, the foreman of the jury informed the Court that they had arrived at an unanimous verdict (which was unfavourable to the prisoner) and did not desire to hear anything more. The Court remarked that the conduct of the jury in arriving at such a verdict before hearing the defence evidence was unfair to the accused and against all principles of justice. The counsel for the accused thereupon pressed for the discharge of the jury for such misconduct and for empanelling a fresh jury. But the Standing Counsel remarked that the case was not covered by sec. 282 or 283 (which were the only sections relating to discharge of the jury during the trial) and the jury could not therefore be discharged; but under instructions from the Advocate-General he entered a nolle prosequi—Emp v Olu Muhammad, 7 C.W.N. xxxi. The point was therefore left undecided in that case, but in another case of the same High Court the question arose again, and it has been decided that although section 282 or 283 does not provide for the discharge of the jury for improper conduct during the trial, (as for instance where some of the jury were seen one day associating with the man who was looking after the case for the accused), nor is it specifically provided by any other section, still the Sessions Judge has an inherent power to discharge the jury for misconduct. But such power is not to be exercised lightly, nor until the Judge has satisfied himself, by some such inquiry, as in the circumstances he can adopt, that reasonable grounds for exercising such a power exist—Rahim Sheikh v. Emp., 50 Cal. 872, Rebati Mohan v. K. E., 32 C.W.N. 945 (947), 56 Cal. 150, 30 Cr.L.J. 435; Abdur Rashid v. Emp., 56 Cal. 1032, 33 C.W.N. 425. In England also, the Judge has the power to discharge the jury for improper conduct, e.g., where one of the jurors had left the box without leave—Reg v. Ward, (1867) 10 Cox, C.C. 573

The discharge of the jury for misconduct is not equivalent to a verdict of acquittal, but the prisoner can be remanded for a fresh trial and a new jury should be empanelled—Reg. v. Davison, (1860) 8 Cox, C.C. 360; Rahim Sheikh v. Emp., 50 Cal. 872. If the jury have misconducted themselves, they may be discharged and a new trial directed with a new jury; but no such action can be taken unless the misconduct has been established by what is regarded as evidence in the eye of the law—Atamfru v. Emp., 51 Cal 418 (430, 431)

If a juror is discharged for misconduct before any hearing of the case takes place at all, it is not necessary for the Judge to discharge the whole jury and empanel a new jury, but he can select another juror from the persons present in Court (sec. 276, second proviso)—Rebati Mohan v. K. E., 32 C.W.N. 945 (947), 56 Cal. 150

283. The Judge may also discharge the jury whenever the prisoner becomes incapable of remaining at the bar.

Discharge of jury in case of sickness of prisoner.

D.—Choosing Assessors.

284. When the trial is to be held with the aid of assessors, not less than three and, if practicable, four shall be chosen from the persons summoned to act as such.

Assessors how chosen.

Change.—The italicised words have been substituted for the words "two or more" by sec. 15 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923 "We add the further recommendation that in all cases triable with the aid of assessors, there shall be, if possible, four, and in any case, not less than three, assessors"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, Para 26

890. Choosing assessors :—The choice of jurors is by lot, but the choice of assessors is entirely with the Judge, who in the exercise of this power should pay every consideration to any reasonable objection raised, although the law does not, as in the case of jurors, provide for objections being taken to an assessor. In the selection of assessors, regard must be had to the nature of the case, to the person tried, and to the public feeling excited. They ought not to be pleaders nor young men fresh from the College and devoid of experience. They ought to be persons of independent conditions in life, men of judgment and experience—Q. v. Ram Dutt, 23 W.R. 35.

Though there is no express provision for objecting to the selection of an assessor, still there is no reason why an objection of presumed or actual partiality should not be allowed, particularly when it is urged at the time of selection of the assessor. The opinions of assessors are of great value both to the Judge who tries the case and to the Superior Courts. It is therefore necessary as an elementary principle that they should be above suspicion. The relationship of landlord and tenant or of master and servant creates an incapacity in a person to sit as an assessor in a case. An objection to an assessor that he is a tenant of the person interested in the prosecution is a valid objection—Shivdhan v Emp., 3 P.L.T. 32, 22 Cr.L.J. 262, 60 I.C. 662.

'From the persons summoned'—The assessors must be chosen from the persons summoned to act as such. The Judge is not competent to select any one to act as an assessor who has not been summoned under sec. 326 or 327. Where out of several persons summoned the Judge selected only one, and he selected two other persons at random from the practically conducted with one assessor only—Q E v Badri 1894 persons present in Court, it was held that the trial was bad, as it was A.W.N. 207; Man Singh v Emp 35 All 570, Balak Singh v K E, 3 P.L.J. 141, 19 Cr.L.J. 363. Where in the absence of assessors duly summoned, the Judge appointed the Nazir of the Court to act as an assessor, the trial was held to be illegal, as the Nazir was not duly summoned, and in choosing assessors there is no provision corresponding to the second proviso to sec. 276 (in choosing jurors)—Khub Singh v. K E., 13 O.C. 337, 11 Cr.L.J. 724. But where a person was summoned to serve as an assessor on a particular date in a particular case and he failed to appear in Court on that date but appeared on a subsequent day when another trial had to commence, and he was selected to act as an assessor in that trial, his selection would not be improper—Chutta v Emp., 17 Cr.L.J. 17 (All.).

Number of assessors.—Under this section as now amended, there must be at least three assessors. A trial held with less than the required number of assessors is null and void, and the illegality cannot be cured by sec. 537—Jairam v. Emp., 20 N.L.R. 129, 25 Cr.L.J. 459, Pragi v Emp. 11 O.L.J. 245; Ram Narain v. Emp., 27 O.C. 213, 26 Cr.L.J. 359. A trial commencing with the aid of one assessor is not a legal trial, and sec. 537 cannot cure the defect—K E. v Jairam, 25 Bom. 694, Q E v Silva, 15 Bom. 514. If there were two assessors (which was the required number prior to the present amendment) but one of them was deaf and blind, there was properly speaking only one assessor and the trial was invalid—Q E. v Babu Lal, 21 All 106, Anonymous, 2 Weir 340.

This section lays down that the number of assessors should be not less than three, and if practicable four. Where four assessors are not chosen, it is right that the Court should give reasons in the order-sheet to explain the impracticability of choosing four. But the trial with three assessors, without the record of these reasons, is not irregular but is still according to law—Jamal v. Emp., 7 P.L.T. 14, 26 Cr.L.J. 713.

Trial without assessors—The trial will be invalid if a portion of the trial which consists in the taking of additional evidence takes place after the discharge of the assessors—Q. E. v. Ram Lal, 15 All. 136.

person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European or Indian British subject, if the European or Indian British subject accused, or where there are several European British subjects accused or several Indian British subjects accused, all of them jointly, before the first assessor is chosen, so require, all the assessors shall, in the case of European British subjects, be persons who are Europeans or Americans, or, in the case of Indian British subjects, be Indians.

(2) In a trial with the aid of assessors of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European (other than an European British subject) or an American, all the assessors shall, if practicable and if such European or American before the first assessor is chosen so requires, be persons who are Europeans or Americans.

This section has been added by sec 16 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. Under this section, Indians and Europeans can claim to be tried before their own countrymen as assessors. "In any district in which for any class of offences Indians are normally triable in a Court of Session with the aid of assessors, and in which no racial considerations are involved, the accused, whether Indian or European, shall be tried with assessors, who, if the accused so claims, shall all be of the nationality of the accused"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, Para 26

Sub-section (2) embodies the old section 460 with certain modifications.

891. The accused, if he intends to avail himself of the provisions of this section, must make a claim to the privilege conferred by it; failure to make a claim will amount to waiver—Ruffe v. Emp, 1912 P.R. 6, 13 Cr.L.J. 197.

assessors, at any time before the finding, any assessor is, from any sufficient cause, prevented from attending throughout the trial, or absents himself, and it is not practicable to enforce his attendance, the trial shall proceed with the aid of the other assessor or assessors.

(2) If all the assessors are prevented from attending, or absent themselves, the proceedings shall be stayed and a new trial shall be held with the aid of fresh assessors.

892. Absence of assessors :—This section contemplates that at least one assessor must attend continuously throughout the trial—K. E. v. Messuruddin, 6 C.W.N. 715; K. E. v. Thurumalai, 24 Mad. 523. Therefore, where in a Sessions trial beginning with three assessors, one of the assessors died at an early stage of the proceedings and later on another assessor became too ill to be present, and the third was absent before the pleader for the defence addressed the Court, it was held that the trial was a nullity—Q. E. v. Md. Mahomed Khan, 13 All. 337.

An assessor who is absent during a part of the trial cannot be allowed to resume his seat as assessor. Once he is absent he ceases to occupy the position of an assessor. Where such an assessor was allowed to resume his seat, and the evidence recorded in his absence was read over to him and he gave his opinion just like the other assessors, it was held that the procedure was not in accordance with law. His opinion ought not to have been taken—K. E. v. Messuruddin 6 C.W.N. 715, Q. E. v. Piso, Ratanlal 695. In a Madras case, however, it has been held that such a procedure is merely irregular but not illegal. Though the proper course would have been to proceed with the trial with the aid of the other assessor alone, and to accept his opinion only, still the fact that the absent assessor was allowed to resume his seat and take part in the trial and give his opinion would not vitiate the opinion of another assessor which was validly given. The assessors merely assist the Court but do not form part of the tribunal which decides the case, and the assessors unlike the jury give their opinions separately and not as members of a body. And the invalidity of the opinion of one does not affect the validity of the opinion of the other—K. E. v. Thurumalai, 24 Mad. 523.

If assessor is an interested person.—Where in the course of a trial it is found that one of the assessors is interested in the trial, and is unfit to sit as an assessor, there is no provision of law to meet such a contingency. In such a case, the proper course is to refer the case to the High Court to set aside the order appointing the incompetent assessor and all subsequent proceedings in the trial. Then the Sessions Judge will be asked by the High Court to choose another assessor and proceed with the trial de novo—Sessions Judge v. Thiagaraja, 1912 M.W.N. 378, 13 Cr.L.J. 473.

person not being an Indian, and such European, Indian British Subject or American is committed for trial before a Court of Session, he and such other person may be tried together, but if he requires to be tried in accordance with the provisions of Section 275 or Section 284A and is so tried, and the other person accused requires to be tried separately, such other person shall be tried separately in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter.

This section has been newly added by sec. 17 of the Criminal-Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. It provides that in cases in which Indians and Europeans are sought to be tried jointly, they can claim to be tried separately before jurors or assessors who are their own countrymen.

E.—Trial to close of cases for Prosecution and Defence.

his case by reading from the Indian Penal Code or other law the description of the offence charged, and stating shortly by what evidence he expects to prove the guilt of the accused.

(2) The prosecutor shall then examine his witnesses.

Trial cannot be postponed:—After the jurors have been chosen, the prosecutor shall open his case, and the trial cannot be postponed to enable the prosecutor to examine a witness by commission—Q. E. v. Jacob, 19 Cal. 113.

893. - Examination of witnesses:—The object of a prosecution is not to secure a conviction but to see that justice be done. The prosecutor is bound to call all the witnesses who prove their connection with the transaction in question, and who also must be able to give important information. If such witnesses are not produced without sufficient reason being shown, the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution—Emp. v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121 (124); Muhamad Yunus v. Emp., 50 Cal. 318 (326); Nayan Mandal v. Emp., 34 C.W.N. 170 (173), Q. E. v. Tulla, 7 All. 904, Brahamdeo v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 161, 21 Cr.L.J. 33, 54 L.C. 241, Imp. v. Jumo, 3 S.L.R. 200, 11 Cr.L.J. 410. The duty of the prosecution is not to secure a conviction but to assist the Court in arriving at the truth, and for that purpose to place before the Court all the material evidence at its disposal—Emp. v. Fateh Chand, 44 Cal. 477 (F.B.), 21 C.W.N. 33; Amrita Lal v. Emp., 42 Cal. 957. All the persons alleged or known to have knowledge of the facts ought to be brought before the Court and examined. The fact that certain witnesses were examined by the committing Magistrate against the express desire of the police officer conducting the prosecution is not a ground for not calling them—Q. E. v. Ram Sahai, 10 Cal. 1070 (1072). All the witnesses who were present at the scene of the crime must be called by the prosecution even if they give contradictory versions, so that the jury may draw their own conclusions from their depositions—Q. E. v. Dhamba, Ratanlal 551; and it is not a sufficient reason not to call such a witness, simply because the opinion he has formed shows an unconscious bias on his part—Munni v Emp., 9 C.W.N. 438. It is the duty of the prosecution to examine important witnesses who are personally eye-witnesses of the occurrence, and the failure of the Public Prosecutor to do so requires explanation—Keshwar Gope v Emp., 1 P.L.T. 491, 21 Cr.L.J. 743, 55 I.C. 247; Ram Ranjan v K. E., 42 Cal. 422. All important eye-witnesses of the scene of occurrence should be examined by the prosecution as to the several facts known to them which are relevant to the case, though other witnesses might have spoken to the same facts. Merely tendering them for cross-examination without examining them, is a practice which should not be encouraged—Veera Koravan, 53 Mad 69, 30 L.W. 701, 1929 Cr C 685 (688). The purpose of a criminal trial is not to support, at all costs, a theory, but to investigate the offence and to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, and the duty of the Public Prosecutor is to represent not the police but the Crown, and this duty should be discharged by him fairly and fearlessly and with a full sense of the responsibility that attaches to his position. The guilt or innocence of the accused is to be determined by the tribunals appointed by law and not according to the tastes of any one else—Ram Ranjan v Emp., 42 Cal 422, 19 C.W.N. 28, 16 Cr.L.J. 170. The prosecutor is not free to choose how much evidence he will bring before the Court; he is bound to produce all the evidence in his power directly bearing upon the charge. It is his duty to call all witnesses who can throw any light on the case, whether they support the prosecution theory or the defence theory—Brahmdeo v Emp., 1 P.L.T. 161, 54 I.C. 241, 21 Cr.L.J. 33; Emp v Dhunno, 8 Cal 121 (124), Kunja v Emp., 8 Pat 289, 1929 Cr. C. 62, 30 Cr.L.J. 675, Mathura v. Emp., 8 Pat. 625, 1929 Cr C 155, and the prosecutor should not refuse to call and examine any witnesses for the prosecution merely because his evidence may in some respects be favourable to the defence—Q. E. v. Durga, 16 All. 84 (F.B.)

But the prosecution is not bound to call, or put into the witness box for cross-examination, any witness whom he believes to be false or whose evidence is unnecessary for the trial—Ramjit v K. E., 2 Pat. 309 (315); Emp v. Reed, 49 Cal. 277; Muhammad Yunus v Emp., 50 Cal. 318; Q. E. v. Durga, 16 All. 84; Emp. v. Balaram, 49 Cal 358 (367), Q. E. v. Stanton, 14 All 521, Q. E. v. Bankhandi, 15 All 6, Emp v Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121, Kami v Crown, 1916 P R 12; Doraisami v. Emp., 45 M L J. 846; or who will misrepresent facts or will misstate what has happened—Munnisonar v. Emp., 9 C.W.N. 438. The prosecution is not bound to call any particular witness when there is reasonable ground for believing that he will not, if called, speak the truth—Emp v Dhunno, 8 Cal.

121 (124); Mathura v. Emp., 8 Pat. 625, 1929 Cr. C 155; Nayan Mandal v. Emp., 34 C.W.N. 170 (171). It is usual in such case to tender the witness for cross-examination—Nayan Mandal, supra, Tulla, 7 All. 904. Although the Court is entitled to draw an inference adverse to the prosecution on the ground that independent eye-witnesses have not been called, still if the witnesses who have been called by the prosecution are worthy of credit, the Court is not entitled to disbelieve them simply because other persons who could have thrown light on the case have not been put before the Court by the prosecution. If the police or Public Prosecutor is of opinion that a witness is likely to give false testimony or that his evidence is unnecessary, he is justified in not sending up or producing that witness, and his absence at the trial ought not to be a reason for disbelieving the other prosecution witnesses if they are otherwise worthy of credit—Rampal v. K E, 2 Pat. 309 (314, 315). 24 Cr.L.J. 801, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 413

All the witnesses who can speak to material facts and who were bound over to appear at the Sessions should be examined. It is not within the province of the Judge to dispense with their evidence, and if the Public Prosecutor does so, he commits an error of judgment—Eruva Perayya, 2 Welr. 379 (380). All the witnesses sent up by the committing Magistrate must be examined, and the Sessions Judge is not competent to pick and choose among them. It is the duty of the Court to examine all such witnesses unless it has good and sufficient reason to believe that the witnesses came to the Court-house with a pre-determined intention of giving false evidence—Q E v Bankhandi 15 All 6; Emp v. Kaliprosanna, 14 Cal 245, Q E v Tulla, 7 All 904. The prosecution is not bound as a matter of procedure to produce at the trial all the witnesses who have been examined before the committing Magistrate, when there is reason to believe that the evidence of such witnesses is not true, although it would be proper for the committing Magistrate to send up those witnesses to the Sessions Judge, so that the credit due to them may be determined by the Judge himself—Ramasami, 2 Welr 378 (379). In Q E. v. Stanton, 14 All. 521, however it has been held that the prosecution is not bound to examine a witness examined before the committing Magistrate except when the committing Magistrate has stated in his order of commitment that he has been influenced by that particular witness in ordering the committal. No further duty is imposed on the prosecution than that of having in attendance every witness examined before the committing Magistrate, so that the witness may be cross-examined or not by the defence counsel as he chooses.

Where there is no ground for disbelieving the witnesses, all the witnesses must be examined; and the trial cannot be stopped, and no final opinion as to the falsehood or insufficiency of the prosecution evidence ought to be arrived at, until all the witnesses have been examined. Thus, where after the examination of some of the witnesses the Judge asked the jury whether they wished to hear any more evidence and they stated that they did not believe the evidence and wished to stop the case,

Where a Judge is succeeded by another, and the latter decides to hold the trial de novo, he must examine the witnesses orally again. If the witnesses' depositions in the previous trial are merely exhibited in the second trial, without actually examining them de novo, the procedure is illegal; even the fact that the accused consented to such a course in order to save cross-examination, will not cure the illegality—Umar Hajeer v. K. E., 46 Mad. 117.

The evidence must be taken in the presence of the accused. It is an irregular procedure to examine witnesses in the absence of the accused and then to read over to the accused the evidence recorded in his absence, the accused being allowed to cross-examine the witnesses. Such a procedure prejudices the accused in his cross-examination and defence—Emp. v. Ram Piri, 5 C.P.L.R. 33.

The prosecution must give positive evidence of the guilt of the accused, and cannot depend upon the weakness of his adversary's case. The Court is concerned not so much with the truth or otherwise of the theory suggested by the accused as with the case for the prosecution. The proof of the case against the prisoners must depend for its support not upon the absence or weakness of explanation on their part, but upon the positive and affirmative evidence of their guilt that is given by the Crown—Mamfru v. Emp., 51 Cal. 418 (425-426).

Witnesses not examined before the committing Magistrate:—The prosecution cannot demand, as of right, that any witness not examined in the preliminary inquiry should be called and examined at the trial. But the Court, if it considers necessary, may call and examine him—Q. E. v. Hayfield, 14 All 212. But the mere fact that a witness has not been examined before a committing Magistrate is no ground for refusing to take the evidence of such witness. There is nothing in the Code which restricts the examination at the trial only to the witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate. But the prosecutor should, as a matter of justice and fairness to the accused, state in his opening address the name of such witness—Q. E. v. Khan Md., 1889 P R. 1.

894. Cross-examination:—As a rule, the cross-examination of a witness should take place after his examination-in-chief, and cannot be postponed. There is no provision of law which authorises the Judge to allow all the prosecution witnesses to be examined at once, and to permit the cross-examination to be reserved to a subsequent date—Gothuri Venkatappa, 2 Weir 381. But though the accused is not entitled to such postponement as of right, still there is no reason why the Sessions Judge should refuse an application for such postponement where the application was a reasonable one under the circumstances of the case—Sadasiv v. Emp., 41 Cal. 299, 15 Cr.L.J. 596.

A Sessions Judge is not justified in stopping the cross-examination and turning the witness out of Court because he is of opinion that the witness is not speaking the truth—Meharban, 1900 A W.N. 149.

Cross-examination of a witness not examined-in-chief:—The ordinary practice in properly constituted Courts is, that where a witness for the prosecution is not examined by the Crown, he is placed in the witness-box in order that the defence may have an opportunity of cross-examining him—Emp. v. Girish Chunder, 5 Cal 614, Emp v Mavsang, 11 Bom. L.R. 1162, 10 Cr.L.J. 538; Q. E. v. Stanton, 14 All 521, Emp v. Kaliprosanna, 14 Cal 245. But there is no provision in the Code analogous to English practice, entitling the prisoner, as a matter of right, to have a witness for the prosecution who is not called, put into the box for cross-examination; and the disallowing of it is no error in law—Reg. v. Fattechand, 5 B.H.C.R. 85; Emp v. Kaliprosanna, 14 Cal 245, Q. E. v. Stanton, 14 All. 521.

287. The examination of the accused duly recorded by or before the committing Magistrate shall be tendered by the prosecutor and read as evidence.

Examination of accused before Magistrate to be evidence.

895. "The examination of the accused":—This section contemplates an examination of the accused, although sec. 209 does not make it imperative on the committing Magistrate to examine the accused—Reg. v. Sita, Ratanlal 100. The examination of the accused recorded by the Magistrate should be put in as part of the case for the prosecution, before the accused is called on to enter on his defence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 361; Cal. G.R. & C.O. p. 23.

The whole of the examination should be read out—Anonymous, 5 M H C.R. App. 4; In re Kamakka, 12 Cr.L.J. 142, 1911 M.W.N. 199. Where the prisoner had made two statements before the Magistrate, the one amounting to a confession of the guilt, and the other to a denial thereof, the trial Court ought to consider both the statements and their relative credibility—Q. v. Soobjan, 10 B L.R. 332; Q. E. v. Mahabir, 18 All. 78.

If in an examination of the accused some objectionable questions have been asked by the committing Magistrate, such questions and the answers thereto must be omitted, but the whole examination should not be excluded from evidence—Khudiram v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625.

This section permits a previous statement of the accused to be read as a part of the case for the prosecution only so far as such statement refers to the offence (i.e. the present offence) for which the accused is being tried, and not so far as it relates to a previous conviction. The portion as to previous conviction cannot be read out to the jury or assessors under sec. 310 until they have given their verdict or opinion—Taka Ahir v. K. E., 5 P.L.J. 706.

Where the accused was examined about a confession which was not admissible in evidence, the questions and answers to them could not be said to be 'duly recorded' as the questions were not such as were allowed by the law to be put; and the these questions were not admissible in evidence against the Gye v. K. E., 4 L P 244, 8 Cr.L.J. 62.

"Committing Magistrate"—The phrase 'committing Magistrate' in secs. 287 and 288 is merely a compendious way of referring to the Magistrate or Magistrates who held the preliminary inquiry on which the committal was made. Where a subordinate Magistrate inquired into a case and discharged the accused, and the District Magistrate acting under sec 436 (now 437) committed the accused for trial, the examination recorded by the subordinate Magistrate would be the examination recorded by the 'committing Magistrate' within the meaning of this section—Sessions Judge v Malunga, 31 Mad 40.

The examination of the accused before the committing Magistrate must be given in evidence at the trial. It is not optional with the prosecution to put in such statement or not. If it is not tendered by the prosecution, the Judge is bound to call for it—Q E v Rama Dewan, 15 Mad 332, In re Ameer Chand, 13 W R 63.

This section requires that the statements made by the accused before the committing Magistrate must be read out to the prisoners at the trial, but it is not necessary for the Judge to ask them specifically if they have any objection to the reception of these confessions—Q v Misser Sheikh, 14 W.R. 9.

288. The evidence of a witness duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Chapter XVIII may, in the discretion of the presiding Judge, if such witness is produced and examined, be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

895A. Change :—The word 'recorded' has been substituted for 'taken', the words "under Chapter XVIII" have been substituted for the words "before the committing Magistrate," and the italicised words at the end of the section have been newly added, by section 78 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "The words 'under Chapter XVIII' have been used in place of 'the committing Magistrate' to cover the case of evidence recorded by a Magistrate, other than the committing Magistrate, under sec 219"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916, Abdul Gani v Emp., 53 Cal. 181, 42 C.L.J. 205, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577. Besides, there is no special procedure laid down in Ch XVIII for recording evidence, and any evidence recorded by a Magistrate before commitment, whether recorded with a view to commitment or in the ordinary course of trial, is evidence 'recorded in the presence of the accused under Ch XVIII'—Abdul Gani v. Emp., (supra).

896. Object and scope of section—This section is intended to provide for the contingency that may arise when a witness who is produced before the Court of Session holds back information and evidence, and tells a different story from that which he gave before the Magistrate in the preliminary inquiry—Emp. v. Alulu, 2 All. 646.

This section refers only to the evidence of witnesses recorded under Chap. XVIII. Statements made by witnesses before a Police officer or to an investigating Magistrate are not contemplated by this section—In re Sankappa, 31 Mad 127, 7 Cr.L.J. 325. A statement made by a witness at a search does not come under this section—Venkat Row v. Emp., 36 Mad. 159. A statement given by a witness before a monigar cannot be used under this section—Malaya v. Emp., 42 M.L.J. 278, 23 Cr.L.J. 262, A I R 1922 Mad. 303.

Evidence of approver:—If an accomplice, to whom a conditional pardon has been tendered, is examined as a witness in the trial, his deposition made before the committing Magistrate may be used as evidence—Q E v. Manna, 1894 P.R. 14; Q. E. v. Soneju, 21 All 175; Q E v Rama Tevan, 15 Mad 352. It may be used as evidence against the accused even if it is retracted at the Sessions trial—Q E v Soneju, 21 All. 175. The reliability of such statement is no doubt injuriously affected by the fact of its being retracted before the Sessions Court, but it does not follow that it is not entitled to any weight or credibility—Punhu v Crown, 8 S.L.R. 203, 16 Cr L J 233.

'Duly taken in the presence of accused'—A statement made in the absence of the accused cannot be treated as evidence against him under this section—Pathana v K E, 1904 P.R. 3; Alimuddin v Q E, 23 Cal 361, Emp. v Gulabu, 35 All. 260, 14 Cr.L.J. 211. So also, where the accused was merely allowed to be present but was not allowed to cross-examine the witnesses before the committing Magistrate, the evidence of such witnesses cannot be said to be duly taken, and cannot be treated as evidence under this section—Q E. v. Sagal, 21 Cal 642. Such ex parte statements by witnesses without the accused being allowed to rebut them by cross-examination is not evidence at all under this section—Ibid.

897. 'Produced and examined'—The evidence of witnesses given before the committing Magistrate may be used as evidence if the witnesses have been produced and examined at the trial, a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a person who has since disappeared is inadmissible in evidence, because the witness is not produced and examined before the Sessions Judge—Ajodhi v Emp., 16 N L R 30, 21 Cr.L.J. 486. Mere producing of the witnesses is not sufficient, they must be examined, where a witness who had been examined by the Committing Magistrate was not examined before the Sessions Judge but was merely tendered for cross-examination by the accused, the procedure was held to be illegal—Subha v Q E, 9 Mad 83, Kottagadu v Emp., 1915 M.W.N. 544, 16 Cr L J 615. Moreover, the deposition given before the committing Magistrate may be treated as evidence, after the witnesses are examined at the trial. The Sessions Judge is not justified in convicting the prisoner solely upon the evidence of the witnesses given before the committing Magistrate without examining them afresh—Q v. Majohar, 24 W.R. 11; Shibdayal v. Emp., 1883 P R 23. This section does not allow the use of the deposition as a substitute for at the trial. This section is not an exception to sec. 286; it does not dispense with the examination of the witnesses directed by sec. 286—Subha v. Q. E., 9 Mad. 83; Q v. Radhy, 1 W.R. 14. Without examining the witness it is improper to read his deposition given before the Magistrate and to ask him if it is true. Such a procedure amounts to putting a leading question to the witness, and it is an implied intimation that the same story is expected from him again—Emp. v. Ram Piare, 5 C.P.L.R. 33. Further, the statements made by a witness before the committing Magistrate should not be read out to the witness in the trial before the defence has had an opportunity of cross-examining him—Narain Das v Crown, 3 Lah 144 (154), 23 Cr L.J. 513.

Moreover, the deposition of the witness before the committing Magistrate can be used as evidence if the witness is examined at the trial as a witness. Where the witness before the committing Magistrate, being found concerned in the offence, was committed to take his trial along with the accused in the case, the deposition in the Magistrate's Court could not be treated as evidence against the accused under this section, he not being a witness in the trial—Shibdayal v Crown, 1883 P R 23.

898. Use of the deposition :—Where a deposition of a witness given before the committing Magistrate is tendered in evidence at the Sessions trial, the Sessions Judge should then and there determine the question of its admissibility and record his reasons for its admission as evidence—Q E. v Vitha, 1 Bom L R 156.

Where the witnesses made certain statements implicating the accused, before the committing Magistrate, but at the trial before the Sessions Judge they resiled from those statements and told an altogether different story, held that the statements made before the committing Magistrate were not merely relevant for the purpose of contradicting or negating the statements made before the Court of Session under sec. 155 Evidence Act, but that under sec. 283 could also be treated as "evidence in the case" i.e. as substantive evidence of all the facts therein deposed to—Maruti v Emp., 46 Bom 97, 63 I.C. 332, 22 Cr.L.J. 636; Amir Zaman v. Crown, 6 Lah. 199, 26 P.L.R. 361, 26 Cr.L.J. 1245; Abdul Gani v. Emp., 53 Cal. 181, 42 C.L.J. 205, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577; Tulli v. Emp., 47 All 276, 26 CrL J 450; Rakka v. Emp., 6 Lah. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 438; Bahadur v. Emp., 19 S L R. 71, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063. A certain witness made a statement before the committing Magistrate, but resiled from that statement before the Sessions Judge, whereupon his statement made before the committing Magistrate was put in evidence under sec. 283, and in order to corroborate this statement, a statement made by that witness before the Police was proved and put in evidence. Held that the statement made before the committing Magistrate was 'testimony' within the meaning of sec 157 of the Evidence Act, and therefore the prior statement made before the Police was admissible in evidence to corroborate the statement made before the committing Magistrate—Mam Chand v. Crown, 5 Lah 324 (328), 25 Cr L J 1201. Where a Sessions Judge, being of opinion that certain prosecution witnesses had been gained over by the accused, allowed their depositions given before the committing Magistrate to be received in evidence, held that this section enabled the Court to treat such depositions as substantive evidence in the case at the trial. Such evidence may be used as much in favour of the defence as of the prosecution, and not merely for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses at the Sessions trial—Q. E. v. Dorai Sami, 24 Mad. 414; Gansa Oraon v. K. E., 2 Pat. 517, 24 Cr.L.J. 641. Depositions of witnesses taken before the committing Magistrate, and subsequently retracted before the Sessions Judge, may, in the discretion of the Judge, be admitted in evidence at the trial in the Sessions Court, and when so admitted, they are on the same footing as any other evidence on the record—Emp. v. Dwarka, 28 All 683; Mamchand v. Emp., 5 Lah. 324 (328), 25 Cr.L.J. 1201; In re Velliah, 45 Mad 766, 43 M.L.J. 222. That is, the evidence recorded by the committing Magistrate, even though retracted in the Sessions Court, may be considered by the jury or by the assessors and the Judge, as part of the material or as substantive evidence upon which the verdict or the finding has to be given—Umar v. Emp., 1887 P.R. 51, Abdul Gani v. Emp., 42 C.L.J. 205; Fazaruddin v. Emp., 42 C.L.J. 111, 26 Cr.L.J. 1553, Emp. v. Basappa, 27 Bom.L.R. 113. But there is nothing in this section which prescribes the value or weight to be attached to the evidence. Whether any portion or the whole of the evidence given before the committing Magistrate is entitled to credit, and if so, to such a degree that a conviction may be based upon it wholly or in part, are very important questions for the jury and the assessors, but they are in no way affected by this section—Umar v. Crown, 1887 P.R. 51. It is a matter for the discretion of the Judge whether such evidence should be used in the interests of justice. In many cases it would be extremely dangerous to rely upon such evidence where the witnesses have proved themselves in the Sessions Court altogether unworthy of credit—Gansa Oraon v. K. E., 2 Pat. 517, 24 Cr.L.J. 641. A Court of Session may admit in evidence the statements made by witnesses before the committing Magistrate, when such evidence is to a certain extent corroborated by independent testimony before itself. If there is no such corroborative evidence, it is not proper to base a conviction solely upon the deposition made before the Magistrate—Q. E. v. Jechohi, 21 All 111; Q. E. v. Jadub Das, 27 Cal 295, Mamchand v. Crown, 5 Lah. 324 (328), 25 Cr.L.J. 1201, Q. E. v. Bharmappa, 12 Mad 123, Q. E. v. Nirmal Das, 22 All 445, Somadu, 47 Mad 232, 25 Cr.L.J. 715; Purliu v. Crown, 1917 P.R. 37, 18 Cr.L.J. 703; Q. E. v. Subraya Ratanlal, 894. A conviction based solely on evidence given by the witnesses before the committing Magistrate and retracted by them at the trial is unsustainable—Sher Dil v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 17, 20 Cr.L.J. 792, 53 I.C. 696. If it were permissible to convict an accused person, relying solely upon the evidence given by a witness before the committing Magistrate, the logical consequence would be the taking of evidence before the Sessions Court might be altogether dispensed with—Q. v. Amanullah, 21 W.R. 49. Evidence given before a committing Magistrate cannot be effectually utilised in support of a conviction unless it is shown by other corroborative evidence that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for the evidence given at the trial—K E v. Jehal Teli, 3 Pat. 781 (794), 6 P.L.T. 53, 26 Cr.L.J. 270; Q E. v. Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295. Where a witness was not examined in the Sessions Court with regard to the particular statements made by him before the committing Magistrate and he did not repeat those statements before the Sessions Court, it was held that the Sessions Judge could not properly admit such statements in evidence under this section, as they were not corroborated—Bajrangi v. Emp., 4 C.W.N. 49. A conviction cannot be based upon statements of witnesses made before the committing Magistrate, when they afterwards came forward before the Sessions Judge and gave only circumstantial evidence insufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the crime—Ghanwara v. Crown, 1915 P.W.R. 15, 16 Cr.L.J. 612.

A Sessions Judge does not show a proper discretion in allowing a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a witness to be used as evidence under this section, when the witness repudiates it at the Sessions and attributes it to improper influence in the course of the investigation, and when the circumstances are such that the Judge cannot rely on it—K E v. Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345. Where a witness, who in the Sessions trial resiles from his deposition given before the Magistrate, states that the latter deposition was made under the influence of the Police, the Judge should exercise a proper discretion in making some inquiry by examining the Inspector of Police regarding the restraint and pressure put upon the witness, before admitting such statement as evidence—Bajrangi v. Emp., 4 C.W.N. 49.

899. "Subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act" :—These words do not mean that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can only be utilized at a trial in a case where the Evidence Act specifically authorises its use. Such a construction is erroneous, because there are only certain sections in the Evidence Act (secs. 32, 33, 145, 155, 157) which can in any way be regarded as even remotely dealing with this subject, but none have any direct bearing. There is indeed in the Evidence Act nothing at all which permits or specifically provides for the use of evidence taken before a Magistrate as evidence at a trial. What is really meant by the words is that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can be used for all purposes in a trial Court so long as the evidence is evidence within the meaning of the Evidence Act. I.e., if the matter contained therein is, according to the rules laid down in the Evidence Act of evidential value. For instance, hearsay evidence taken before a Magistrate would not be capable of being utilized by a Sessions Judge as of evidential value at the trial. These words may also probably mean that the evidence taken before a Magistrate can only be used at the trial subject to the procedure laid down in the Evidence Act—K. E. v. Jehal Teli, 3 Pat. 781 (788-790), 6 P.L.T. 53, 26 Cr.L.J. 270; Bahadur v. Emp., 10 S.L.R. 71, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063.

The words 'for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act' do not mean that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate can be used in the Court of Session only for the purpose of corroboration and contradiction in accordance with sections 155 and 157 of the Evidence Act. Such evidence may be acted upon by the Sessions Court precisely as if that evidence has been deposed to before the Sessions Judge. The words merely mean that the law of evidence enacted in the Evidence Act must be complied with. For instance, evidence which had been wrongly admitted by the committing Magistrate, in violation of the provisions of the Evidence Act, cannot be transferred to the file of the Sessions Judge and used at the trial. The amendment is obviously introduced for the purpose of removing any doubts as to the right of the Court to treat the evidence given before the committing Magistrate as sustantive evidence in the trial, when such evidence has in the discretion of the trial Court been properly brought on that Court's record—Amir Zaman v Crown, 6 Lah 199, 26 P L R. 361, 26 Cr.L.J. 1245; Abdul Gani v Emp., 53 Cal 181, 42 C L J 205, 26 Cr.L.J 1577; Emp. v Basappa, 27 Bom L R. 113, 26 Cr L J 705, *Behari v. Practice and procedure :—The counsel for the prisoner is not entitled to refer to the deposition for the purpose of contradicting the witness without having drawn the attention of the witness to the alleged contradiction in his deposition, and without having given him an opportunity of explaining it—*Emp. v. Before a Judge can use as evidence the deposition given before the Magistrate, he is bound to let his intention, or the possibility that he may do so, be known to the accused and to the prosecution, in order to afford the accused and the prosecution an opportunity for testing such statement by cross-examination or otherwise dealing with such statement as part of the case which may be taken into consideration by the Judge. Otherwise it is impossible for the prosecution or the defence to deal with the matters which may influence the Judge's mind in coming to a decision—Emp. v Behari, 1886 A.W.N. 256; Musa v Emp., 30 Cr L J 333 (Nag.).

The Judge is bound to put to the witnesses, whom he proposes to contradict by their previous statements, the whole or such portion of their depositions as he intends to rely upon, so as to afford them an opportunity of explaining their meaning or denying that they had made any such statements and so forth—Q E v Dan Sahai 7 All 862; Sadar Din v Emp., 10 Lah L.J. 460, 29 Cr L J 1047 (1048).

Power of High Court :—Where, in an appeal, the High Court was of opinion that the statements made before the committing Magistrate by certain witnesses who were also examined before the Sessions Judge, should have been brought upon the record by the exercise of the powers conferred by section 288, it directed the Sessions Judge to take proceedings for the purpose, after giving notice to the accused persons that it was proposed to use those statements against them—Nagina v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 947, 27 Cr.L.J. 813, 95 I.C. 477.

289. (1) When the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution and the examination (if any) of the accused are concluded, the accused shall be asked whether he means to adduce evidence.

Procedure after examination of witnesses for prosecution

(2) If he says that he does not, the prosecutor may sum up his case; and if the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, it may then, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, record a finding, or in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict, of not guilty.

(3) If the accused, or any one of several accused, says that he means to adduce evidence and the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, the Court may then, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, record a finding, or in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict, of not guilty.

(4) If the accused, or any one of several accused, says that he means to adduce evidence, and the Court considers that there is evidence that he committed the offence, or if, on his saying that he does not mean to adduce evidence, the prosecutor sums up his case and the Court considers that there is evidence that the accused committed the offence, the Court shall call on the accused to enter on his defence.

901. Examination of the accused :—The words "if any" in this section show that although under sec. 342 it is imperative on the Judge to examine the accused, still the examination may be dispensed with in some cases, e.g. where the accused has admitted his guilt and had been examined by the committing Magistrate—Khudiram Bose v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625.

Sum up :—The prosecution has a right to sum up under sub-section (2) when all the accused say that they do not mean to adduce evidence—Q. E. v. Sadanand, 18 Bom. 364.

902. 'No evidence' :—Sub-section (2) or (3) applies only where there is no evidence, and would not cover cases where the Court considers that the charge is itself improper—Dwarka Lal v. Mahadeo, 12 All. 551.

When there is no evidence, the jury should be directed to find a verdict of not guilty; and it is wrong to leave it to the jury to say whether the accused is guilty or not guilty—Q. v. Greedhary, 7 W.R. 39. When there is no evidence which can, if believed, amount to proof, the case should not be put to the jury at all, as a verdict of guilty, if the jury returns such a verdict, cannot under such circumstances be sustained—Q. v. Rutton Das, 16 W.R. 19.

The words 'no evidence' do not mean "no satisfactory, trustworthy or conclusive evidence." If the Court is satisfied that there is not upon the record any evidence which, even if it were perfectly true, would amount to legal proof of the offence charged against the accused, then the Court has power, without consulting the assessors, to record a finding of not guilty, but the Sessions Judge has no such power merely because he considers the evidence untrustworthy, or unsatisfactory or inconclusive. It is not the intention of the Legislature that the assessors or the jury should give their opinion or verdict in those cases only where the Judge is inclined to believe the evidence for the prosecution—Q. E. v. Munna Lal, 10 All. 414; Q. E. v. Vajram, 16 Bom. 414. A court can acquit the accused under sec. 289 only in a case in which there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence. So, if there is any direct evidence which, if believed, would establish the offence, the accused must be called upon to enter upon his defence, and the trial should be completely gone through, even though the Sessions Judge himself did not believe the evidence—Pub Pro v. Nall Goundan, 2 Weir 382. The case can be withdrawn from the jury only on the ground that there is no evidence at all, and not on the ground that the Judge disbelieved the evidence for the prosecution on the strength of the medical evidence—Hurroo Shaha, 16 W.R. 20.

The accused must be acquitted under this section if there is no evidence on the prosecution side and he cannot be convicted on the evidence given against him by the witnesses called by the co-accused in his defence—In re Raghava, 5 M.L.T. 75, 10 Cr.L.J. 68.

When a judgment of acquittal is recorded under this section, the opinions of the assessors need not be recorded—Reg v. Parvati, 7 B.H.C.R. 82.

Finding of "not proven" :—The Code does not provide for a finding of "not proven." The proper course is to record a finding of "not guilty"—Korada Gummanna, 2 Weir 391.

903. Defence :—A criminal case ought not to be adjudged on mere probabilities. The burden of proof is always on the Crown and not to any extent on the accused; and unless the evidence is of such a nature as to enable the Court to judge rather than conjecture, the accused should not be called upon to make his defence—Q. E. v. Ganesh, Ratanlal 712; Q. E. v. Narayan, Ratanlal 719

It is not a mere formality, but an essential part of the criminal trial, to call upon the accused to enter on his defence; and omission to do so is not a mere irregularity curable by Sec. 537—Q. E. v. Imam Ali, 23 Cal. 252. In Premgir v. Emp., 16 A.L.J. 41, 19 Cr.L.J. 209, 43 I C 785, however, the omission to call upon the accused to enter on his defence was held to be a mere irregularity cured by Sec. 537, unless the accused was prejudiced thereby.

The accused shall be called upon to adduce evidence after the prosecution witnesses are examined, for it is only when sufficient evidence has been produced that he can be called on to enter upon his defence. It is extremely irregular to examine the defence witnesses before the close of the prosecution evidence; but the conviction will not be set aside if this irregularity has not prejudiced the accused—In re Turibulloh, 4 C.L.R. 338.

If the accused has not his witnesses present, the Judge may postpone the case—In re Kali Prosunno, 23 W.R. 58.

290. The accused or his pleader may then open his case, stating the facts or law on which he intends to rely, and making such comments as he thinks necessary on the evidence for the prosecution. He may then examine his witnesses (if any) and after their cross-examination and re-examination (if any) may sum up his case.

904. Examination of defence witnesses :—The accused is at liberty to meet the case in any way he likes. He can, as to the whole or any part of the case against him, rely on the witnesses for the prosecution, or may call fresh evidence himself. No adverse inference will be drawn against him, if he does not produce or examine any witnesses—Emp. v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121; Hurry Churn v. Emp., 10 Cal. 140; Ashraf Ali v. K. E., 21 C.W.N. 1152 (per Huda J.). But where a prima facie case of circumstances making out or tending to support the charge against the accused is established, and he withholds evidence in disproof or explanation available to him and not accessible to the prosecution, an inference unfavourable to the accused may legitimately be drawn—Ashraf Ali v. K. E., 21 C.W.N. 1152 (per Teunon J.).

When the accused are being tried separately, each would be a competent witness at the trial of the other—Emp. v. Durant, 23 Bom. 213; v. Puna, 16 Bom. 661.

The burden lies on the prosecution to prove beyond all reasonable doubt that the offence was committed by the accused. If the prosecution cannot prove the guilt of the accused beyond all doubt, the accused is under no obligation to explain how the offence was committed or who committed the offence or by what means—Q E v Jethmal, Ratanlal 686. When there is no prima facie evidence sufficient to convict the accused, he is not under any obligation to explain to the Court his movements at the time of the offence—Q E v Bepin, 10 Cal. 970.

The record is not complete unless it shows the nature of the defence set up. If the accused makes any statement, it must be recorded. If he makes no statement or refuses to answer when called upon to enter upon his defence, a note should be made accordingly, and when there is nothing to show the nature of the defence, a note of the address to the Court (if any) should be recorded—In re Gopal Hajaga, 15 W R 16.

905. Cross-examination.—An accused person must be allowed to cross-examine the witnesses called by another co-accused for his defence, if the case of the latter is adverse to that of the former—Ram Chand v Hanif, 21 Cal 401. But the accused cannot cross-examine his own witnesses. Thus, where a prosecution witness was examined before the committing Magistrate but was not called in the Sessions Court, and thereupon the counsel for the defence examined him, he would be treated as a witness for the defence, and the defence counsel was not entitled to cross-examine him, unless it appeared that the witness was suppressing the truth or was lying or refusing to give information—Q E. v. Zawar Husen, 20 All. 155.

291. The accused shall be allowed to examine any witness not previously named by him, if such witness is in attendance; but he shall not, except as provided in sections 211 and 231, be entitled of right to have any witness summoned, other than the witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate by whom he was committed for trial.

Right of accused as to examination and summoning of witnesses.

906. Summoning witnesses :—The accused is entitled as a matter of right to secure the attendance of all witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate—Q v. Bhoolun, 2 W.R. 6; Q. v. Islam, 15 W.R. 34; Q. v. Prosunno, 23 W.R. 56; and a conviction without summoning and examining the defence witnesses is liable to be set aside—Q. v. Mookun, 12 W.R. 22; Fazluddin v. K. E., 47 Cal. 753.

If some of the witnesses whose names have been entered in the list given to the committing Magistrate (under sec. 211) fail to appear in the Sessions Court, the Judge ought to summon them, and he cannot refuse to do so on the ground that the application for summons has been made at a late stage of the trial (viz at a time when the examination of the

E. v. Zawar Husen*, 20 All. 155.

291. The accused shall be allowed to examine any witness not previously named by him, if such witness is in attendance; but he shall not, except as provided in sections 211 and 231, be entitled of right to have any witness summoned, other than the witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate by whom he was committed for trial.

Right of accused as to examination and summoning of witnesses.

906. Summoning witnesses:—The accused is entitled as a matter of right to secure the attendance of all witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate—Q. v. Bhoolun, 2 W.R. 6; Q. v. Islam, 15 W.R. 34; Q. v. Prosunno, 23 W.R. 56; and a conviction without summoning and examining the defence witnesses is liable to be set aside—Q. v. Mookun, 12 W.R. 22; Faizuddin v. K. E., 47 Cal. 758.

If some of the witnesses whose names have been entered in the list given to the committing Magistrate (under sec. 211) fail to appear in the Sessions Court, the Judge ought to summon them, and he cannot refuse to do so on the ground that the application for summons has been made at a late stage of the trial (viz. at a time when the examination of the other defence witnesses has been ended and the case is ready for arguments)—Faizuddin v. K. E., 47 Cal. 758, 24 C.W.N. 527, 21 Cr.L.J. 842

The accused person cannot however require the Sessions Judge, as of right, to summon and examine witnesses other than those named in the list—Q. v. Baidnath, 3 W.R. 29. And the Judge's refusal to grant an adjournment to summon a witness not named in the list is not illegal—Nazir Singh v. Emp., 7 Lah.L.J. 428, 26 P.L.R. 767. But the Sessions Judge has an inherent power, if he thinks proper to exercise it, to summon those witnesses—In re Raja of Kantil, 8 All. 668.

A Sessions Judge should not refuse to enforce the attendance of certain witnesses for the defence, on the ground that there is ample evidence on the record about the matter; it is for the accused person and not for the Judge to say what amount of evidence it would be proper to place before the jury in order to establish the case for the defence—Brojendra v. K. E., 7 C.W.N. 188.

Prosecutor's right of reply. 292. The prosecutor shall be entitled to reply—

- (a) if the accused or any of the accused adduces any oral evidence; or
- (b) with the permission of the Court, on a point of law; or
- (c) with the permission of the Court, when any document which does not need to be proved is produced by any accused person after he enters on his defence;

Provided that in the case referred to in clause (c) the reply shall, unless the Court otherwise permits, be restricted to comment on the document so produced.

Change :—This section has been redrafted by section 79 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Prior to this amendment, the section stood as follows :—

"292. If the accused or any of the accused adduces any evidence, the prosecutor shall be entitled to reply."

Clauses (a) and (b) have been drafted by the Joint Committee (1922) and clause (c) has been added during the debate in the Assembly on the motion of Mr. Srinivasa Rao. See the Legislative Assembly Debates, February 7, 1923, page 2011.

907. Object and scope of section :—The object of the law in this section is to let each side have an opportunity of commenting on the evidence of the other, and not to give an additional advantage to the prosecution. Therefore, where the defence counsel first said that he meant to adduce evidence, but afterwards informed the Court that he did not mean to call evidence, the Judge should not allow the right of reply—Hurry Churn v. Emp., 10 Cal. 140. This section makes the right of reply dependent upon the fact of evidence having been actually adduced—Emp v Bhaskar, 30 Bom. 421; Emp. v Abdul Ali, 11 Bom L.R. 177, 9 Cr.L.J. 284. Under the Code of 1882, the prosecutor had a right of reply, if the accused "stated that he meant to adduce evidence," whether he did or did not actually adduce evidence.

908. What amounts to adducing evidence.—The putting in of the depositions of certain prosecution witnesses made before the committing Magistrate and of the statements of the accused made under sec. 162 to a Police constable, forming part of the record sent up by the Magistrate, cannot be said to be adducing evidence by the accused within the meaning of this section. The tender of them as evidence by the accused is merely an application to the Judge for the exercise of the discretion vested in him by sec 288—Emp v Stewart, 31 Cal 1050.

The prosecution shall be entitled to reply if the documentary evidence for the defence is adduced after the case for the prosecution is closed—Emp. v Sreenath, 43 Cal. 426, 17 Cr.L.J. 423. See clause (c) of the section. Therefore, where during the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and before entering upon his defence, the accused puts in some documentary evidence, it does not give a right of reply to the Crown, because so long as the case is in the hands of the prosecution, the putting in of documents cannot be said to take the prosecution by surprise, and this is the correct test for determining whether the prosecution should have the right of reply—Emp. v Timol, 10 C.W.N. cclxvii; Emp v. Kaliprosanna, 14 Cal 245, Q. E. v Solomon, 17 Cal. 930; Emp. v. Sreenath, 43 Cal 426, Q v Greesh, 10 Cal 1024; Q E v. Krishnaji, 14 Bom 436, K. E v Berch, 7 L.B.R. 84, 15 Cr.L.J. 241 [Contra—Q E v Hayfield, 14 All 212, Q E. v Venkatapathi, 11 Mad. 339; Q E v Moss, 16 All. 88, Emp v. Bhaskar, 30 Bom. 421; K. E. v. Manuel, 4 L B R 5 and Crown v Bhuro, 1 S L.R. 91; in these cases it has been held that the prosecution is entitled to a right of reply even if any documentary evidence is put in by the defence before the close of the evidence for the prosecution (e.g. if any document is produced by the defence during the cross-examination of a prosecution witness). This view is no longer correct by reason of clause (c) newly added in the section.]

If, while the case for the prosecution is going on, the defence in his cross-examination utilises a witness for the prosecution to his own advantage or puts in a lot of documentary matter through such witness, it cannot deprive him of his right to the last word, because it does not amount to adducing evidence for the defence—Emp. v. Abdul Ali, 11 Bom.L.R. 177, 9 Cr.L.J. 284

909. Reply.—Reply means reply generally to the whole case. Even if one of the accused calls witnesses, and the others do not, the prosecution is entitled to reply not merely on the evidence adduced by one of the accused, but generally on the whole case. It is not the intention of this section that the prosecution is to sum up as to such of the accused as do not call evidence, and to reply only on the evidence adduced by the others—Q. E. v. Sadanand, 18 Bom. 364.

293. (1) Whenever the Court thinks that the jury or assessors should view the place in which the offence charged is alleged to have been committed, or any other place in which any other transaction material to the trial is alleged to have occurred, the Court shall make an order to that effect, and the jury or assessors shall be conducted in a body, under the care of an officer of the Court, to such place which shall be shown to them by a person appointed by the Court.

(2) Such officer shall not, except with the permission of the Court, suffer any other person to speak to, or hold any communication with, any of the jury or assessors, and unless the Court otherwise directs, they shall, when the view is finished, be immediately conducted back into Court.

This section speaks of the view of the locus in quo by jurors and assessors, whereas section 539B relates to the view of the place by Judges and Magistrates.

Examination of witness, not permitted.—The assessors can only view the scene of the alleged offence, and cannot examine any witnesses on the spot; because by sub-section (2) the officer conducting the jurors or assessors to the spot cannot suffer any other person to speak to them—Q. v. Chutterdharee, 5 W R 59

294. If a juror or assessor is personally acquainted with any relevant fact, it is his duty to inform the Judge that such is the case, whereupon he may be sworn, examined, cross-examined and re-examined in the same manner as any other witness.

295. If a trial is adjourned, the jury or assessors shall attend at the adjourned sitting, and at every subsequent sitting, until the conclusion of the trial.

910. When trial should be adjourned :—A Judge is bound to adjourn a case in which a witness summoned for the defence is absent, especially if he is a material witness and the case cannot be satisfactorily decided in his absence—Q. v. Ishan, 15 W.R. 34; Q. v. Rajnarain, 18 W R 20; In re Kali Prasanna, 23 W.R. 58. But under such circumstances the Judge will not be justified in discharging the jury in the midst of a trial and adjourn the case to the next Sessions—In re Putansamy, 4 Bom.L.R. 939

296. The High Court may, from time to time, make rules as to keeping the jury together during a trial before such Locking up jury.

Court lasting for more than one day; and subject to such rules the presiding Judge may order whether and in what manner the jurors shall be kept together under the charge of an officer of the Court, or whether they shall be allowed to return to their respective homes.

In every case involving the punishment of death or of transportation for life in which the trial lasts for more than one day, the jury should be kept together during the trial by the Sheriff or Deputy Sheriff or such other officer as the presiding Judge may appoint for that purpose; and in every other case in which the trial shall last for more than one day, it shall be in the discretion of the presiding Judge whether the jury shall be kept together in manner aforesaid or shall be allowed to return to their respective homes—Bombay Gazette, 1875, Part I, p 653 .

F.—Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried by Jury.

297. In cases tried by jury, when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court shall proceed to charge the jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided.

911. "When the case are concluded" :—This section specially enacts that the Judge shall only charge the jury when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply are concluded, i.e. after all the evidence has been taken on both sides, and the counsel of both parties have finished addressing the jury. A Judge who charges the jury and takes verdict as regards some only of the accused, and afterwards hears arguments and takes verdict as regards the remaining accused, will be acting irregularly and contrary to the provisions of this section—Abdul Hameed, 36 Mad 585, 15 Cr.L.J. 197. After the witnesses for the prosecution and a certain number of witnesses for the defence had been examined, the foreman of the jury asked if the defence could not cut down the number of witnesses they had summoned; the defence thereupon agreed to dispense with all further witnesses save one. The Judge taking the foreman's intervention as an indication that the jury had decided to acquit, proceeded to charge the jury upon the case as it stood. The jury however found the accused guilty, whereupon the Judge ordered of summing up the case is to present the jury, as materially and impartially as he can, a summary of the evidence and the considerations and inferences to be drawn from the evidence, and as they appear both on the negative and the affirmative sides of the case—Enayet Hussain v. Emp., 49 All 209, 28 Cr.L.J. 15. The jurors ordinarily are not men who are used to weighing the evidence and it is therefore necessary that all help should be given to them in the light of the observations made by eminent Judges in the decided cases—Abdul Gani v. K. E., 53 Cal. 181, 42 C.L.J. 205. Where the Judge did not sum up the evidence at all but simply charged the jury with these words—"It is for you to say from the evidence you have heard whether you consider the accused guilty or not," it was held that the charge was wholly insufficient, and a retrial was ordered in the case—Emp. v. Badal, 1902 A.W.N. 201. Where the Judge did not sum up the evidence to the jury, but only treated it generally and called it a very poor evidence which standing alone amounted to nothing, it was held that the charge to the jury was defective—Q. E. v. Gangia, 23 Bom. 316. But it is not necessary for the Judge, in his charge to the jury, to go into the minutest details in the evidence—Samaruddin v. Emp., 40 Cal. 367, 13 Cr.L.J. 821. It is impossible for the Judge to state every item of the evidence or to draw the attention of the jury to every fact which has been deposed; but he can, without difficulty, give a summary of the leading points of the evidence and the considerations and inferences to be drawn from it on the one side or on the other—Enayet Hussain v. Emp., 49 All. 209, 28 Cr.L.J. 15; Jati Mali v. Emp., 33 C.W.N. 918, 1929 Cr.C. 477.

In summing up the case, the Judge must analyse the evidence and place before the jury all facts which legitimately arise in favour of the accused—Emp. v. Rajab Ali, 31 C.W.N. 881, 28 Cr.L.J. 742 (744); Emp. v. Mira, 6 Bom.L.R. 31; and this he must do, even though the pleader for the accused thought it unnecessary to place much reliance on the defence of the accused—In re Sangan, 17 Cr.L.J. 19 (Mad.). Where the charge to the jury was entirely one-sided, and the jury were practically told that there was no doubt as to the facts of the case and that there was no use of considering the matter from any point of view other than that presented by the prosecution, held that the charge was entirely defective, and there must be a retrial—Emp. v. Rajab Ali, supra; Tajali Mian v. Emp., 7 Pat. 50, 28 Cr.L.J. 843 (846). The Judge is entitled to have regard to the elaboration and skill with which the rival contentions have been placed before the jury by the advocates on both sides, but he cannot omit any matters of prime importance, especially if they favour the accused, merely because they have been elaborately discussed by the advocate—Emp. v. Maigowda, 27 Bom. 644; Emp. v. Munhwasayo, 3 S.L.R. 102, 11 Cr.L.J. 13; Emp. v. Fakira, 40 Bom. 220. So also, he cannot omit to draw the attention of the jury to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused, notwithstanding that it has escaped the counsel of the accused—K. E. v. Upendra, 19 C.W.N. 653 (F.B.), 16 Cr.L.J. 561. Omission to put the material facts or to put the defence to the jury is sufficient to cause the High Court to quash the conviction if this Court comes to the conclusion that the verdict of the jury was affected thereby—K. E. v. Barendra, 28 C.W.N. 170 (109); R v Hill, (1911) 7 Cr App Rep. 26; R. v. Wilson, (1913) 9 Cr. App. Rep. 124; R. v. Smith, (1920) 81 J.P. 67. But where the Judge made a reference to the statement made by the accused, the mere omission to draw the attention of the jury to the defence of the accused is not a misdirection and does not vitiate the trial—K. E. v. Barendra Kumar Ghose, 28 C.W.N. 170, 38 C.L.J. 411 (Sankarilola Postmaster Murder Case). The Judge is to put everything in favour of the accused before the jury, but he is not bound to do anything more. It is not his business to assume the part of the defence counsel. It is his duty to place the evidence before the jury as he finds it, and though the inference left to be drawn reasonably is that it would be unsafe to accept this evidence, it is certainly open to the jury to believe what the witness said, and to accept it if they choose to do so. In such a case it cannot be said that there was any misdirection—Samiuddin v. Emp., 32 C.W.N. 616 (619), 29 Cr.L.J. 497.

If there are material discrepancies in the evidence, the Judge should point out to the jury where those discrepancies are. Merely telling the jury that there are discrepancies without telling them anything about those discrepancies, is a misdirection—Enayet Husain v. Emp., 49 All. 209, 28 Cr.L.J. 15.

The Judge must be careful not to usurp the functions of the advocate, and should present the evidence of the case to the jury in a dispassionate and impartial manner without expressing any opinion on the reliability of the evidence on either side—K. E. v. Taribullah, 25 C.W.N. 682, 23 Cr.L.J. 244.

In cases of very serious offences, and where the evidence is merely circumstantial, the evidence should be read over in extenso to the jury (and not merely summed up)—Reg. v. Fateh Chand, 5 B.H.C.R. 85. Where the trial has been a prolonged one, the Judge ought to read over to the jury in extenso the important testimonies in the trial—Q. E. v. Fakira, Ratanlal 850. But an omission to read out the material portions of the evidence is not in itself sufficient for the reversal of the verdict of the jury. In each case it must be a question whether such omission was such as to mislead the jury, and the Appellate Court will not interfere unless it has prejudiced the accused—Emp. v. Appunna, 5 Bom.L.R. 207.

The law does not expressly require a Judge to formulate, at the conclusion of the delivery of his charge, specific questions for the jurors' reply. Such a practice is however helpful in deciding the legal effect of the Judge's finding, but the formulation of such questions requires great care, and the queries should be confined within the narrowest possible compass—Rupan Singh v. K. E., 4 Pat 626, 27 Cr.L.J. 49.

§14. "Laying down the law":—It is the duty of the Judge to give a direction upon the law to the jury so far as to make them understand the law as bearing upon the facts, and to enable them to decide

915. Misdirection to jury :—Examples :—(1) Omission to give the jury a sufficient explanation of the law so as to enable them to decide the point at issue is a misdirection—Emp. v. Jhubboo, 8 Cal. 739; Biru v. Q. E., 25 Cal. 561, Sugaligadu, 2 Weir 500; In re Palavesa Tevan, 12 Cr.L.J. 140, 9 M.L.T. 345; Abbas v. Q. E., 25 Cal. 736. Thus, where in a dacoity case, the Judge stated to the jury: "Dacoity is committed when any number of persons not less than five conjointly commit robbery" but did not explain to the jury what was necessary to constitute the offence of robbery, it was an omission to lay down the law, and amounted to a misdirection—Mari Valayan v. Emp., 30 Mad. 44; Nawab Ali v. K. E., 11 O.L.J. 315, 25 Cr.L.J. 1129. So also, omission to explain to the jury the difference between murder and culpable homicide, or to tell them under what view of the facts the accused ought to be convicted of murder or culpable homicide or to be acquitted, is a misdirection—Hla Gyi v. K. E., 3 L.B.R. 75. Where the act of the accused was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death and thus came within the definition of murder (punishable under sec. 302 I. P. C.) and the Judge himself described the act to the jury as "imminently dangerous" but said that the offence was punishable under section 304 I. P. C. (culpable homicide not amounting to murder), held that there was a misdirection in not explaining to the jury as to how the act which he himself described as "imminently dangerous" was rendered punishable under section 304 I. P. C.—Muhammad Yunus v. Emp., 50 Cal. 318 (324). In a case of criminal breach of trust, the Judge should tell the jury that the test they are to apply is whether the circumstances relied upon by the accused showed an intention of causing "wrongful gain" or "wrongful loss," and the Judge should also explain the meaning of these terms. Omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Browne v. K. E., 7 Bur. L.T. 20. It is a misdirection not to adequately explain to the jury the law in regard to abetment—Hemanta Kumar v. Emp., 47 Cal. 46; or the law in regard to onus of proof—Abdul Gohur v. K. E., 26 C.W.N. 972, 36 C.L.J. 152, 24 Cr.L.J. 76.

(2) Failure to call the attention of the jury to the different elements constituting the offence is a misdirection—Taju Pramanik v. K. E., 25 Cal. 711. Thus, where in a case of murder, the Judge simply asked the jury to find whether the prisoner inflicted the injuries on the deceased, it was held to be a misdirection; the jury ought to have been asked to find as to the intention of the accused to cause death or the knowledge that he was likely to cause death—Q. E. v. Babya, 1 Bom. L.R. 784; Natabar v. Emp., 35 Cal. 531. Similarly, where in a case under secs. 474 and 475 I. P. C., the Judge told the jury that the only issue which they had to decide was whether the forged documents were in the possession of the accused, ignoring altogether the question of knowledge combined with intention which is so absolutely requisite to justify a conviction under sec. 474 I. P. C., it was held that the Judge had misdirected the jury—Q. E. v. Abaji, 16 Bom. 165. Where in a case of retaining stolen property, the Judge directed the jury to decide whether the property was stolen and whether it was retained by the accused, without asking them to decide whether the accused knew or had reason to believe the property to be stolen, it was held that this amounted to a misdirection—Q. E. v. Balya, 15 Bom. 369. So also, in a case of receiving property stolen in the commission of a dacoity (sec. 412 I. P. C.) the Judge directed the jury to the effect that if they found that the properties were properly identified as having been the properties stolen at the time of the dacoity, and were found in the accused's possession, they were bound to presume the accused's guilt, but the jury were not properly directed that it was their duty to weigh all the circumstances of the case and consider the accused's explanation and then decide whether or not they should make such a presumption; held that this was a serious misdirection—Satya Charan v Emp, 52 Cal 223, 26 Cr L.J. 1155.

(3) Failure to point out to the jury as to the relevancy or otherwise of a confession made under inducement, and merely telling the jury that if the confession was true it was enough to warrant the conviction of the accused, is a misdirection—Thandraya v Emp, 26 Mad. 38. See notes under sec 298.

(4) Omission to explain to the jury the attitude to be taken towards a retracted confession as evidence against a co-accused, is a misdirection—Hemanta v Emp, 47 Cal 46. Where the Sessions Judge directed the jury that the retracted confession of a co-accused is practically of no value against any body but the confessor, but asked the jury to take into consideration the confession while considering the cases of the other two co-accused individually, held that this was a misdirection, as it was likely to prejudice the jury and lead them to give some weight to such statements when they should have disregarded them altogether—In re Ibrahim, 42 C L.J. 496, 26 Cr.L.J. 1146.

It is a misdirection to tell the jury that the retracted confessions are not to be held true unless they are corroborated by independent reliable evidence, because there is no rule of law that a retracted confession must be supported by independent reliable evidence corroborating it in material particulars—Q. E. v Gangia, 23 Bom. 316. (Contra—Q. E. v. Mahabir, 18 All 78; Azimuddy v Emp., 31 C W.N. 410, 28 Cr.L.J. 485; Cholakel, 2 Weir 507, Karretu Venkalasami, 2 Weir 509, and Sokhan, 2 Weir 509, where it has been held that if a confession is subsequently retracted and it is not corroborated by independent evidence, the Judge should point out to the jury that it is not safe to rely on the retracted confession unless it is corroborated by independent reliable evidence, and an omission to point this out to the jury amounts to a misdirection). It is also a misdirection to the jury to tell them to leave out of consideration the retracted confessions of the accused—Papakla, 8 M.L.T. 372, 8 I.C. 573. The question to be put to the jury regarding such confessions is not whether they are corroborated by independent evidence but whether having regard to the circumstances under which they were made and retracted and all the circumstances connected with them, it was more probable that the original confessions or the statements retracting them were true. An omission on the part of the Judge to put this question to the jury amounts to a misdirection—Q. E v Raman, 21 Mad 83.

Where the Sessions Judge at first dealt with the confession of an accused, and pointed out in clear and unambiguous language that the confession having been retracted could only be used as evidence against that accused alone and that it should not be taken into consideration as against any of the other accused, and then he proceeded to refer to the evidence of an approver and warned the jury to see whether the evidence of the approver was corroborated by the evidence of independent and reliable witnesses, but the Sessions Judge did not repeat the same remark when dealing with the individual cases of the accused, held that there was no misdirection. Having once given a fair summary of the evidence, it was not to be expected that he would go on repeating what he had already said in a previous part of the charge, when he was dealing with the cases of the individual accused—Ayub Mandal v. Emp., 54 Cal. 539, 28 Cr L J. 689 (691).

(5) A Sessions Judge should caution the jury that although it is not illegal to convict the accused upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, still it is not the practice of the Court, nor safe or proper, to convict on such evidence, unless it is corroborated in material particulars. Omission to state this amounts to a misdirection—Rebat Mohan v. Emp., 56 Cal 150, 30 Cr L J 435 (439); Surya Kanta v. K. E., 24 C.W.N 119; Q. E v. Arumuga 12 Mad. 196. But another Calcutta case lays down that an uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law, although it has long been the practice for the Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Therefore, it is not a misdirection to tell the jury that a conviction upon the evidence of the approver alone will not be illegal—Emp v Jamalji, 51 Cal. 160 (163) following the judgment of Lord Reading C. J in R. v. Baskerville, [1916] 2 K.B. 658 (663); See also Ledu Molla v. Emp., 52 Cal 595, 42 C.L.J. 501, 26 Cr.L J 1037.

(6) Where there are several accused persons, and the case as against all of them does not stand on the same footing, and their defences are different, omission by the Judge to ask the jury to consider the case as against each of the accused individually, is a serious misdirection—Khijiruddin v Emp., 53 Cal 372, 42 C.L.J. 504, 27 Cr L J 266.

(7) When a charge to the jury placed prominently before them all the circumstances that went against the accused, and did not call their attention to any of those that were in favour of the accused, it was held that there was a misdirection sufficient to vitiate the trial—Rahamat Ali v. Emp., 4 C.W.N 196; Emp. v. Fakira, 40 Bom 220; Abdul Gafur v. Emp., 21 Cr L J. 670 (Cal.); Sugahgadu, 2 Weir 500 (501); Mammal Ali v. Emp., 44 C.L.J 233, 28 Cr.L J 19. Omission to make the jury acquainted with the nature of the case for the prosecution and the nature of the case for the defence is a misdirection—Afrudai v. K. E., 23 C.W.N 523, 20 Cr L J 661. But the fact that every point in favour of the accused has not been put to the jury does not amount to a misdirection.

The charge must be judged as a whole and one must see whether judging it as a whole the case for the two sides has been fairly put, so that the jury can understand what they have to decide and can come to a right conclusion. It is not necessary for the Sessions Judge to repeat everything that has been said by the pleader for the defence in his speech. But he should draw the attention of the jury to the more essential items and the strongest argument that has been advanced for the defence. A mere reference to the argument of the pleader is insufficient—Haricharan v. Emp., 34 C.L.J. 512; Abdul Salim v. Emp., 49 Cal. 573. The fact that the address of the defence counsel to the jury is a lengthy one does not excuse the Judge from pointing out important points of the defence argument to the jury—Pearry v. Emp., 20 C.W.N. 436 (F.B.). A verdict obtained from the jury without placing before them an important piece of evidence in favour of the defence, whatever may have been its real worth, cannot be sustained—Khijiruddin v. Emp., 53 Cal. 372, 42 C.L.J. 504, 27 Cr.L.J. 266.

(8) A Judge's direction to the jury to consider the proof of previous conviction as evidence giving rise to an inference regarding the character of the prisoner amounts to a misdirection—Roshan v. Emp., 5 Cal. 768. See section 310. So also, the omission on the part of the Judge to warn the jury not to take the previous conviction into consideration when deciding on the guilt of the accused, amounts to a misdirection—Harī Charan v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 398 (Cal.).

(9) Omission to tell the jury that if they entertain any reasonable doubt about the guilt of the accused, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt and should be acquitted is a serious misdirection—Panchu Das v. Emp., 34 Cal. 698; Sugahgadu, 2 Weir 500 (501).

(10) Where the Judge stated in his charge to the jury that there was a mass of oral evidence on behalf of the prosecution as well as for the defence, but that the jury might neglect it all, it was held that this was a misdirection, because it is the duty of the jury to give their verdict upon considering the whole of the evidence—Emp v. Mira, 6 Bom.L.R. 31.

(11) Omission to invite the jury to consider carefully what each of the accused said in his statement with reference to the charges framed against him, is a misdirection—Hemanta v. Emp., 47 Cal. 46.

(12) The Sessions Judge is guilty of misdirection where he has failed to draw pointed attention to the fact that the jury have to rely upon the testimony of an absent witness, and where evidence which ought not to have been allowed to be given has been improperly admitted under sec 33 of the Evidence Act—Annari Muthriyan v. Emp., 39 Mad. 449, 16 Cr.L.J. 204.

(13) Where in a case of theft, the evidence against the accused was the possession of stolen property 5 years after the occurrence, it was held that the Judge had misdirected the jury by saying: "On this evidence notwithstanding that it is nearly 5 years since the crime occurred, will decide whether you are satisfied with the prisoner's explanation."

his possession of the stolen property." The proper course would be to tell them to consider whether after 5 years it was reasonable to require the prisoner to prove how he came by the goods or whether his story, not being in itself improbable, ought not to be accepted—Ruthanvithil, 2 Weir 489.

(14) Omission to point out to the jury the discrepancies in the evidence of the principal witnesses for the prosecution constitutes a misdirection—Tenaram v. K. E., 33 C.L.J. 180, 22 Cr.L.J. 475; Emp. v. Durga Charan, 26 C.W.N. 1002, 23 Cr.L.J. 567. Merely telling the jury that there are material discrepancies in the evidence, without pointing out to them what those discrepancies are, amounts to a misdirection—Enayet Husain v. Emp., 49 All. 209, 28 Cr.L.J. 15.

(15) Where a number of persons who could have given important information were not examined as witnesses for the Crown, the Judge should point out this fact to the jury and direct them that an adverse inference should be drawn against the prosecution. His omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Md. Yunus v. Emp., 50 Cal. 318 (326); Tenaram v. K. E., 33 C.L.J. 180, 22 Cr.L.J. 475; Emp. v. Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121; Tajall v. Emp., 7 Pat. 50, 28 Cr.L.J. 843 (844).

(16) Failure on the part of the Court to put clearly before the jury the law relating to the right of private defence arising on the admitted and proved facts and to direct their attention to find as to whether the accused was, and if so, how far, justified in preventing injury to himself in attacking his opponent, is a serious misdirection vitiating the trial—Aseruddin v. Emp., 53 Cal. 930, 28 Cr.L.J. 273. Where the accused raised the plea of private defence, and the case for the prosecution was that there was no right of private defence at all, the Judge should simply tell the jury that the question they had to decide was whether or not the right of private defence came into existence and not how far it extended or whether it was exceeded. Moreover, in dealing with the law as to the right of private defence, there are several important points the omission of which would amount to a serious misdirection. Thus, in a murder case, in which the right of private defence is set up, the Judge in explaining sec. 100 I. P. C. which contains a list of six heads of offences, should point out those heads which would and those which would not apply to the case they were trying; otherwise the jury would naturally disregard those to which their attention was not specially directed by the Judge. Further, in explaining the law as to private defence the Judge should also explain to the jury the provisions of section 101 I. P. C. in a case where there is a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder as well as the minor charge of causing grievous hurt. The omission on the part of the Judge to explain these points amounts to a misdirection—Muhammad Yunus v. Emp., 50 Cal. 318 (325, 326). On a charge under sec. 304 I. P. C. where the defence of the accused is that the deceased came into his house for robbery at midnight and that the accused inflicted wounds on him which proved fatal, the Judge should expound the law to the jury not only with reference to the right of private defence of person but also with reference to the right of private defence of property, and should direct the jury to consider whether the accused had not used more force than was necessary for preventing the deceased from running away with the stolen property. Omission to so charge the jury amounts to a misdirection—Baseruddi v. Emp., 28 C.W.N. 585, 39 C.L.J. 525.

(17) The Judge is entitled to tell the jury that when a prisoner is charged with causing hurt to another, the burden of proving that it was done in the exercise of the right of private defence lies on the prisoner—Afiruddi v. K. E., 23 C.W.N. 833, 20 Cr.L.J. 661. But when the accused has examined witnesses to prove the defence (e.g., the right of private defence) set up by him, it is no longer necessary for the Judge to refer to the law relating to burden of proof (because the accused has discharged that burden), the Judge should simply ask the jury to decide the question of fact on the evidence before them. If in such a case the Judge refers to the provisions of section 105 of the Evidence Act, it would mislead the jury and lead them to think that the defence set up by the accused would require a higher standard of proof. This is clearly a misdirection—Alid Yunus v. Emp., 50 Cal. 318 (325).

(18) It is a misdirection to suggest to the jury that in capital cases stronger evidence of a higher degree of certainty is required than in other criminal cases—Leg. Rem. v. Lalit Mohan, 49 Cal. 167.

(19) Omission to warn the jury to pay no attention to the previous proceedings amounts to a misdirection—Mir Mowz v. K. E., 31 C.L.J. 305, 21 Cr.L.J. 554, 58 I.C. 858.

(20) Where one of the witnesses for the prosecution is himself suspected of being implicated in the offence, the jury should be directed not to accept his evidence without the most careful scrutiny. Omission to give such a direction amounts to a serious misdirection—Satya Charan v. Emp., 52 Cal. 223, 26 Cr.L.J. 1155.

(21) The question as to whether the accused was under 12 years of age and incapable of understanding the nature of his act is one for the jury to decide, notwithstanding no proof may have been adduced on the point; and if the Judge attempts to exclude the consideration of the question from the jury by saying that they should leave that question out of account altogether, it amounts to a misdirection—Emp. v. Ali Raza, 28 O.C. 69, 26 Cr.L.J. 310.

(22) Where the witnesses who had made certain statements before the committing Magistrate retracted those statements at the trial, the Sessions Judge ought to tell the jury that the witnesses should be looked upon with suspicion and that their evidence should be regarded with great caution, and the Judge ought to ask the jury to decide for themselves as to which of the two versions is correct. If instead of doing so, the Judge expresses his opinion with a certain degree of assertion to the effect that the statements made before the committing Magistrate are true and that the depositions given before him are false, his charge to the jury is vitiated by misdirection—Abdul Gani v. K. E., 53 Cal. 182, 42 C.L.J. 205, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577.

(23) Where a Judge repeatedly tells the jury that if they are morally convinced of the guilt of the accused, their verdict should be that of guilty, it amounts to a misdirection. The jury has to return a verdict of guilty not upon their moral belief of a case but upon the legal proof of the facts constituting the offence—Enayet v. Emp., 49 All. 209, 28 Cr.L.J. 15.

(24) It is a misdirection not to explain to the jury the difference between a crime and a civil wrong (e.g. the distinction between a civil and a criminal trespass)—K. E. v. Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662, 15 Cr L J 155.

916. Effect of misdirection :—A misdirection does not justify a reversal of the verdict of the jury unless the misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice—Legal Remembrancer v. Shyam Sundar, 26 C.W.N. 558, Ramdas v. Emp., 8 Pat. 344, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (723). Unless the misdirection is material, the conviction will not be disturbed in appeal—In re Mullimayandi, 45 M.L.J. 845, Wafadar v. K. E., 21 Cal. 955. The High Court will not set aside a verdict where it is not erroneous in spite of the misdirection—Emp. v. Namaddi, 22 C.W.N. 572; Wafadar v. K. E., 21 Cal. 955. See Note 1151.

But if the misdirection is of a serious character, e.g. where there is a grave omission on the part of the trial Judge to direct the jury on an important point, it will justify a reversal of the conviction; such a misdirection cannot be made good merely by counsel's calling attention to it at the termination of the summing up—Padam Prasad v. K. E., 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1141) (S.B.), 50 C.L.J. 106, 30 Cr L J 993.

917. Non-direction :—Mere non-direction is not necessarily misdirection, those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood—Eknath v. K. E., 1 P.L.J. 317, 17 Cr. L.J. 353, Abrath v. N. W. Ry. Co., (1886) L.R. 11 A.C. 247; R. v. Stodder, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 712; K. E. v. Barendra, 28 C.W.N. 170 (109); Emp. v. Fateh Chand, 44 Cal. 477. A non-direction is not a misdirection unless the jury has been misled or unless the non-direction is of primary importance—Champa v. Emp., 29 Cr L J. 325 (333) (Pat.). It is only when the non-direction is such that there are grounds for thinking that the jury by reason of it may have been put on the wrong track and made to arrive at a wrong conclusion that such non-direction can amount to a misdirection—Bajul Mian v. Emp., 6 Pat. 817, 29 Cr.L.J. 81 (83). In a charge of unlawful assembly, the omission to explain clearly to the jury the alleged common object of the unlawful assembly is not a misdirection but a mere non-direction which will not justify the verdict being set aside, if the prisoner was not prejudiced thereby—Rahamat-Ali v. Emp., 4 C.W.N. 196, Abdul Sheik v. Emp., 17 Cr L J 92 (Cal.). Failure to point out to the jury the weakness of the evidence against the accused and the possibility of the offence having been committed by another is not a positive misdirection, but merely a non-direction—Q. v. Choonee, 5 W.R. 13. Omission to call the attention of the jury to the evidence of defence witnesses whom the High Court considered to be untrustworthy is a mere non-direction and not a misdirection—Emp v. Rochia, 7 Cal. 42. Omission to enter into details concerning the identification of stolen articles is not a mis-direction—Q. v. Madhul Mal, 1 W.R. 22.

Duty of Judge. 298. (1) In such cases it is the duty of the Judge—

- (a) to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, and especially all questions as to the relevancy of facts which it is proposed to prove and the admissibility of evidence or the propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties; and in his discretion, to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties;
- (b) to decide upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial;
- (c) to decide upon all matters of fact which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given;
- (d) to decide whether any question which arises is for himself or for the jury, and upon this point his decision shall bind the jurors.

(2) The Judge may, if he thinks proper, in the course of his summing up, express to the jury his opinion upon any question of fact, or upon any question of mixed law and fact, relevant to the proceeding.

Illustrations.

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement made by a person not being a witness in the case on the ground that circumstances are proved which render evidence of such statement admissible.

It is for the Judge, and not for the jury, to decide whether the existence of those circumstances has been proved.

(b) It is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed.

It is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed.

(20) Where a Judge repeatedly tells the jury that if they are morally convinced of the guilt of the accused, their verdict should be that of guilt, it amounts to a misdirection. The jury has to return a verdict of guilty not upon their moral belief of a case but upon the legal proof of the facts constituting the offence—Fravel v. Emp., 41 All 200, 25 Cr.L.J. 15.

(21) It is a misdirection not to explain to the jury the difference between a crime and a civil wrong (e.g. the distinction between a civil and a criminal trespass)—K. E. v. Madan Mandal, 41 Cal 662, 15 Cr.L.J. 155.

916. Effect of misdirection—A misdirection does not justify a reversal of the verdict of the jury unless the misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice—Legal Remembrancer v. Shivam Sundar, 26 C.W.N. 558, Ramdas v. Emp., 8 Pat. 344, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (723). Unless the misdirection is material, the conviction will not be disturbed in appeal—In re Mullurajandi, 45 M.L.J. 845; Wafadar v. K. E., 21 Cal 955. The High Court will not set aside a verdict where it is not erroneous in spite of the misdirection—Emp. v. Nairnaddi, 22 C.W.N. 572; Wafadar v. K. E., 21 Cal. 955. See Note 1151.

But if the misdirection is of a serious character, e.g. where there is a grave omission on the part of the trial Judge to direct the jury on an important point, it will justify a reversal of the conviction, such a misdirection cannot be made good merely by counsel's calling attention to it at the termination of the summing up—Padam Prasad v. K. E., 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1141) (S.D.), 50 C.L.J. 106, 30 Cr.L.J. 993.

917. Non-direction:—Mere non-direction is not necessarily misdirection, those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood—Elnath v. K. E., 1 P.L.J. 317, 17 Cr.L.J. 353; Abrath v. N. W. Ry. Co., (1886) L.R. 11 A.C. 247; R. v. Stodder, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 712; K. E. v. Barendra, 28 C.W.N. 170 (199); Emp. v. Fatch Chand, 44 Cal 477. A non-direction is not a misdirection unless the jury has been misled or unless the non-direction is of primary importance—Champa v. Emp., 29 Cr.L.J. 325 (333) (Pat.). It is only when the non-direction is such that there are grounds for thinking that the jury by reason of it may have been put on the wrong track and made to arrive at a wrong conclusion that such non-direction can amount to a misdirection—Bajit Mian v. Emp., 6 Pat. 817, 29 Cr.L.J. 81 (83). In a charge of unlawful assembly, the omission to explain clearly to the jury the alleged common object of the unlawful assembly is not a misdirection but a mere non-direction which will not justify the verdict being set aside, if the prisoner was not prejudiced thereby—Rahamat-Ali v. Emp., 4 C.W.N. 196, Abdul Sheik v. Emp., 17 Cr.L.J. 92 (Cal.). Failure to point out to the jury the weakness of the evidence against the accused and the possibility of the offence having been committed by another is not a positive misdirection, but merely a non-direction—Q. v. Choonee, 5 W.R. 13. Omission to call the attention of the jury to the evidence of

by the Judge. It is the duty of the Judge to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the evidence confirming or corroborating the accomplice's story which do or do not fulfil the requirements of the rule of law that an approver's evidence must be corroborated in material particulars and must be such as to connect the accused with the crime. But the Judge must not tell the jury that such or such witness does in fact corroborate the accused. That is the function of the jury and depends upon whether they believe the witness or not—Rebati Mohan v. Emp., 56 Cal 150, 32 C.W.N. 945, 30 Cr.L.J. 435 (438, 439). Though an omission to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the corroborative evidence which amount to corroborative evidence in law would only be a non-direction, it is a misdirection if the Judge points out to the jury certain portions of the evidence as fulfilling the requirements above stated, when in fact they do not do so—Rebati Mohan, supra.

Where the counsel for the prosecution in his opening address referred to a complaint preferred against the accused on an earlier occasion, and it had no bearing on the present case except to show that the accused was a man of immoral character, and it appeared that the complaint had not been formally proved in the earlier case, the Judge should caution the jury that the contents of the complaint are not relevant to the matter in issue before them and they should pay no attention to the contents of the complaint. His omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Padam Prasad v. Emp., 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1141) (S.B.), 50 C.L.J. 106, 30 Cr.L.J. 993, 1929 Cr.C. 228.

Confessions:—It is for the Judge to decide whether the statements or confessions made to the Magistrate and how much of the confessions made to the police are admissible; leaving it to the jury to decide amounts to a misdirection—Amiruddin v. K. E., 45 Cal. 557. Omission to mention to the jury that a confession made by the accused to the police-officer is inadmissible in evidence is a misdirection—Someshwar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 101, 23 Cr.L.J. 91. The Judge must decide whether the confessions are voluntarily made or caused by inducement, threat or promise. It is not for the jury to decide. But once the confessions are admitted in evidence it is for the jury to determine the weight to be attached to them and whether they are true or false—Khira Mandal v. K. E., 33 C.W.N. 1112 (1113), 1929 Cr.C. 362; Emp. v. Kesari, 11 Bom. L.R. 332, 2 I.C. 517, 10 Cr.L.J. 65. But the Judge should charge the jury that the mere confessions of prisoners tried simultaneously with the accused for the same offence, which are in a very qualified manner made operative as evidence by sec. 30 of the Evidence Act, ought to be valued merely as accomplice's testimony, and to be treated as evidence of a peculiarly infirm and defective character requiring careful scrutiny before it can be safely relied on—Q. v. Ramdoyal, 21 W.R. 47. Where a Judge admitted in evidence a confession made before a Police Officer and directed the jury that the confession could and should be used not merely against the maker but also against his co-accused, it was a misdirection—Amiruddin v. K. E., 45 Cal. 557.

As regards retracted confessions, see Note 915, no. (4) under sec. 297.

920. Inadmissible evidence:—It is the duty of the Judge to see that evidence which is not admissible in itself should not be allowed to go in, to the prejudice of the accused—Abbey v. Q. E., 25 Cal 736. It is the duty of the Judge to interpose and see that no improper use of the law is made against the accused and that no improper evidence is given to the jury—Padam Prasad v. K. E., 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1141) (S.B.), 50 C.L.J. 106; R. v. Wakefield, (1799) 27 St. T. 670. Where a document, which is not per se admissible, is admitted by the Court, and the accused having sufficient opportunity at the trial omits to take any objection, he cannot afterwards in appeal impeach the verdict of the jury on the ground that the document had been admitted without formal proof. But it is competent to the High Court to consider whether, after excluding the evidence wrongly admitted, the rest of the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict—Ram Bhagwan v. Emp., 10 Cr.L.J. 866 (Pat). Where during the trial before a jury the Public Prosecutor read an alleged confession of the accused which not being recorded according to law was inadmissible in evidence, held that the irregularity of allowing it to be read might have influenced the minds of the jury, however carefully the Judge might have endeavoured to remove any impression caused thereby, and that the accused was entitled to a retrial—Damodar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 52, 23 Cr.L.J. 141.

If inadmissible evidence has been admitted by the Judge, the High Court will consider whether the evidence improperly admitted is of such a nature that it possibly may have considerably influenced the minds of the jury, and whether it is reasonably certain that the jury would have acted on the unobjectionable evidence if the wrongly admitted evidence had not also been presented to them—Padam Prasad v. K. E., 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1140) (S.B.), 50 C.L.J. 106, 30 Cr.L.J. 993.

Meaning and construction of document.—The Judge must explain to the jury the legal construction to be put upon a document and its legal effect and bearing—Q. v. Setul, 3 W.R. 69. If there appears to be a palpable blot or alteration on the face of a document, the Judge has every right to draw the attention of the jury to it—Q. v. Kissoree, 17 W.R. 58.

921. Clause (c):—It is the duty of the Judge to decide upon all matters which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given. Thus, if it is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed, it is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed—Q. E. v. Lalsingh, Ratanlal 452. Where the accused made one confession before the committing Magistrate, and another confession before the Court of Session, retracting the previous confession, and alleged that he was beaten by the Police and the previous confession was caused by inducement offered by the Police, it was held that the Judge ought to decide whether the first confession was induced by illegal promise and whether that inducement still existed or had been effectually dispelled when the Magistrate recorded the confession—Q. E. v. Rupya, Ratanlal 245.

922. Expression of opinion by Judge :—Though it is open to a Judge to express his opinion to the jury on any matter of fact, still the Judge ought to refrain from expressing any decided opinion on matters of fact in unmistakable terms, because the decision of the questions of fact is left entirely for the jury—Bharut Chunder, 1 W.R. 2; Q. v Gunga, 1 W R 25, Rahamat Ali v Emp., 4 C.W.N. 196 The Judge in his charge to the jury ought not to express his own opinion in terms too dogmatic and unqualified, even though he informs them that they are not bound by any opinion of his—Ofel Molla v. K. E., 18 C W N 180, 15 Cr L J 147, Tajali Mian v Emp., 7 Pat. 50, 28 Cr.L.J. 843 (814), Topandas v Emp., 25 Cr L J 761 (Sind). The Judge should be careful to express his opinion in such a way as not in any way to interfere with the duties of the jury to finally decide according to their own view of the facts—Fazaruddin v K. E., 42 C.L.J. 111, 26 Cr.L.J. 1553 The Judge should not impress his own opinion indelibly on the mind of the jury and thus give them no option but to arrive at a decision which he himself arrived at—Khjuruddin v. Emp., 53 Cal. 372, 42 C.L.J. 504, 27 Cr L J 266, Naibulla v Emp., 43 C L J 488, 27 Cr L J. 1038. He should present the facts in their natural aspect and ought to leave the jury to decide the facts for themselves, and he must not suggest far-fetched explanations of points that tell in favour of or against either party—Kizhakedath Unniram, 2 Weir 386; In re Subbu Tevan, 14 M L T. 442, 14 Cr L J 628 If he expresses any opinion, he should also add that it is his own opinion which is not binding on the jury and that the jury is at liberty to draw their own conclusions—Larmana, 2 Weir 385 (386), Q E v Bepin, 10 Cal. 970; Topandas v Emp., 25 Cr.L J 761 (Sind), Panchu Das v Emp., 34 Cal 698; Natabar v. Emp., 35 Cal. 531.
